BASE BALL.

THE CRESCENTS VS UNIONS OF NEW BRUNSWICK.

The Crack Teams of Our Neighboring Town Gets Not Even a Game.

The Crescents concluded the month of May with the annihilation of the Unions. The score, 9 to 0, tells the tale. The whole month was a season of victories. The corpses who were slayed they have sought weak clubs to bleed with, are silent, and the conviction is forced upon them, that the managers of the Crescent League have placed in the field a team rare to be met with in a suburban city.

Below is the score in detail:

Census Enumerators' Orders.

The following important order to census enumerators has been issued by Supervisor Peters of the First District of this State, in which this county is included:

In case any person refuses to answer the questions on the population schedule relating to physical and mental disabilities (22 and 23,) or the questions relative to farms, homes and mortgages (26 to 30 inclusive,) you will enter in the proper words "refused to answer." No further action will be necessary on your part; all legal proceedings will be instituted by the Washington office through the Department of Justice.

An Appropriate Spot for It.

Patriotic citizens of Bound Brook are arranging for a notable celebration on the Fourth of July on Washington's old camp ground, amid the heights back of the town. A committee consisting of George LaMonte, Rev. J. T. Schock, J. I. Livingston, A. S. Grist, Col. C. W. Thomas, George M. Le Van, Rufus Schenck, Wm. Willis, Henry Ayres, Frank Somers and A. R. Libbey are making elaborate preparations for the event. R. H. Brokaw and R. A. Ross have charge of the finances. A permanent Camp-Ground and Revolution Society is to be organized by the committee.

Werrenville to Raise a Flag.

Some time ago the Youth's Companion offered an American flag as a prize to any school which would send the best composition on some subject. A little girl in Miss Mamie O'Connor's school at Warrenville won the trophy and it will be raised on Wednesday, June 11th. Mr. William A. Coddington of the city will make the address on that occasion.

A Receiver Put in Charge.

Vice-Chancellor Van Fleet Friday appointed James J. Berger, of Somerville, Receiver for the Heating, Car-Heating and Ventilating Company, of Bound Brook, on the application of Edward T. Lansing. The company owes $1,660 to its employees and $700 to the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company.

A Promising Young Man.

It is said that a young man living on West Third street, became intoxicated Saturday night and went home and "amused" himself by beating his mother. The father interfered and the young ruffian then turned on him and had him unmercifully. The brute should have been arrested.

W. C. T. U. Notes.

The regular monthly meeting of the W. C. T. U. has been postponed from to-morrow to next week Tuesday at three p. m., at No. 73 West Front street.

The meeting to-morrow will be a special prayer meeting at the same time and place.

The Enumerator's Appointed for North Plainfield.

Messrs. H. S. Schenck and David French have been appointed enumerators for North Plainfield. Mr. French for the first district and Mr. Schenck for the second district.

To Buy Steam Fire Engines.

Bound Brook citizens, weary of the constant losses caused by their inefficient hand-engine fire service, will meet this evening to plan for the purchase of steam fire engines.

Runaway on Plainfield Avenue.

A horse attached to a light phaeton became frightened on Plainfield avenue at about eleven o'clock this morning, and ran away. Before it was caught it wrecked one of the front wheels of the vehicle.

—The grand officers of the State will visit Ancient Landmark Lodge, No. 3549, K. of H., of this city this evening.

CITY COURT NOTES.

Six Persons Arraigned for Drunkenness.

Barnard Engel and Charles Ramsberg of this city pleaded not guilty to thirteen counts for larceny. They were bailed for trial on June 9th.

John Green was sent to Elizabeth to board at the county's expense for 20 days. The charge against him was drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

Charles Tice was another unfortunate who spent yesterday in the station house. He was very repentant this morning and Judge Codington discharged him.

John Dorgan was arrested Saturday night for being drunk and disorderly. This morning he pleaded guilty to the charge and Judge Codington imposed an $8 fine.

Henry Archibald had also indulged in too much "Jersey lightning" and was unable to take care of himself when the police met him. He was lodged in the station house for the night and this morning Judge Coddington fined him $8.

Policeman Goss found Trenton Jack, a well-known character lying on the sidewalk on Somerset street Saturday night in a beastly state of intoxication. He arrested him and locked him up in the station house for the night. This morning he was arraigned before City Judge Codington and pleaded guilty. He was sentenced to twenty days in the county jail.

A free fight occurred on West Third street Saturday night. It is alleged that it started in a saloon where a newly-married couple were stopping. The husband became intoxicated and put his bride out of the house. The young woman's brother, it is said, went to her assistance and caused such a row that she was arrested. This morning she paid a five dollar fine imposed by City Judge Codington.

JOTTINGS.

—The usual boulevard row occurred Saturday night. Several arrests were made.

—The school children are now studying for their final examinations prior to vacation.

—The city common council will hold its regular June meeting at eight o'clock this evening.

—The census enumerators for Piscataway township are George W. Corsell and Robert L. Pierce.

—The reason for black bass fishing opened Decoration Day. Shad fishing closed on June 10th.

—There was racing on the track of the Gentleman's Driving Park on Park avenue Saturday afternoon.

—The Athletes of Westfield are making great preparations for the proper observance of the Fourth of July.

—The White Caps of this city defeated the Stars of Dunellen in a game of base ball Friday afternoon by a score of 16 to 5.

—The Westfield base ball club crossed bats with the Roselle nine Saturday afternoon and defeated them by a score of 23 to 13.

—A set of scales for weighing empty and loaded coal cars is about to be put into the Central yard, opposite the depot in Bound Brook.

—Several Italians became obstinate at Nevius' stone crusher this morning and refused to work. Order was eventually restored.

—The Exempt Firemen's Association will hold its regular monthly meeting in Firemen's Hall to-night. A full attendance is desired.

—The Street Committee elsewhere invites the citizens of Plainfield avenue to a conference respecting the macadamizing of Plainfield avenue.

—The original Actors of New York will play a game of base ball with the Crescents on the grounds in this city next Saturday afternoon.

—The wheelmen indulged in three "runs" Saturday morning and a large number attended the athletic games at Bergen Point in the afternoon.

—"Rizzina" is the latest popular fad, says a fashion authority. To "rizzle" is to loll around a bit after a hearty meal and think of nothing at all.

—Meeting for consecration and prayer, at Mrs. E. D. Poole, this evening at eight o'clock. All are invited, 23 West Third street, second door from Central avenue.

—Under a new law it will cost a non-resident $10 to hunt or fish in the State of New Jersey. He must also pay the County Clerk a license fee of $1 to secure the privilege.

—In consequence of the anniversary of the Children's Home which comes on Thursday, June 5th, the usual meeting of officers will be held in the Y. M. C. A. parlor at four o'clock Wednesday, June 4th.

—The South Plainfield Base Ball Club defeated the Johnson Base Ball Club of Plainfield Saturday by a score of 25 to 24. At the end of the eighth inning the game was called on account of darkness.

—The Bound Brook Tennis Club has reorganized for the Central New Jersey tournament season. Its officers are: President, Fred. M. Voorhees; Secretary, Edward G. Johns; Treasurer, T. G. Winsor.

—The census enumerators will begin their work to-day, and it is the duty of every good citizen to answer their questions promptly and clearly. If any of the questions appear strange or impertinent, remember this is not the fault of the enumerator, but of those who have him set forth. Don't detain the enumerator by urging or hesitating. Such a course is foolish and useless.

—The Christian Endeavor societies of this city have organized a local union, of which Rev. Asa Reed Dills, pastor of the Park avenue Baptist church has been elected president. The societies in Dunellen and New Market have been invited to join. Correspondence between the officers of the union and the societies here has not as yet developed any definite course of action, but the probabilities are that they will soon be represented in the new Plainfield organization.

FROM OVER THE STATE.

CLIPPINGS FROM EXCHAGES.

The residents of the thirteen seashore resorts which are now absolutely existing without legal charters (the court having decided them unconstitutional) are in a quandary. These boroughs, which have been in existence since 1878, hold their Spring elections in March. This year no local elections can be held unless some immediate action is taken by the lawmakers at Trenton. If the legislature does not do something soon to relieve these boroughs a loss of many thousand dollars will be incurred. Sea Isle City, Holly Beach, Anglesea, Ocean City, Avalon, Somers Point, Cape May Point and several smaller resorts are anxiously waiting to elect city officers so that ordinances can be passed authorizing improvements along the ocean front. All these places suffered severely during last September's storms by having their board walks, bulkheads and driveways washed away. Nothing can be legally done, although funds are plentiful. Many Summer visitors will be kept away by the uninviting appearance of the beach, as no improvements can be made. —Clinton Democrat.

A peculiar freak of lightning, occurred near Annandale at about four o'clock p.m. last Monday. George Henderson was driving a team past a pair of bars, when he and both animals were prostrated by lightning striking one of the bar-posts. Neither was hurt, but he was some time in recovering consciousness. The effect was the electric fluid, or the heavy crash of thunder which came with it, which stunned them, is uncertain. Mr. J. F. Sharp, who was some distance away, near his residence, says the clap of thunder was very heavy, and badly frightened the horse he was driving.

ST. JOSEPH'S CORNER STONE.

Thousands Witness the Church at Bound Brook.

Crowds of people from this city visited Bound Brook yesterday afternoon to witness the corner stone laying of St. Joseph's Catholic church in that place. The ceremony began at 2:30 o'clock and was performed by the Rt. Rev. Bishop O'Farrell of the Diocese of Trenton. A procession of priests headed by the Rev. Father O'Connell, the pastor of the church, marched over and around the foundation, the bishop blessing the edifice. The corner stone was then laid after which the bishop delivered an eloquent sermon, in which he congratulated the people of Bound Brook upon the courageous way in which they were building their new church and hoped that the good work would go on.

The Catholic Young Men's Literary Union, and delegations from the T. A. B., A. O. H. and Emerald's of this city visited Bound Brook and indulged in a short parade previous to the laying of the corner stone. They presented a fine appearance. The former society was in command of Mr. T. J. Hughes the president.

The streets around the church were crowded with spectators.

Directly to the left of the stage on which were seated the bishops and clergymen was another stage which was occupied by the church choir, under the leadership of Miss Minnie O'Connor, the organist, and Bartow's Cornet Band. Several invited guests from this city were also seated on the latter platform. The music by the choir and by the sacred selections rendered by the band were favorably commented on.

Among the priests who attended were the Rev. Father Freeman of St. Joseph's church, North Plainfield, Father Hogan of Trenton, Father Zimmer of Raritan, Father Bogaert of Somerville, Father Mulligan of New Brunswick, Father Griffen of High Bridge, Father O'Connell of Philadelphia and Father Van Mesanan of Millstone

The church will be built entirely of white stone and will be completed by April, 1891.

MRS. MANICE'S SUICIDE RECALLED.

Her Husband is Asked to Pay Her Rent Incurred While She Was in New York.

The action brought by Alfred A. Lacomb of Westfield, N. J., formerly superintendent of the Windsor flats, to recover $3,000 from Heston Manice for the support of the latter's wife, has been set for trial on June 10th by Judge Paterson of the Supreme Court of New York.

Manice was married in London on Dec. 1, 1883. He is a large landowner, and had not resided his majority when the marriage took place. His brought suit against his wife for divorce, and at once started on a tour of the Continent. Mrs. Manice, in October, 1885, traced him to New York, and reached this city a day after his arrival. He returned to London within forty-eight hours.

While Mrs. Manice was in New York she was befriended by Mr. Lacomb. The divorce suit progressed to the point of taking testimony on a commission in Chicago in regard to Mr. Manice's alleged acts of infidelity there. The night before the testimony was taken Mrs. Manice committed suicide at a small-known hotel there by shooting herself. W. H. Waring was counsel for Mr. Manice when the suit of Mr. Lincomb was brought. Mr. Waring died in February last, and the necessary legal notice to the defendant, who is in Germany, has caused delay in the trial of the suit.

THIRTY-ONE ARRAIGNED.

Among Them Two Barbers, Who Give Ball—Licenses.

Thirty-one persons were arraigned Saturday in the Union county court before Judge McCormick. Among the number were Barbers Jacob Meyer and Coarles Miller, charged with shaving customers Sunday. They pleaded not guilty, and gave $300 bail each to appear for trial.

The license application of David Morrissey, a tavern-keeper at Summit, was granted by the votes of Ley Judges Hyer and Wiley. Judge McCormick, who presided over the Court of Common Pleas, refused to vote for Morrissey's license on the ground that his place was located next door to a public school. The application for a license for John A. White of Summit, was refused by a unanimous vote of the bench.

Editor Thomas Lane, of the Summit Record who has been indicted for libel, will probably be arraigned this morning. He opposed the license granted, as above referred to.

ATTACKED BY AN EAGLE.

Captured Alive After Breaking Its Wing.

Friday, David Folsom of Mount Bethel, heard a curious noise in the woods near his house and taking his gun started out to investigate.

He had almost reached the woods when an immense eagle, harshly screaming, swooped down from a tall tree on him. It missed its aim the first swoop and before it could repeat the attack he fired breaking its wing. Even then with one wing trailing on the ground it was so fierce and savage that he could not get near it. Wishing to capture it alive he called his two brothers and by a combined attack secured it. Mr. Folsom describes the bird as a species of Rock eagle, very rare. He has placed it on exhibition at Mr. J. T. Pierson's hardware store on West Front street.

An Open Letter From Henry M. Stanley.

[By the Commercial Cable to the Herald.]

LONDON, May 16th, 1890.—The following notice was mailed last night to Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, and it have been shown the original signed copy:

Notice to the American public:

I beg decidedly to state that the only publishers in America who have any authority to publish anything whatever of mine are Messrs. Scribner's Sons and Messrs. Harper Brothers. My new and shortly forthcoming work, "In Darkest Africa," is exclusively in the hands of Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, and I cannot too emphatically condemn the conduct of the New York Herald Historical Publishing Company, who, in the name of truth and justice, put forth an advertisement headed "Stanley's Book" (as if there could be any book of mine which is made up of the most barefaced falsehoods.

The work which they announce as "Heroes of the Dark Continent," I repudiate entirely. They say it contains all my forthcoming work and a great deal more. I emphatically deny this statement.

I have simply to say once for all that these people can by no possibility published anything of mine but what they have dishonestly stolen from me, and they are thieves; and being an American citizen and therefore holding my copyright there, I shall in due time take proper measures to punish myself against such unprincipled robbery.

I am aware that several other publishers are announcing works purporting to be mine. I therefore think it high time that all my good friends in America should be on their guard, and bear in mind that my authorized work will be called "In Darkest Africa," in two volumes, and will be published only by Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons.

HENRY M. STANLEY.

Superintendent of the Northern Pacific R. R. Co., and treasurer of the Northern Pacific Express, and under such circumstances the good wishes of his many friends go with him.

—Their was a fire Saturday afternoon in the rear of Packer's Model Furniture store on Park avenue, which but for the timely discovery by Second Assistant Chief Martin, and Assistant Chief Waters and their intelligent work in extinguishing it, would have proved a very serious blaze. As it was the doors at the rear and the ceiling were somewhat blistered and scorched. The fire is said to have been caused by a boy carelessly throwing a match into a pile of excelsior. The building is protected by sprinklers by night and Plainfield with just pride as one of the most beautiful, as its proprietor is one of the most enterprising, in the State, having not far from the largest stock, and yet selling at less than New York prices. Mr. Packer having been burned out in Jersey City Heights. The whole community would, therefore, have felt special regret at the loss of such an concern, and from the general misfortune of such a man by fire.

Buddhism in Europe.

It is rather odd that in the Sorbonne, the most ancient and important theological school of France, there should be lectures on Buddhism that draw crowds of enthusiastic admirers, and that the doctrines of Buddhism are meeting with constantly increasing favor from the intellectual. The professor who gives the lecture course is M. Leon de Rosny. He says:

The current which is drawing earnest spirits in our day to the passionate study of Buddhism will grow stronger to some unsuspected extent. Ten will see within a few years, within one year, within six months, perhaps, it will absorb the whole of Europe.

I resolve daily the visits of eminent men, who come to me as Buddhist converts, practicing in secret Buddhism. One of them informed me yesterday that there are not less than 20,000 Buddhists in Paris. Not all of them accept the observances that it enjoins in daily life, but the faith is widely disseminated.

The vice president of the Academy of Medicine, Dr. Bourneville, is one of those believers, and I have just had a visit from the captain of one of our ships of war, newly returned from the China Seas, who informs me that a third part of his crew has embraced Buddhism.

In Germany, in England, in America, even, it cannot be denied that there are many avowed Buddhists. The faith has a singular fascination for minds at once meditative and imaginative. But the Buddhism that attracts intellectual, cultured individuals in Europe and America is very different from that encountered by Christian missionaries among the ignorant common people of Asia. In Buddhism pure and simple, stripped of myths and superstitions, the moral teachings are identical with those of the New Testament. The golden rule is enjoined rigidly.

Buddha ordained no priests, consecrated no temples. The priest is each individual, the temple to be kept holy and sacred to goodness and purity in his own heart. From time to time when the true faith seems smothered out by *materialism it is believed by the follow*ers of this religion that a Buddha or glorified spirit appears to lead men back. Many such Buddhas have come to men Gautama Buddha was the twenty-fifth of a long line, and he predicted that the next would be a woman.

Reincarnation is a tenet of the Buddhist faith. Beginning in the crystal or mineral, the life monad passes up through the vegetable and animal kingdoms, till at last he becomes man. Here again he must have hundreds of lives before he is fully developed to perfection, for perfection is the object of this tremendous round of experiences. Thus the same soul is born over and over again into a succession of noble or vile lives being the mathematical sum of his past incarnations. If people are unhappy *and suffer without reason, it is be*cause of a fate they brought with them from a past incarnation.

The Color Line.

The Roman Catholic Archbishop Ireland, of St. Paul, not long since preached a sermon to a colored congregation at Washington Inowkich he used this language:

A man shows a narrowness of mind and acts unworthily of his humanity by refusing any privileges to his fellow man because he is colored. Every pagan custom, every prejudice, every crime and tyranny against a fellow citizen because of color, is a stain flung on the banner of our liberty that does not belong there. It is unmanly, unworthy of existence where a man is excluded or driven to the wall merely because of color.

Whereupon The New Orleans Times-Democrat comments as follows:

We say in the name of the people of the south that these social equality sentiments are viewed with absolute disgust by the majority of white gentlemen. In this section we hold—and we say it with unswerving respect for eminent ecclesiastics—that a higher law of color than color has been fixed by nature herself to divide the two races which mainly constitute the population; and that, in attempting to do away with that color line, those who preach the equality theory are opening the way for a race amalgamation which will confound society forever, while civilization and land to a general Hayti like debauchery and barbarism.

Back and forth flows the tide of theory as to the ultimate atoms of matter. Once it was thought matter was all one substance. Then, at time went on, sixty distinct elementa were supposed to be discovered, and the number was gradually increased till none could predict where it would stop. Now chemists not a few are tending back to the old belief that all the different substances are one original, universal matter in different stages of cooling. Perhaps the next step will be to deny the existence of matter at all, along with Bishop Berkely and the mind cure people.

Alligator skin has become so fashionable that the huge, unwieldy saurian threatens to follow the buffalo and become exterminated. But note on what a slender thread lang everlasting things. Gators eat muskrats, and muskrats eat crops. If the alligator is exterminated the muskrat will multiply like the jack rabbit in Australia, and eat the farmer out of house and home. The police jury of Plaquemine, La., have therefore pro*hibited the killing of alligators in that* parish.

Mrs. Emily Crawford, the famous Paris correspondent of London Truth, writes to her paper of Minister and Mrs. Reid's ball: "I never was at any court ball where there was a finer blaze of jewelry."

THE CENSUS OF 1890.

The Army of Enumerators Have Started to Work.

PREPARE TO ANSWER QUESTIONS

For One of the Forty-three Thousand Interviewers Will Soon Call Upon You, and Their Questions Must Be Answered.
Other Capital News.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—The machinery for taking the census for 1890 was put in motion today all over the United States, and as it will be pushed as expeditiously as possible, Superintendent Porter anticipates early returns to his office that the work of tabulating can be entered upon and completed within a reasonable period.

All the preliminary matters have been arranged, blanks prepared, enumerators instructed as to their duties, and all that remains to be done is to collect the data, which it has been decided shall become a part of the census. It requires 43,000 men as enumerators to gather the requisite information, and each of these is either employed in a definite locality or upon some special topic. This, however, does not include the additional thousands of clerks employed in collecting and tabulating the returns made that will come back from all over the country as the result of the labors of the enumerators, so it can be seen at a glance what a large force of men it requires and the immense sum of money that must be expended to accomplish this undertaking.

Mr. Porter has accepted and confirmed the supervisors' selections of enumerators, except in a few instances where the fitness of the appointee was questioned, and, it being shown that they were incompetent, others were substituted. The same plaints in the south objection was made to the appointment of colored men, but the supervisors having full responsibility for their selections declined to yield to their discretion and declined to interfere upon that ground. It is known, however, that appointments of this kind are few.

Questions Must Be Answered.

It is not anticipated that much trouble will be experienced in obtaining answers to the questions that are to be propounded, but where refusals are met with they will be at once reported and steps taken to enforce the law. The superintendent is not given any discretion in this matter, but it is made obligatory upon him to report each and every person who fails to comply with the requirements of the law to the proper persons, who will institute a vigorous prosecution against the violators of it, and they become liable to a fine of $100.

It is thought that some trouble will be experienced in securing answers to the inquiries regarding mortgages, as well as those concerning special information in relation to disease, about which physicians have recently given opinions, and declined to furnish it. No exceptions will be made in propounding the questions, or harsh measures resorted to in enforcing the law, but where it becomes plain that the provisions of the law are intentionally being violated then the parties so offending will be called upon to take the consequences.

Assistant Chief Clerk Wardle, of Mr. Porter's office, has gone to New York city, to watch the beginning of operations there and in Brooklyn, where the population census will disclose more than two million people.

In Senate and House.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—The senate today resumed the suspended silver debate. Senators Pugh, Aldrich and Stanford are booked for long speeches, and as a great many other senators desire to be heard, no limit to the debate can be fixed. It is likely to be suspended once or twice during the week to permit the discussion of bills from the committee on appropriations.

In the house the silver bill agreed upon by the Republican caucus of the house will dissected during the week in committee of the whole. The bill will be called up probably on Wednesday and the rest of the week will be consumed in debating it. It must be definitely stated that the bill will be acted upon before the end of the week. To-morrow has been set apart for the consideration of the contested election case of McDuffie (Rep.) against Turpin (Dem.) from Alabama. The Republican majority of the elections committee has declared in favor of seating McDuffie, and there is no doubt that this will be done.

Frightful Accident to a Boy.

NEW YORK, June 2.—Benjamin, the 6-year-old son of Isaac Baumann, who lives on the third floor of the tenement house No. 273 East Third street, climbed up on a chair yesterday to give water to a bird. The chair was placed by an open window. While reaching up to the cage the boy lost his balance and fell out of the window. In his descent to the basement he struck against an iron railing which extends around the basement area. One of the iron pointed pickets passed through his left arm close to the shoulder, and as he fell the weight of his body tore the arm from its socket. The arm remained hanging to the spike, and the mangled boy fell into the areaway. His death is almost certain.

Couldn't Stand Rebuke.

NEW YORK, June 2.—Andrew Mahone, a clerk in the safe of H. B. Kirk & Co., committed suicide at his home, No. 133 West Twenty-eighth street, yesterday, by firing two shots from a 32-caliber revolver into his right temple. Young Mahone, who lives with his widowed mother, came of last week and was rebuked the next Saturday by spending his entire week's salary. When he got home yesterday his mother reproved him, and he locked himself up in his room in apparent dejection and killed himself.

Abducted by Her Father.

BROOKLYN, June 2.—Mrs. Annie Clark called at police headquarters and reported that her 4-year-old daughter Rubie had been abducted by her father, who had picked up the child while she was playing in front of the house and carried her off. The man is supposed to be the child's father, who has been separated from his wife for some time. He was arrested several months ago for trying to steal the child.

Crane has been paying attention to Mrs. Perry for some time and on Thursday she forbade him to come to her home any more. On Friday he went to Mrs. Perry's house and tried to get into the place, but Mrs. Perry saw him coming and locked the door. He kicked on the door for some time, and at last she opened it and ordered him off the premises, when he pulled a revolver and shot her. She lived until Saturday, when she died. Crane was arrested and taken to Bath to await the action of the grand jury.

SAVED FROM THE SEA.

Taken from a Sinking Bark in Midocean.

HOPE WAS NEARLY ABANDONED.

Just as the Men Were Preparing to Take to the Small Boats the Exeter City Came in Sight and They Were Transferred.

NEW YORK, June 2.—A shipwrecked crew, which had been rescued from what they had come to look upon as certain death; came into port last evening on the steamship Exeter City. The crew consisted of Capt. Jhoffermeht, First Officer J. Paulsen, Second Officer M. Knudsen and nine seamen of the Norwegian bark Louis.

When Capt. Jhoffermeht was seen last night by a reporter in the cabin of the Exeter City he was nursing a broken arm, which will serve for some time as a painful reminder of his experience on the last trip of the Louis. He said:

"The Louis was 350 tons register, about thirty years old and was owned by a corporation located at Drammen in Norway. She was fully insured in two Norwegian companies. On May 8 we left Ansdem, Norway for Quebec for ballast. For the first two days out we had fairly good weather although the sea was quite rough and ran high at times. On the morning of the 10th a hurricane was met.

The Captain's Arm Broken.

"At first the wind blew lightly, but in a short time it increased and was soon blowing at a terrific rate of speed. It continued with unabated force until the 18th, when it slightly moderated. During those days the storm was simply frightful. Heavy waves dashed over our ship, throwing her about like a cockleshell.

"On the morning of the 16th I was standing on the poop deck taking observations. Suddenly an immense wave dashed up and completely enveloped the ship, struck me and hurled me to the deck with such force to break my arm. I was taken below. By this time the water had got into the hold. Previous to this we had to house all the sails owing to the hurricane, and on the 10th, which was one of the severest days of the trip, everything was tight except the head sails, which we used to give steering way.

"The rails of the ship were under water half the time, so you can imagine how we were tossed about. We had one continuous gale, accompanied by rain, hail and sleet all the time. On the morning of the 16th the storm was at its worst, and the water was deep in the hold. All men were all working the pumps, and we had the water mill pump and two hand pumps going continuously. To make matters worse, one of the pumps became disabled, and although the men kept continually pumping the vessel out, we had, on the morning of the 19th, four and one-half feet of water in the hold.

Rescue at Hand.

"The timbers were soon wrenched by the heaving we got, and the deck was twisted and torn. At 10 o'clock on the morning of the 19th we began to prepare for leaving the ship, although we had little hope of ultimate escape. In the meantime we displayed signals of distress. While we were working the pumps in order to keep her up until we got in readiness for leaving the Exeter City sighted us and took us off."

Weiss, of the Exeter City. Shortly after 10 o'clock, he said, he sighted the signals of distress, and First Officer Burrell volunteered to go to the assistance of the vessel. The sea was running high at the time, but he got out a boat and with several seamen started for the Louis. It was a hard puff. When he got alongside, he hailed her, and found the captain below with his broken arm. Burrell signaled the Exeter City, and another boat, with Capt. Weiss, responded. It was decided to take all hands off the bark.

Transferred to the Exeter City.

The captain was lowered into the boat in a chair and taken to the steamship, and was followed by the rest of the men, who had all their belongings and the bark's books with them. The work of taking the men off was with difficulty accomplished, and after being on board the sinking vessel for two hours Mate Burrell left her, being the last man off.

Just as the last boat was leaving with the crew of the Louis the steamship Rhosina happened along and was asked to report what had occurred. In the opinion of Capt. Weiss the Louis will be sent to Nova Scotia to be repaired, but if she does go down shortly after her crew was taken off, as during the two hours he was aboard she shipped a foot of water.

The Exeter City herself had a rough trip. On the 28th she encountered a hurricane, during which she was obliged to lay to for two hours. Capt. Weiss said that the weather was the worst he had ever encountered at this season. It was so cold, he said, that overcoats had to be worn. The crew of the Louis will be sent to Norway by the Norwegian consul.

THE NEWS OF EUROPE.

The Compensation Bill in the British Parliament.

OPPOSITION TO THE MEASURE.

The Monster Meeting of Protest to Be Held in Hyde Park on Saturday Next. Other Items of General Interest from Over the Ocean.

LONDON, June 2.—Although the present session of parliament is quite well advanced the heavy work of that body is yet to be confronted, and today's sitting began to be earnest labor of clearing away the mass of legislation which has accumulated. Upwards of 300 public bills and scores of private measures have been introduced, and of these only ten have passed since the opening of the session.

There is a strong indication that the government is making in regard to the compensation bill, and only Mr. Goschen is understood to be determined to push it to the end. The Unionist newspapers now advise the government to drop the measure, and the Tory journals are advocating reconstruction and the rejection of the bill before the occurrence of the temperance mass meeting called in Hyde park next Saturday to protest against it. This movement is growing to large proportions, and the meeting promises to be one of the largest and most enthusiastic public gatherings held in London for many years.

The Warfare Against the Measure.

In addition to these signs of hot warfare against the measure there is a significant movement developing in the ranks of the government party. Several strong supporters of the government have formally intimated to the ministry that while supporting the second reading of the bill they will, if the measure is proceeded with, be obliged to offer and advocate explanatory amendments in committee. The whole tone of the representations thus made points to the abandonment of the measure as the simplest way out of the difficulty. Only the present Mr. Goschen remains obdurate, and speaks to his friends privately as if the government were determined to proceed with the bill at all hazards. In this matter the views of Mr. Goschen are at variance with those of Mr. Ritchie, who is not sanguine as to the practicability of passing the measure, after the experience gained on the licensing clauses of the local government bill. In fact Mr. Goschen stands almost alone in his faith in the prospects of the bill.

The French Fisheries Quarrel.

PARIS, June 2.—A bill has been deposited in the chamber of deputies by the ministers of finance, marine and commerce, extending the fishing bounty system until June, 1911. The preamble complains of the aggravation of the difficulties of the French fisheries by Newfoundland's restrictive legislation, and declares that the national interests will be damaged unless the present situation is maintained. Deputy Delonclé will propose an amendment that the bill ought to be framed in such language as to compel the British government to adopt an engagement between England and France.

International Congregational Council.

LONDON, June 2.—The Congregational Union of England and Wales has resolved to summon an international council of Congregationalists, to meet in London during the first half of July, 1891, and to consist of about 300 members, 100 for England, 100 for the United States of America and 100 for Wales, Ireland, Scotland and the colonies. The council is to be of a deliberative character.

Swept by a Hurricane.

SOFIA, June 2.—A hurricane swept over Sofia yesterday, completely leveling the buildings in the north part of the city and wrecking many structures in other sections. Eleven soldiers were killed and several injured. The number of civilians killed or injured is not yet ascertained. The property damage to the palaces will reach $300,000.

German Interests in Africa.

ZANZIBAR, June 2.—Advices from the French missionaries at Uganda under the date of March 6 state that Mwanga has made complete possession of the kingdom, Kalema having been defeated and routed. Dr. Peters, who has been King Mwanga's sworn friend and adviser, has secured treaties and monopolies in favor of the Germans.

Heaume the Winner.

PARIS, June 2.—The race for the Jockey club prize, run yesterday, was won by Heaume; Lorentzo was second, and Fitzroyal third. Twelve horses entered and ten ran.

Count Herbert Bismarck to Wed.

LONDON, June 2.—A dispatch to The Chronicle from Paris says Count Herbert Bismarck is engaged to marry the eldest daughter of Lady Dudley.

Knocked Out in Two Minutes.

EL PASO, TEX., June 2.—Charles Hearld, of St. Paul, and Tom Standard (colored), of this city, fought just over the New Mexico line near here early yesterday morning. Standard started with a right hander on Hearld's side and cleverly dodged two blows, but Hearld then caught him in the neck with a swinging right hand blow and knocked him silly. Standard failed to respond to the call of time, and the fight was given to Hearld. Time two minutes and ten seconds. Hearld weighed 180½ and Standard 143 pounds. Several hundred spectators went from this city by special Southern Pacific train to see the fight. Standard has a great reputation in the southwest as a hard hitter.

The Western Bakery Trust.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., June 2.—Articles of incorporation of the largest company ever organized in Indiana were filed Saturday. It is the United States Baking company, which will do a baking business in this state. The company represents a consolidation of the baking firms in western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan and Indiana. The headquarters will be located at Richmond, Ind. Each firm takes stock to the value of its plant. It is expected that the company will be able to control the baking business of the west as the New England bakers have along the Atlantic coast.

Charged with Infanticide.

ERIE, Pa., June 2.—The bodies of two babes which had been born alive were found in a grass plot on the outskirts of the city by the authorities, and circumstances led to the arrest of Mrs. William Abell, a young German woman. The evidence against the woman is so strong that she has been held for a hearing. The woman is good looking and has always borne a good reputation.

VINELAND EXCITED.

Mrs. Lockwood in Jail Charged with Attempt to Poison Her Husband.

VINELAND, N. J., June 2.—This town is greatly excited over an alleged case of poisoning. The wife of Daniel Lockwood, a well to do farmer residing on Vine road, has been arrested on the charge of trying to poison her husband, and is now in jail. She will be given a hearing today.

Mr. Lockwood's two sons, Maurice and Arthur, and his son-in-law, Mr. Cogswell, preferred the charge. They are children di his first wife, and it is claimed that they found evidence a day or two ago that their stepmother had tried to poison her husband by placing morphine in his teacup.

Lockwood discovered the powder as his wife was about to pour out a cup of tea for him. He snatched the cup away from her, took the powder out and gave it to his daughter, who took it to a physician to have it analyzed.

Mrs. Lockwood has been prostrated since her arrest and refuses to say anything to reporters except in regard to the morphia, which, she says, she procured for herself some time ago when she was suffering from la grippe. Her husband visited her yesterday in jail and there was quite a scene. He had quite a long talk with her, and when he came out he said he did not believe she tried to kill him. Mr. Lockwood has been married to this (his second) wife about a year. He is 68 and his wife is 45 years old. She came to Vineland from Virginia.

Saved by an Ex-Convict.

NEW YORK, June 2.—David Barrett, a young ex-convict, was standing on pier 37 East river almost ready to jump into the river and end his life because he could not get work. While Barrett was musing he saw little 8-year-old Charles O'Connor, who with other boys was fishing on the pier, fall into the water. Barrett jumped after the boy, and in a dangerous place, between a canalboat and the pier. He was being sucked under the boat by the current when he caught him. Barrett caught the boy's clothing with his teeth and swam with him to the end of the dock, where they were rescued. Both were taken to Gouverneur hospital. Barrett told the story of his life and how he had tried to live right since the recent death of his mother. He said he had made up his mind to starve rather than steal. He learned the iron molders' trade while serving a ten years' sentence in prison, but no one would employ him. People who knew the young man say that he has reached ten persons from drowning.

Walt Whitman's Birthday.

CAMDEN, N. J., June 2.—Walt Whitman, the poet, celebrated his seventy-first birthday Saturday by sitting helplessly in a chair in the parlor of his little cottage on Mickle street. A number of his friends and neighbors prepared a quiet little dinner to celebrate the anniversary of his birth, but the poet was not able to enjoy much of it. In the evening he was entertained at dinner by a number of his literary friends. Among the ladies and gentlemen present were Col. Ingersoll, Hon. H. C. Harned and wife, Mrs. John Harrison, Talcott Williams and Dr. Daniel Brinton, who presided. Col. Ingersoll was the principal speaker. The gray poet is growing very feeble and he feels that he will not live much longer. Dr. Buck, his biographer, spends a good deal of time with him, as do several other old friends. Poet Whitman has made his will, which is said to be a curious document. No one but himself and his old friend, Lawyer Harnett, knows its contents.

The Case Against Principal Lewis.

NEW HAVEN, June 2.—The autopsy on the body of little Emil Belanay, who was alleged to have died in consequence of being whipped by School Principal J. G. Lewis, of the Davenport avenue school, has been made. Dr. Robert Hyde, the physician representing Teacher Lewis, insists that the boy died of pneumonia and that the flogging had nothing to do with his death. Medical Examiner White will probably report today. He is reported as saying that pneumonia was perhaps the cause of the boy's death. It is not believed that Mr. Lewis will be held responsible.

The Striking Italian Laborers.

MAYS LANDING, N. J., June 2.—The striking Italians are still building the two work houses at Folsom. It is said they will be paid off today, in which event they will probably return to work to avoid arrest. The strikers are in a destitute and almost starving condition, having nothing left to eat, their supplies having been exhausted since the strike commenced, and they have no money left to buy anything more. Should an attempt be made to arrest them before payment it is thought they will make trouble for the sheriff. Public sympathy is with the Italians.

Sam Small as an Educator.

OGDEN, Utah, June 2.—The Rev. Sam Small, the noted southern evangelist, has been elected president of the Methodist university in this city. He will move his family here and make Ogden his future home. This necessitates severing his connection with the Southern Methodist conference and affiliating with the northern Methodists.

THE WAR IN KANSAS.

State Officials Determined to Fight the Original Package Decision.

TOPEKA, Kan., June 2.—The state and federal authorities have come to a clash in Kansas. Proceeding under the section of the state law defining public nuisances and forbidding the sale of liquors to minors or habitual drinkers, the county attorney named the arrest of six original package venders on Thursday, and Judge Guthrie sent them to jail and ordered the establishments closed.

The attorneys for the prisoners went before Judge Foster, of the United States court, who immediately issued writs of habeas corpus, which were served at once on the sheriff. This officer, acting under the advice of the county attorney, took advantage of the law giving a sheriff three days in which to make his return on the writs.

The prisoners were, there fore, obliged to remain in jail from Thursday until Sunday afternoon, when they were taken before Judge Foster, who released them under bond of $500 each to appear in his court.

The judge announced his intention of looking into the merits of the original package decision and the relation it bears to the state enactments, and will make a decision after sufficient examination has been made.

In the meantime the county officials say they will continue making arrests under the state law. Imprisoning offenders until the business of liquor selling is made extremely expensive and hazardous in Topeka. The county attorney denies the right of the United States court to interfere in these prosecutions. He says:

"The constitution says the states must not interfere with interstate commerce, but it does not say that liquor can be sold. These liquor stores are public nuisances. The people have a right to protect their own homes and families, and, in the absence of any statute law on the subject, they have a natural right to use force."

Sales are still being made at other places where similar official notice has not accumulated to warrant arrest. The dealers will carry the cases to the highest court.

Expert Brown on Sugar.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—Henry A. Brown, of Massachusetts, the well known sugar expert and political economist, has addressed an open letter to Senator Morrill, chairman, and to the members of the senate finance committee, taking strong grounds against the house tariff bill sugar schedule. Mr. Brown fortifies his statements with official data and facts and deductions, which he presents concisely and with great force. He shows that instead of only 8 or 10 per cent. of the sugar annually consumed in this country being produced here, as some have claimed in congress, that nearly 17 per cent. was produced in the United States last year and that the production of American sugars is rapidly increasing. Mr. Brown claims that the consumption will be very much less than human food in this country, is greater than in Great Britain, where low grade sugar is fed to cattle, and that considering the money disbursed for producing and refining sugar in this country, which equals the duty paid, sugar is cheaper here than in Great Britain. He says more than half a million wage earners depend on our sugar industries for the support of four times that number of men, women and children, making one in a quarter of a million of the negroes, who will be driven to starve or steal if the industry is destroyed. He suggests an experimental reduction of 20 per cent. of the present duty as reasonable and safe.

Says She Was Drugged and Robbed.

CHICAGO, June 2.—J. Frank Bradley, a clerk at the Saratoga hotel, was arrested and locked up on a warrant sworn out before Justice Bradwell by Mrs. Mary A. Ginn, of Harrisburg, Pa., charging him with the larceny of $600. Mrs. Ginn is well connected in Harrisburg and very wealthy. She says some weeks ago Bradley sent some sherry wine to her room, and while she was under the influence of the wine, which she believes was drugged, four drafts for $200 disappeared from her pocket book. On the 24th inst. Bradley presented these drafts at the First National bank and received the money on them. Bradley claims that he cashed the drafts for the lady but denies most emphatically that he kept the money.

Imported Citizens.

NEW YORK, June 2.—There were 1,660 immigrants landed at the large office yesterday—760 by the steamer Rhaetia, 900 by the steamer Hamburg; 748 by the steamer City of Chester, from Liverpool; 339 by the steamer Umbria, from Liverpool; 21 by the steamer Tower Hill, from London.

A Reverse Decision.

BURLINGTON, Ia., June 2.—The Hawkeye publishes an article by Judge Houston, of this city, bringing to light an interesting decision of the United States supreme court a few years ago (reported in 114 United States reports, page 622), precisely parallel in principle to the recent Iowa original package decision, in which the court reached exactly the opposite conclusion. The court then held that after the property imported from another state had reached its destination it was at once a commodity and "it had become a part of the general mass of property in the state," without having passed out of the hands of the consignee. The former decision has apparently been overlooked.

No Special Session in Nebraska.

LINCOLN, Neb., June 2.—The proclamation of Governor Thayer rescinding his call for a special session of the legislature has been made public. The governor gives as his reason the doubt existing as to the constitutionality of the laws which might be passed by the body. Added to this is the fact that many vacancies exist, and the time is too short for special elections to fill the same. The proclamation meets with general approval.

The Engineer Blown Through the Roof.

BATH, Me., June 2.—The boiler at the Greyfoot Canning work, in Vreeland, exploded. Fromm Gray, the engineer, was hurled through the roof, a distance of fifty feet, and William Thom and his brother Charles, canners, were killed. The building was badly wrecked, and two girls employed in the place were buried beneath a falling wall, but were rescued with only a few slight bruises. Three other employes were badly hurt.

Ordered to Leave the Brotherhood.

PHILADELPHIA, June 2.—The Reading Railroad company has ordered its conductors to leave the Brotherhood of Conductors or resign. This action is taken because the brotherhood, at the recent meeting in Rochester, repealed the anti-strike clause of its constitution. Superintendent Bonsand says the Reading will hereafter have no union men in its employ.

Contract Laborers "Held Up."

NEW YORK, June 2.—The contract labor inspector at the barge office prevented seven Belgian glassblowers from landing yesterday. The men all have tickets for Glassboro, N. J. They answered the inspectors' questions so glibly as to show that they had been coached by some one on the other side. Their cases will be carefully investigated.

Ex-Congressman Thompson Dead.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., June 2.—John Thompson, one of the most prominent lawyers of this city, died suddenly yesterday at his country residence at New Hamburgh. Mr. Thompson, a Democrat, represented this district in congress in 1857-8, and was one of the first trustees of Vassar college. He was 81 years of age.

A Murderous Passenger.

VINCENNES, Ind., June 2.—Thomas C. Bridge, freight conductor on the Indianapolis and Vincennes road, was fatally stabbed through the right lung by James Martin, of Brucesville, who became aggrieved at the conductor on being compelled to pay fare. Martin was brought to this city and lodged in jail.

His Neck Broken by a Single Blow.

LA PORTE, Ind., June 2.—David Reagan became involved in a quarrel in a saloon with a young countryman named William Bickie. The latter struck Reagan a powerful blow in the face which resulted in breaking his neck. Bickie fled and as soon as he realized the man was dead and is still at large.

ALL AROUND THE HOUSE.

Artistic and Dainty Fashions in Table Service and Decorations.

In regard to table service there are two sources open, which Good Housekeeping explains as follows:

Either use painted china with flowers, and with or without a scarf down the center, or colored china and little or no decoration. A rim of gold or of some deep shade may be considered in perfect taste when it harmonizes with the flowers. Those green or gold may be used with any variety of flowers because green is their background, and a line of gilt is never inharmonious. But to set a table with deep blue or richly painted china of any kind, and then profusely deck it with flowers, is to violate those canons of taste which are founded on the laws of nature. The reason is evident. Either have the flowers by themselves, or the painted pictures; together they kill each other. And that is why there is a return to the old fashioned white china, which is never out of keeping with anything in the room.

With white goes any kind of decoration. Table scarfs are still in vogue. They may be made of crimson plush, covered with open work embroidery, or rich lace, long and narrow in shape, as they have been for some time. On this, on festive occasions, set forth the dishes of preserved lemon and white—bonbons, conserves, or salted almonds in crystal, and candelabra in fancy shades. The center piece, not too high, ought to be a large mass of crimson roses or carnations relieved with greenery, and, if desired, with white flowers of the same species. At each plate should be a single rose or a cluster of carnations.

With snow white napery and a little gleaming crystal, could anything be tolerated except the transparent porcelain?

In some luxurious residence which I know in the center of the round family table always stands a huge bowl of crimson roses, which are an object of delight. The table scarf is square, wrought in an open work design with crimson silk.

Where the housekeeper has seem to plants and flowers, which she is cultivated, the decorations may be often varied. In winter the German ivy and a sprig of the rose geranium for a center piece are a delight to the eye. When dainties come set a large bowl of them upon a square of linen laid diamond wise and wrought in yellow silk. Then there are yellow roses, pink roses, white roses and crimson roses, asparagus sprays, maiden hair ferns, mosses—which may be kept all winter—the sone flowers of the nostrum, and a host of others.

It is a mistake to suppose that many flowers are needful to make a fitting show. Have a plentiful supply of greenery (which can be kept fresh by frequent changes of water, into which drop a little powdered charcoal), and half a dozen flowers inserted into its midst will make a thing of beauty as long as they last. They must never be crowded, but should be so arranged as to show their individualities.

One pretty fashion in table decoration is to insert in the center of a loose knot of green silk a cluster of flowers or a spray of lilies or of roses. The stems may be kept fresh in a bed of water concealed by the silk, which is festooned over a piece of pasteboard, through an aperture of which they pass to reach the fluid. This is a mixture of the natural and artificial to which many persons object.

Whatever scheme of color is begun should be carried out through all the details. At a carnation dinner or tea, let a carnation lie beside each plate, with or without a white flower to keep it company, but always with a green leaf or two cross ways, shades of crimped tissue paper should cover the lamps or gaslights, and tiny sticks of bread may be tied with narrow carnation ribbon.

Little Cakes with Chocolate Icing.

Take a cupful each of three eggs of sugar and flour, boil the sugar with a little water to a syrup, and in the meantime whisk the three eggs in a basin till they are quite thick, then add the sugar and beat while using till it becomes as thick as cream; next lightly mix in the flour, and, when quite smooth, flavor with essence of vanilla or anything else that is preferred, and bake for about half an hour in a flat, buttered tin. When done, turn it out on a wire sieve and let it cool for the icing. For the icing: Mix half a pound of icing sugar with a gill of water, put it on the fire, and when it begins to boil add two ounces of grated chocolate; go on stirring till it becomes of the consistency of cream.

Tomatoes with Milk Gravy.

Scald some fine tomatoes and remove the skins; put them in a dish and sprinkle over them some pepper, salt and bits of butter; let them cook on top of the stove for fifteen or twenty minutes, take them off and turn them, dredge with flour; add some more butter and milk enough to make a gravy, also a slight pinch of soda; set them back on the stove and let scald for ten minutes.

A Convenient Clothes Line Holst.

A correspondent sends to Farm and Fireside this sketch of a convenient clothes line hoist, here reproduced.

CLOTHES LINE HOIST.

The center post has a lever, which is secured by a bolt at A, and is held in position by a loose pin or bolt at B when the line is in use. By this arrangement the overforked pole is done away with. The lever is always at hand and not lying around in the way, and will keep all dogs off the stove for fifteen or twenty minutes, take them off and turn them, dredge with flour; add some more butter and milk enough to make a gravy, also a slight pinch of soda; set them back on the stove and let scald for ten minutes.

Household Hints.

Furs and woolen goods will not be troubled by moths if they are first thoroughly cleaned and then pasted up tight in paper bags.

Sprinkle borax in places infested by ants.

Egg shells crushed into small bits and shaken well in decanters three parts filled with clean water make the glass look like new.

Equal parts of ammonia and spirts of turpentine will take paint out of clothing though it be dry and hard. Saturate the spot two or three times and then wash it in soap suds.

Sweeping heavy carpets with salt will exterminate moths.

Marks on tables caused by leaving hot jugs or plates there will disappear under the soothing influence of lamp oil well rubbed in with a soft cloth, finishing with a little spirit of wine or eau de Cologne rubbed dry with another cloth.

Bukach freely dusted around the house two or three times will disgust the most obstinate of fleas.

SCIENCE AND PROGRESS.

SCIENTIFIC RECREATIONS AND ITEMS OF USEFUL KNOWLEDGE.

The Curious Phenomena of Mirage, or Fata Morgana, by Which Travelers Are So Often Deceived, Explained by Means of Diagrams.

The mirage, or fata Morgana, is a curious but common phenomena and in the Asiatic, African and American plains it is frequently observed. When the weather is warm and the ground hot the Egyptian landscape appears like a lake, and the houses seem like islands in the midst of water. The mirage is the result of evaporation; the different temperatures of the air strata cause an unequal reflection and refraction of light, which give rise to the mirage.

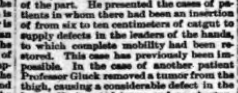

FIG. 1.—EXPLANATION OF MIRAGE.

The fata Morgana and the inverted images of ships seen at sea are not uncommon on sea coasts. Palaces, towers, plains with cattle grazing on them are seen with other terrestrial objects upon the sea. The inverted images of ships are frequently perceived and many authentic tales are told concerning the reflection and refraction of persons and objects in the sky and on the land when no beings or objects were within the range of vision. The diagrams here given help to explain this phenomenon. Suppose that the space inclosed between the letters A, B, C, D in Fig. 1 be a glass vessel filled full of water. The eye is below the horizon, the eye being situated at E—the glass vessel of course representing the atmosphere charged with moisture. The eye at E will perceive the top of the mast of the ship (1), and we may imagine a line drawn from E to 2. Then put a short focus convex lens at A just above the (imaginary) line, and it will produce one (B) just over it. Through the former an inverted ship will be seen, and an erect one through the latter at 2 and 3 respectively. We now have the effect in the air just as reproduced in nature by the differences in temperature in air strata, which cause it to act like a concave lens, when the density of the medium is greatest towards the center, and like a convex lens when it is increased.

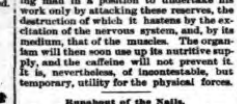

FIG. 2.—THE MIRAGE.

This can be proved by heating the air (by hot irons) above a glass vessel filled with oil, and the effect will be the same as through the lenses. Dr. Wollaston obtained the mirage by using a clear strap about one-third of the vessel full—and filling it with water. The mingling of these fluids will produce the phenomenon. The illustration Fig. 2 shows a ray of light proceeding from the ship's hull, and refracted into the line reaching the eye above the line proceeding from the mast, so the ship will appear to be inverted, as the cross at x. But if they did not cross before they reach the eye, the image would appear as at L R in an erect position.

The Sources of Platinum.

The most important sources of platinum are the hydraulic mine at Nizhne-Tagilsk, in Russian Siberia, and in the Ural mountains. Horological Review states that about 90 per cent. of the world's production comes from these sources. Next in importance are the gold washings of Choco, Pinto in the United States of Columbia, yielding about 15 per cent. of the entire production. It is also found in Brazil, Borneo, Hayti, Peru, India, Australia and in the sands of the Chandiere river in Quebec. It has recently been found in a quartz vein in New Zealand.

Paper Watches.

The European horological press is responsible for the following item: A watchmaker of Dresden, Germany, has managed to make a watch from a specially prepared paper. It appears that this substance is much easier to work than any of the metals and that the watchmaker has contrived to simplify enormously the train and to produce a movement much less susceptible to disarrangement.

Friction of the Spine in Fever.

Some observations made by Dr. Alois Fenykovy on the treatment of intermittent fever by means of friction of the back along the spine are stated in The Lancet. Many years ago, while at Nisch with his regiment, there occurred so many cases of intermittent fever that the stock of quinine was becoming exhausted, and, in order that the patients might not be entirely without some sort of treatment, it was ordered that they should be rubbed twice a day along the spine with simple ointment. The day after this order had been given it appeared that the usual attack had not come on. Accordingly since that time Dr. Fenykovy has very frequently employed this treatment, and usually with marked success. Indeed, he says that three-fourths of his cases have done very well without any quinine at all.

Blanc Mange for Invalids.

It is better, if possible, to soak the gelatine for this cream all night, because it will then dissolve in warm liquid, whereas if only slightly soaked the milk must be boiling. Warm three gills of milk or cream and dissolve it in half an ounce of gelatine previously soaked in half a cup of water. Sweeten to taste and flavor with extract of vanilla. When nearly cold stir into the blanc mange the whites of two or three eggs beaten to a strong froth. This blanc mange will be found light and nourishing.

Green Pea Soup.

Shell three pounds of young, freshly gathered peas and cook in a large saucepan. At the same time have the well washed pods boiling in a quart of water in another saucepan. At the end of half an hour strain the water off the pods into the vessel containing the peas. Add a pint of boiling milk and a pint of rich cream and one or two pilot crackers broken into bits. When the soup comes to a boil season with salt, pepper and a small lump of butter.

Court Patch and Fish Net Veils.

The court patch veil is getting popular. The patches are cut in the shape of hearts and diamonds, and one is placed at the left side of the face, and another under the chin. The fish net veil is also a good deal worn. All veils are worn down to the chin.

PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE.

Some Wonderful Achievements in Surgery—Caffeine a Temporary Stimulant.

At a recent sitting of the Surgical congress at Berlin Professor Gluck, of Berlin, gave an exhibition showing a most valuable advance in surgery—namely, the successful substitution of catgut, ivory and bone freed from chalk for defects in bones, muscles and nerve sinews. The juices of the body are sucked up in the inserted material, thereby establishing the junction of the separated ends, without any shortening of the limb. He presented the cases of patients in whom there had been an insertion of from six to ten centimeters of catgut to supply defects in the tendons of the hands, in which complete mobility had been restored. This case has previously been impossible. In the case of another patient Professor Gluck removed a tumor from the thigh, causing a considerable defect in the bone. He inserted ivory, and no shortening ensued. In another case he removed a large piece of nerve in the groin and inserted catgut, and the functions remained completely satisfactory. These are considered wonderful achievements.

The Action of Caffeine.

Professor Germain See recently gave an account of researches he had undertaken on the action of caffeine on the motor and respiratory functions in a state of inanition and in a normal state, the conclusions of which are summed up by the Paris correspondent of The Boston Medical and Surgical Journal. Among these the following are of most general interest:

Caffeine in small and repeated doses, about sixty centigrams per day, which may be prescribed with advantage to soldiers on the march, facilitates muscular work in augmenting the activity, not directly of the muscle itself, but of the motor nervous system, cerebral as well as medullary. The consequence of this double action is to diminish the sensation of effort and to avert fatigue, which constitutes a nervous and at the same time a chemical phenomenon. Caffeine prevents breathlessness and palpitations consecutive to effort, which is of great importance.

Caffeine has not, as is generally believed, the marvelous property of replacing food. It only replaces the general tonic excitation which the ingestion of food produces. If it be admitted that it is the direct and indirect consequence of the alimentation to stimulate the stomach and the nervous system, and that their alimentary value is primarily nothing, one might substitute the stimulant for another. Caffeine, far from sparing the reserves, will place a fasting man in a position to undertake his work only by attacking these reserves, the destruction of which it hastens by the excitation of the nervous system, and, by its medium, that of the muscles. The organism will then soon use up its nutritive supply, and the caffeine will not prevent it. It is, nevertheless, of incontestable, but temporary, utility for the physical forces.

Runabout of the Nails.

Runabout is a very annoying complaint. Ordinarily, it does not cause much trouble or discomfort, however, it may assume a very painful and trying character. It consists of an inflammation of the root (matrix) and skin about the nail. It may not extend beyond the root. Usually, however, it does extend so as to involve the adjacent soft parts. It may be caused by an external injury, as a bruise by a pressure upon the end of the nail, by a foreign body passed under the nail, as a splinter, or by some constitutional taint.

Medical Classics says that when the trouble is caused by injury the treatment must be conducted with reference to the degree and nature of the injury. If a splinter has gotten in, it must be removed, and the inflammation and irritation which it has caused can then be readily controlled by means of arnicated extract of hamamelis. Treatment of this physical affection is all that is necessary where the injury is from a blow, or a squeeze, from the finger nail having been caught in the door or the like. In such cases the nail and the injured nail and finger must have rest. Using the affected finger at such a time is folly and will lead to the loss of the nail.

A Simple and Effective Astringent.

"Blackberry root has been recommended as one of the simplest, most effective and least harmful remedies we have ever tried for diarrhea. Cleanse the root carefully, break it into small pieces, pour over it boiling water and let it simmer in an earthen dish. Pour off the infusion, add sugar to taste and give it to the patient as may be needed. "A remarkable property of blackberry root is that, although to the taste it displays but little stringency, it is more efficacious than other drugs, richer in tannin, to allay the irritation, and increase the costiveness which is so often experienced with the more powerful astringent medicines." In using blackberry root thus we avoid all contact with alcohol necessary where blackberry cordial is taken.

A Good Gargle for Sore Throat.

The following is recommended by Hall's Journal of Health as a good gargle for sore throat. Vinegar, one wineglassful; honey, two tablespoonfuls; water, half a tumblerful. Pour the water on to the honey and stir it up; add the vinegar and use cold.

SOCIAL ETIQUETTE.

The Obsolete Initials R. S. V. P.—Their Use Unnecessary in Nearly Every Case.

The initials R. S. V. P. are, according to very good social authority, almost obsolete. They were first used to some extent by engravers of cards they are, in nearly every case where such invitations are employed, either unnecessary or impertinent. If a man or woman sends out invitations for a dinner and appends R. S. V. P., it is unquestionably an intimation that the person receiving the invitation has not sense enough to answer it. Invitations to dinner, after all, is nothing more nor less than a personal note, and a personal note demands an immediate answer. Any well bred body who has any knowledge of good form would fail to make that answer just as prompt in circumstances permitted.

A Few Signs of Good Breeding.

A well bred woman always thanks the man who gives her a seat in the street car, and does it in a quiet and not in an effusive way.

She does not declare that she never rides in street cars.

She doesn't talk loud in public places.

She doesn't shove or push to get the best seat, and she doesn't wonder why in the world people carry children in the cars, and why they permit them to cry.

She doesn't want to be a man, and she doesn't try to imitate him by adopting masculine manners.

She doesn't say she hates women, and she has some good, lovable friends among them.

She doesn't wear boots without their buttons or a frock that needs mending.

She does not wear on the street a dress only fitted to the house or carriage.

She does not wear a torn glove, when a needle and thread and a few stitches would make it all right.

CITY COMMON COUNCIL.

THE CITY TO OWN ITS OWN FIRE HORSES.

Three More Applications for Liquor Licenses.—More Unparliamentary Railing.—Several New Ordinances Adopted.—Other Business of Importance.

The City Common Council met in regular session in the council chamber last evening. It was ten minutes past eight when President Moffett called the meeting to order and when Clerk Coward called the roll President Moffett and Councilmen Dunham, Gallup, Hetfield, Jenkins, Johnston, Newhall, Roberts, Rushmore, Smith and Spangenberg responded.

The minutes of the previous meetings (regular and special) were read and approved as corrected.

A communication from Mayor Male nominating George R. Hockenhoff as a special policeman was read and the nomination was confirmed.

Matthew Kilpatrick applied for a license to sell liquor in quantities from one quart to five gallons, at No. 79 West Sixth Street. The application was referred to the Committee on License.

Maurice F. Watson presented an application for a similar license to sell liquor in a building on South Second street. This took the same course as did also the application of August H. Kroene for a license to sell liquor on Stebbins place.

In a communication John Hickey stated that in 1874, when Plainfield avenue was widened he had been awarded $25 dollars damages for setting his fence back and requested council to pay the same. The communication was referred to the Committee on Streets.

Mary R. Loomis and others in a communication requested Council to accept as a street, the thoroughfare known as the Westervelt avenue extension. The document was referred to the Committee on Streets.

In a communication Mr. Charles H. Hand called the attention of Council to his building on West Second street and offered to sell it to the city to be used as a City Hall. The communication was referred to the Committee on Fire and Buildings.

A communication from the Secretary of the Board of Health called the attention of Council to the unsanitary condition of the New street sewer and urged that the Committee be instructed to fill up several pool holes immediately. The document was referred to the Committee on Streets.

In a communication the President of the Board of Health stated that that body had been in conference with the Borough Board in reference to the cleaning out of Green brook and asked for the appropriation of $1,500 necessary on the work. The communication was referred to the Street Committee with power.

Mr. W. F. Banks and others petitioned Council for three lights on Netherwood avenue. The petition was referred to the Committee on Public Lights with power.

A similar document from David Hand and and others for two electric lights on Denmark avenue, Netherwood, was referred to the same committee, as was also the communication for an electric light on La Grande avenue, Netherwood.

The Board of Engineers of the Fire Department presented the names of the various officers of the department recently elected. The elections were confirmed.

The monthly reports of the city collector and treasurer were presented and referred to the Finance Committee.

The quarterly report of City Judge Codington was read. It showed that for the quarter ending June 1st, 84 evil-doers had been brought before him. 63 were fined; 21 were sent to jail; 11 were discharged, and two were held for the Grand Jury. The fines collected amounted to $251.50. The report was ordered filed.

The quarterly report of the Overseer of the Poor showed that 293 orders had been issued and that 47 families were now on the rolls. The report was read and referred to the Committee on Alms.

The quarterly report of Chief Engineer Dunn was read. It stated that the department was in good working order and recommended the immediate purchase of 1,500 feet of new hose for the use of the department and that the Board of Engineers be authorized to make the necessary arrangements for the proper protection of property on the Fourth of July.

Chief Coward reported that he had received from license fees, etc., $6823 81. The report was referred to the Committee on Finance.

The name of Mr. S. H. Whitney was proposed for membership in Alert Hose Company and that of Mr. Martin Vanderweg for membership in Plainfield Engine Company No. 2. The propositions were referred to the Committee on Fire and Building and subsequently confirmed.

The applications of J. W. Stout, John Bauer, H. Newman, M. Bird, P. Lynch, L. C. Beebe, C. H. Post and others for hackmen's peddlers' and carmen's licenses were referred to the Committee on Licenses and subsequently granted.

Messrs. Edward Love and Charles P. Sebring in a communication requested that Pearl street be widened to the proper width. The matter was referred to the Street Committee.

Chancellor Roll and others offered to donate eight feet of their property on Pearce street for the purpose of widening that thoroughfare, provided Council would open the street from its present terminus to the brook, pay the necessary expense of setting back fences, relaying walks, etc., and with a further proviso that the work be completed on or before November 1st. The communication was referred to the Street Committee.

Claims were presented as follows:

V. W. Nash, $67.50; T. W. Morrison, $24.30 Times, $25 90; E. H. Holmes, $32; R. A. Meeker, $96.72; J. E. Stewart, $10.50; B. Pugsley, $10; Marvin Safe Co., $60; J. R. Cooney, $63; Flanagan, $60; W. H. Mattox, $12.60; J. H. Wilson, $160 92; Wm. Hand, $21; Jas. Brennan, $64.55; F. W. Bird, $11.

The poor claims were presented and ordered paid.

Mr. Newhall from the Committee appointed two months ago to act with the Committee of citizens in conferring with the Railroad Company in reward to removing the freight house reported that the Committee had as yet been unable to accomplish who comprised the Citizens Committee and asked that the committee's instructions be changed or that the committee be discharged.

On motion the Committee were instructed to confer directly with the Railroad Company, if after consultation they thought it best.

Mr. Newhall offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Water Board be authorized to procure an analysis of the water to be used by the Water Company in addition to and submit the same to the State Board of Health. It was so ordered.

The monthly report of Engineer Hering stated that fourteen wells had been completed and the fifty hydrants located. The report was referred to the Water Board.

The Fire and Building Committee recommended that 1500 feet of hose for the use of the Fire department be purchased, also that the Board of Engineers be instructed to make the necessary arrangements for the protection of property on the Fourth of July. It was so ordered.

The request of James McGinley to add another story to his house at the corner of Third and Church street was granted.

The Police Committee reported all claims correct, with the exception of Mr. W. H. Sebring's. They reported that that claim had not been sworn to.

The Street Committee, through their chairman reported that the work of putting the New Market in proper condition was already under way. Also that Kensington avenue was not in a proper condition to be accepted as a street by the city.

Mr. Smith offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of three, including the Chief Engineer, be appointed to purchase five horses to be used on the streets, and by the fire department.

Mr. Rushmore asked for reasons why the Council should take that step.

Mr. Smith replied that by so doing the city would save money and get good service.

Mr. Rushmore asked whether there was any limit to the sum to be expended.

Mr. Smith amended the resolution so as to read that the price shall not exceed $1,000.

Mr. Newhall thought it would be wise for the Council to continue as they were for a while until they saw what they would need in the future and he thought it better to delay the purchase of horses for the present as such an outlay would overrun the appropriation set aside for the use of the Fire department.

Mr. Hetfield said that if the whole amount was to come from the fire department fund he would be against the resolution, considering he said "the Street Department will derive more benefit from the horses than the fire department and I think that one-half of the cost should come out of that fund."

Mr. Smith said that the city would save $2,400 at the present calculation, and that there would not be any additional running expense to the city.

Mr. Jenkins asked "How the city was to save anything by purchasing horses? Are we also to purchase harness and carriages so that the various committees can take pleasure drives?"

Mr. Smith replied, "That they are now paying $4 per day for the use of a team and driver on the streets and they could keep the horses for about 65 cents per day."

Mr. Gallup thought it would be a good idea to put hese horses as it would save money for the city.

Mr. Dunham thought it would be better to refer the matter to a Committee and have them report it back to Council.

Mr. Rushmore saw no harm in the city authorizing the expenditure of that amount as an experiment.

Mr. Hetfield amended the resolution so as to read that one-half of the expense should be taken from the Fire Department fund and one-half from the Street fund.

Mr. Smith said there would be an additional expense in the purchase of carts, harness, etc.

Mr. Newhall—"I thought so, and that is the reason why I will vote against the resolution until I know just how much money is required. I do not care to vote to expend $1,000 now for the purchase of horses and at another meeting vote away another $1,000 for the purchase of carts, wagons, harness, etc.

A vote was then taken which resulted as follows:

Ayes—Gallup, Hetfield, Moffett, Roberts, Rushmore, Smith and Spangenberg.

Nays—Dunham, Jenkins, Johnston and Newhall.

In voting in the negative Mr. Newhall explained his vote as follows: "I vote against the resolution because I am not in possession of sufficient information to warrant me voting for it. I would probably vote in the affirmative later.

Mr. Smith then offered another resolution to the effect that the same committee be authorized to purchase wagons and harness for use on the streets the cost not to exceed $800.

Mr. Dunham asked for the privilege of changing his vote on the former resolution from no to aye.

A motion was made to grant him that privilege.

Mr. Newhall asked whether the motion was in order. Continuing he said: "No authority allows a change of vote after the vote has been announced by the president."

Mr. Dunham, however, thought that a Councilman could change his vote at the present or next meeting.

Mr. Newhall—"He could ask to have the vote reconsidered, providing he had voted in favor of the resolution."

Mr. Moffett—"I shall allow the gentleman to change his vote."

Mr. Newhall, addressing the president, "will you be kind enough at this or the next meeting, to give us some authority under which you make such rulings. When the rules of order do not cover the question we have heretofore been accustomed to refer to Cushion's manual."

Mr. Moffett—"When there is a motion to reconsider at some meeting then I will do so. Not otherwise."

Mr. Johnston was also given the privilege of changing his vote on the former resolution.

The resolution authorizing the committee to purchase carts, harness, etc., was then adopted, all voting aye.

Mr. Smith offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Street Commissioner have all bills for work on the streets made out on the fifteenth of each month and after they have been audited by the City Clerk that warrants be drawn for the various amounts.

Mr. Newhall asked whether or not the mover of the resolution had looked up the law on the subject.

Mr. Smith said that he had not.

Mr. Dunham asked the clerk to read rule 33.

After hearing the purport of that rule the president declared the motion out of order.

Mr. Dunham moved that the city treasurer be authorized to borrow $500 from the general fund for the use of the poor fund, as a loan. The motion was carried.

Mr. Spangenberg offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That ex-Chief Carey at the next meeting of Council give an itemized account of the moneys expended by him in detecting illegal liquor sellers and that he be instructed to turn the same over to Captain Grant.

It was so ordered.

Mr. Hetfield moved that the janitors of Nos. 1 and No. 2 Engine houses receive the sum of ten dollars per month for their services. It was so ordered.

The ordinance called up for final passage the ordinances which had been read for the second time.

The ordinance relating to the duties of the City Physician was adopted on its third reading as were also the ordinances repealing certain ordinances and the ordinances in reference to the opening of Orchard place.

The ordinance in reference to sidewalks was referred back for further consideration by a vote of 8 to 3.

Mr. Hetfield moved that the Board be requested to report to Council where they propose to lay the twenty-five miles of pipe.

Mr. Newhall said he thought that the Water Company and Council should work together in the matter.

Mr. Hetfield withdrew his motion and turned over the map locating the hydraints to the Water Board.

President Moffett appointed as the Committee to purchase horses: Councilmen Smith, Hetfield, Roberts and Chief Engineer Dunn.

Mr. Newhall reported back to Council the two maps, one on which the location of the hydrants was marked and the other on which the route of the 22 3-10 miles of pipe was laided out and in connection therewith offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Water Board, the City Engineer and the Chief Engineer be authorized to employ the Water Company in behalf of the city, in reference to the location of hydrants.

It was so ordered.

The ordinance to change Belvidere avenue was referred back for correction.

The Auditing Committee reported the various claims as correct and they were ordered paid.

The Council adjourned at 10:50.

CARNEY BROTHERS FAIL

EX-JUDGE WM. M STILLMAN THEIR ASSIGNEE.

Taking an Inventory to Find Out How They Stand.—The Firm One of Justice Hardy's Victims.

Elsewhere is the notice of the assignment of the firm of Carney Brothers, plumbers, No. 9 Somerset street, for the benefit of their creditors. The firm has been in business for about eleven years, but during the past few years has met with a series of misfortunes which have finally crippled it, the last straw being the recent action of Justice Hardy, a creditor for some $950, the firm being one of his victims. The members of the firm are very well and favorably known, and no doubt the creditors satisfied that the firm was not trying to defraud them, as is the case in too many instances of this character, will do all they can to help them out of their misfortune

People generally wish to help honest merchants. They ought to combine, however, in self-protection against cheats, so as to make that sort of business as unprofitable as possible, and weed out such people from among us, for they greatly injure a community.

HOW'S THIS!

The Organization of the Liquor Dealers.

We are glad to announce that the State Liquor Dealers' Association is going to work in dead earnest. We have every reason and hasten in the State organized before the next election, so that the trade may be prepared to withstand the onslaughts of the temperance fanatics—Wine and Spirit Gazette for May 28, 1890.

The members of the Association, it seems, assist each other when sued for violating the law, so that the burden of the expense will not fall upon the individual wrong-doer, and are also banded together, it further appears, to look after all laws inimical to their interests and calculated to promote sobriety, and protect the family, even (to further their ends), if it is necessary to corrupt the ballot-box, as in Hudson County, and elect to office the beasts who are most willing to do their bidding.

The same paper devotes an entire column on its first page to this Democratic members of the New York Legislature—only five—who dodged by not voting on a bill known as "The Police Sign" Bill, intended to prevent the saloon-keepers from placing the saloon-keepers whether they sell at unlawful hours or not. We look in vain for any complaint against the New Jersey Democratic Legislature. The members seem to have given the liquor-dealers entire satisfaction. But the most amusing part of the whole article is the account of one of the five members who called upon the editor, to explain through him to the liquor dealers that it was oversight which caused his failure to vote "right" on the bill as the critical time. He is not recorded that he gave any explanation to his constituents as to his failure to serve their interests, for which they elected him.

After reading the paper one is led to conclude that the most stringent measures to prevent the ballot box stuffing can be too soon. The present ballot bill is the best that could be got with the Democrats in control, but it is an entering wedge from which better laws may be had later.

Unless the present ballot-box corruption is stopped it will be the saloon-power which will rule, if it does not already. Undoubtedly the evidence of their own organ ought to be sufficient to cause alarm to all right-thinking people.

Grain Fields Devastated by Insects.

Whole fields of rye and wheat have been ruined in Bergen County by the new grain pest, and farmers report that the damage extends across the State line into Rockland County, N. Y. Growing grain never looked better than they do this year after the repeated showers, but day before yesterday the farmers who examined the bearded heads of wheat and rye discovered that from ten to twenty-five of the little green insects had hooked on the substance of grain heads. Some of the farmers talk of ploughing the crop under for manure.

If the gentle public only knew what reporters do not tell in their interviews with distinguished individuals it would never again blame them for what they do tell.

A scientific gentleman who has been trying electricity on dogs with a view of discovering how its action affects the animal organism, finds that the fatal results is brought about by the action of electricity within the actual substance of the heart.

St. Paul has gained a step or two on other cities in the matter of the census. She has been lucky enough to have her city directory publisher appointed census supervisor, and he has promised the St. Paulites that he will give the city a population of 250,000 or know the reason why. Minneapolis meanwhile has raised a private sum for the census supervisor, "in order to enable him to conduct the count in a proper manner." Each city might take in the gravestones of old settlers to help out the count.

Many things in this life require gall, but there is something approaching the sublime in the assurance of those reporters who called on Commander McCalla, of the ship Enterprise, just after he had been suspended for three years from the United States navy for cruelty to subordinates, to ask him how he felt! They report that his "eyes were red and swollen and his face was inexpressibly sad." It is a terrible blow for a proud man, but Commander McCalla will now have three years' leisure to reflect on how he in his office has not only caused the eyes of helpless sailors to be red and swollen, but also to have seen one of the things for which he is suspended is making men "toe a seam" four consecutive nights on the quarter deck. This was an original way of making them toe the mark.

Cardinal Manning on Labor.

Cardinal Manning's utterances on the rights and dignity of labor ring out singularly clear and forceful for the working man, and their logic is admirable.

The cardinal traces all wealth whatsoever back to labor, and quotes this sentence: "In the dim morning of society labor was up and stirring before capital was awake." His definition to be the honest exertion of the powers of our mind and of our body for our own good and for the good of our neighbor. He says "honest exertion," because all exertion that is not honest is destruction.

Again, bodily labor is the origin of everything, though mind must precede it, and in the labor of the body worthily performed there is true dignity.

There is no limit to the fertility of the earth. In the reign of King John the soil of all England was only one-fourth as productive as it is at present. England has developed itself by labor, and labor may be only in the dawn of its accomplishment. The cardinal is not of those who believe the invention of machinery has wrought evil to the world. In ten years after the introduction of machinery into the spinning and weaving industry, more than forty times as many persons were employed as before. Since the dawn of civilization there has been a perpetual accumulation of muscular power, of mental power, of manual power and of mechanical power, and this is the true capital of a country.

His strength and dexterity are the laborer's capital. The cardinal calls this living capital, in distinction from money, which is dead capital. The two must be united and go hand in hand. Labor has an undeniable right, moreover, to decide where, for whom and for what price it will work. If it fixes the price too high, it will pay the penalty, since all mistakes carry with them their penalty.

The right of workingmen to form trades unions for their own advancement and protection is undoubted. This right existed in the time of the Greeks and Romans and is in accordance with a sound and legitimate social law. The laborer has therefore the right of liberty and of organization.

The cardinal advocates the regulating of hours of labor by law. If the great end of life and the glory of England consist in multiplying without stint yards of cloth and cotton print and underwear, ing all other nations in these articles, then let things go on as they are now. But if the domestic life of the people is vital above all; if the peace and purity of homes, the education of children, the duties of wives and mothers, of husbands and fathers are things sacred, and if now fathers and mothers toil such long hours that they come home so wearied as only to be able to take food and lie down and rest, then we dare not go on longer in this path.

Families living in single rooms, sometimes many families to one room, a corner apiece—these things cannot go on: these things ought not to go on. The accumulation of wealth in the hand, the piling up of wealth like mountains in the possession of classes or of individuals, cannot go on if these moral conditions of our people are not healed. No commonwealth can rest on such foundations.

ENUMERATORS AT WORK.

Beginning the Count for the Census of 1890.

INTERVIEWING THE METROPOLIS.

Chauncey M. Depew Gives Some Answers and Some Advice—His Humorous Reference to the Questions as to Physical Condition—One Enumerator Suicides.

NEW YORK, June 3.—The army of 1,000 census enumerators, equipped with neat portfolios and lead pencils, bright and early yesterday morning began their task of ascertaining the name, age, nationality, physical and financial condition of every man, woman and child in this city. Supervisor Charles H. Murray was at his desk in the census office, 19 Eighth street, long before 8 o'clock. There were 350 reserves on hand, and eight enumerator's places were filled from the reserve list.

Enumerators Who Backed Out.

The enumerators who asked to be excused alleged dislike of their districts and fear of personal violence as reasons for giving up their work. The excuses of seven of the enumerators were not accepted, and they will be prosecuted again. The eighth, a veteran, was incapacitated for the work by the reopening of an old wound and he was excused. The nonenumerators are liable to be charged with misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $500, if after beginning the task they neglect or abandon it.

A census taking expert climbed the front stoop of Chauncey M. Depew's home, at No. 45 West Fifty-fourth street, at 7 o'clock in the morning. He handed a census blank to Depew's valet and said: "Population and Social Statistics," to the young man who answered his ring, and then disappeared.

"The census man got after me quite early," said Mr. Depew to a reporter afterward. "I had census for breakfast. I took it with my egg and coffee. Perhaps I took it with a pinch of salt, too. The young man who owned the important looking document left it at the door and ran off in a hurry. He will call around again when the family isn't home." Then he disappeared. He had nothing to fear. I don't think anybody would hurt a census enumerator. He is simply doing his duty. I haven't filled out my blank yet. Let me see.

Thirty Days a Soldier.

"Whether a soldier, sailor or marine during the civil war in the United States or Confederate), or widow of such person?' Well, I was thirty days in the army.

"'Whether white, black, mulatto, quadroon, octoroon, Chinese, Japanese or Indian?' I should say pure Anglo-Saxon, with a strong dash of Celtic." Mr. Depew wisely refrained from bothering about the question as to who was the head of his family. His age was 56 on April 23.

"'Mother of how many children?' None."

"'Profession, trade or occupation?' That rather gets me. I'm a lawyer, railroad man, trustee and I don't know how many other things. Ought I write it all down and bore the government officials?"

"'Months unemployed during the census year?' Why don't they say minutes? I could answer that."

"'Able to speak English?' I wonder how many of us really do speak English. I should say, maybe one in a thousand. Do I? I guess we'll let that stand awhile and think about it."

Mr. Depew "Don't Know."

"'Whether suffering from acute or chronic disease, with name of disease and length of time afflicted?' Well, what should a man say to that. What would they think of a bad attack of presidency on the brain, eh? Do you know what proportion of us may have chronic diseases? That question will do much harm if it's pressed. I had a friend whose family doctor had been restricting his diet for years and making him regulate his life so as to postpone death from Bright's disease of the kidneys.

"He had everything to live for—charming wife, fortune, friends, was a man of cultivated tastes. One day he consulted a specialist, who told him conscientiously all about the disease. Then immediately put his estate in such shape that it could be settled in a few hours, resigned from all his clubs, made his will and sat down and waited. At the end of six months he was dead. If the doctor had left him in ignorance of his condition it is not extravagant to suppose he might be alive now. The government had better be careful. I think that I shall answer the question, 'I don't know.'"

He Is "Sane Enough."

"'Whether defective in mind, sight, hearing or speech, or whether crippled, maimed or deformed, with name of defect.' What a treasure I would have been to the searcher for statistics if he had called while I was wearing my glass leg! My mind? To oblige the statistics man I called today on an alienist of my acquaintance and asked him whether I was defective in mind.

"He examined me carefully for some time and then said in a cautious way: 'Well, you're sane enough on an average number of topics. That is commonly known as a condition of sanity.' I believe the expert thinks I'm more or less insane and that while we may be sane enough to go around and attend to business every day, still we are not without 'defective' minds.

"'If the house you live in is owned by head or member of family, is the home free from mortgage incumbrance?' H'm! A man will cheerfully acknowledge that he has a wart on his nose, but a mortgage on his house—never.

"How would I advise people to answer these important questions? Well, that's hard. They are all statutory. I suppose congress voted for them in a confiding way without asking questions. Any one who refused to answer them may—mind you, I say may—be punished by fine. Possibly he might sue and get his money back, but then the courts are generally on the side of the statutes.

"Don't you think," concluded Mr. Depew, "that a man might truthfully answer, 'I don't know' to the questions? That would be safe, and, I imagine, satisfactory to the inquisitors."

An Enumerator Commits Suicide.

Frank Langue, who had been drinking because his sweetheart rejected him, and who had lost his position as carriage maker, but had obtained an appointment as census enumerator, committed suicide yesterday afternoon. Langue was, it is said, alarmed at the stories that the census men would meet with violence, he drank heavily to fortify his courage.

He became intoxicated, and when he awoke it was too late to begin his day's work. He remembered that there was a good fine in such cases and took "Hough on Rats," which ended his existence.

Enumerator Louis Marks was ejected from Bernhard Smith's saloon in lieu of obtaining replies to the census queries. It afterward transpired that it was an old quarrel between the men, and that Mr. Smith had no intention of getting into a war with the United States government.

UNCLE SAM'S MONEY BAGS.

From Present Indications We Will Live a Month Longer.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—The monthly public debt statement shows a decrease in the debt amounting to $6,661,871 during the month of May, and for eleven months of the current fiscal year $67,787,722. The total debt, less cash in the treasury on June 1, was $1,008,958,998. The net cash or surplus in the treasury on the 1st inst. was $36,901,791, against $45,980,623 a month ago.

National bank depositories hold $81,295,998 of government funds, or about $500,000 less than a month ago. The gold fund balance has increased about $5,000,000 during the past month, and today amounts to $190,544,854, and the silver fund balance—exclusive of six million trade dollar bullion—has increased a little more than one million, and now amounts to $18,312,725. The fund of standard silver dollars keeps steadily increasing, and the treasury holds $296,000,000 of them.

Government receipts during the month from all sources aggregated $35,443,351, and receipts for the eleven months of the current fiscal year, ending May 31, aggregated $264,536,998. The receipts for the present month will probably reach $35,000,000, and thus swell the government receipts for the current fiscal year very close to $400,000,000, or $15,000,000 more than Secretary Windom's estimate made early last fall. On the other hand expenditures during the eleven months last passed aggregated $203,134,940, or about $14,000,000 more than for the corresponding eleven months of the next fiscal year. Pension payments so far this year have amounted to $103,177,727, or fully $13,000,000 more than during the corresponding eleven months of the previous year.

Coinage at the mints during May aggregated in value $9,058,900, or $74,900 in gold coin, and 7,000,000 in standard silver dollars and the remainder in minor coin.

Against the Use of Tobacco.

BUFFALO, June 3.—In the United Presbyterian assembly the memorial from the presbytery of central Illinois asking that a stand be taken against it, general assembly, was reported favorably by the committee. Much discussion followed, all against tobacco. The report was finally referred back to the committee with instructions to consolidate the report so that it would be even more sweeping than at first and include all members of the church, but especially ministers and elders, who should set an example to laymen. It will undoubtedly be adopted.

Judge Lynch in Mississippi.

HATTIESBURG, Miss., June 3.—A negro named George Stevens attempted an outrage on a white woman, Dearman, a few miles north of this place on Friday night. He was captured, and after comparing tracks made with his boots and finding them to be the same, was taken back to the widow's house he confessed. Two men started to Augusta to put the brute in jail, and about eight or nine miles from there thirty or forty men overtook them and took the negro by force and hanged him to tree about fifty yards from the road.

Successors to Miller and Hoadly.

ALBANY, June 3.—Governor Hill and Speaker Husted have appointed Franklin Barrett, of New York, and Louis Marshall, of Syracuse, as members of the judiciary constitutional commission in the places of Hon. Warner Miller and ex-Governor Hoadly, resigned. Mr. Miller, by reason of business engagements and Mr. Hoadly, because of professional duties, were compelled to resign their membership. Judge Danforth will probably be selected as chairman of the commission.

Paid Off and Dismissed.

MATT'S LANDING, N. J., June 3.—The striking Italians, who placed obstructions on the track at Folsom and threatened serious trouble owing to their not being paid for the contracting for work done, were yesterday paid off by the railroad company and then discharged. There was considerable muttering among them and more trouble is feared.

Shot from Ambush.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 3.—Robert Parrish was shot from ambush in Scott county, near Gren Ridge, Sunday night. Parrent was whipped by masked men a year ago and left the county. He had recently returned. He was charged with murder.

An Important Witness Killed.

DETROIT, June 3.—John Hayes, a Grand Trunk switchman, and the only person who positively identified Burchell, the alleged murderer of the young Englishman, Benham, at Woodstock, was killed by the cars at Windsor yesterday.

CONTRACT LABOR IN GLASGOW.

Tailors Engaged in Hamburg to Work in the Scotch Capital for $7.50 a Week—A Brewing Company's Bid for Popularity. German Strikers Sentenced.

LONDON, June 3.—The London chamber of commerce is maturing a scheme which it is expected will reduce the number of strikes in a great measure and ultimately abolish that method of settling disputes between employer and employe. The plan contemplates the formation of a "conciliation committee," half of which is to be composed of employes engaged in the various trades and half of master employers representing the leading industries. This committee it is proposed to divide into twelve groups for purposes of convenience, and any dispute incapable of settlement by one of these sub-divisions is to be referred to the full committee. The plan meets with the favor of the trades unions and the masters, and it is not likely that any difficulty will be experienced in obtaining the unqualified consent of both to abide by the final decisions of the committee.

The recent strikes among the tailors of London and the probability that there may be another on early date have induced the master tailors of Glasgow to import a number of workmen under contract from Germany. Eight of the largest tailoring establishments in Glasgow have formed a syndicate with the object of overcoming any strike that may occur among their workmen. One hundred men have already been engaged at Hamburg under a contract binding them to work steadily for one year at a weekly stipend of thirty shillings ($7.50). The syndicate pays their expenses to Glasgow and guarantees that a week's work shall be only fifty-four hours. It is expected that many more will be imported, and it is quite likely that the movement will extend to London.

The Guinness Brewing company has voluntarily added a shilling a week to the wages of each of its employees, supplementing the announcement with the statement that the prosperity of the company's business justifies its sharing the increase of profits with the men who have contributed to it by their industry and fidelity. This increase of wages, made quite unexpectedly and without solicitation, will add the sum of £40,000 a year to the company's pay roll and incalculably increase its popularity as well as its products with the working class.

The court at Magdeburg, Germany, yesterday sentenced four strikers to terms of imprisonment varying from six to eighteen months for intimidating workmen who refused to join the strike movement and take part in the general strike.

Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria has issued a special order thanking the troops for their splendid conduct during the recent labor disorders in Vienna and other parts of the empire.

Mr. Gladstone's Denial.

LONDON, June 3.—Mr. Gladstone, in reply to questions sent to him by Liberals in Glasgow, denies that he ever stated that the shooting affair at Mitchelstown, Ireland, and the Siberian atrocities were parallel outrages. Though he says he spoks of them together, he did not desire the inference to be drawn that he regarded the Mitchelstown affair as equally as bad as the outrages perpetrated by the Russian officials in Siberia.

Surprise at Bishop O'Dwyer's Action.

DUBLIN, June 3.—Right Rev. O'Dwyer, bishop of Limerick, has issued a pastoral letter withdrawing from the priests in his diocese the power to grant absolution to persons guilty of boycotting or executing and practicing the "plan of campaign." The action of the bishop has created much surprise and indignation.

Capt. Kalakhoff Banished.

Bismarck En Route to England.

THE HAGUE, June 3.—Prince Bismarck will arrive at Veuls on June 21 en route to England.

The Vesuvius Placed in Commission.

PHILADELPHIA, June 3.—The League Island navy yard yesterday the United States government took formal possession of the dynamite cruiser Vesuvius, and that vessel was placed in commission in a manof-war. The Vesuvius was transferred from the possession of the Cramps, the owners of the yard in which she was built, and accepted on behalf of the government by Capt. H. B. Seely, commandant of the League Island naval station. The Vesuvius will remain at League Island for a few days and then proceed to some point on the Atlantic coast to be designated by the secretary of the navy.

Protection for Newfoundland.

HALIFAX, N. S., June 3.—Two torpedo boats are expected to arrive from England this month. They will be accompanied out by H. M. S. Tyne. A fleet of war ships arrived yesterday from Bermuda, including the Partridge, a comparatively new gunboat of the first class, a sister ship of the Thrush. She carries six guns. There is a rumor here that a regiment of the line and two batteries of artillery are about to sail from England for Newfoundland.

The Oregon Election.

PORTLAND, Ore., June 3.—In the state election held yesterday for governor and for congress, but the returns received seem favorable to Pennoyer (Dem). Meager returns from the state indicate the election of Binger Hermer (Rep.) for congress by from 4,000 to 6,000 majority. The Republicans will probably have a majority in the legislature on joint ballot.

GOSSIP OF THE CAPITAL.

Senator Morrill's Argument Against Free Coinage.

SENATOR PLUMB'S SILVER BILL.

Henry Noble Denies a Rumor That He Intends Resigning from the Cabinet to Take a Railroad Position—Other Capital News Notes.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—When the silver bill was taken up in the senate yesterday Mr. Morrill said that Mr. Jones and the other followers of the new silver gospel were too far reaching. They wanted all the silver coined at government expense, and wanted also the treasury notes certificates to be a legal tender for all debts public and private. They wanted the treasury reserves to be cut to ten millions or hundred millions held for redemption of legal tender notes to be reduced one-half and finally they wanted free coinage for all American silver and all brought in from other countries. The government should coin the 2 per cent. cost of coinage, and bullion depositors should receive all the difference in value between bullion and standard dollars.

Mr. Morrill believed that if the wage earners of the country, the most numerous class and the largest in amount, were paid off in depreciated standard money and then made to pay higher prices for all purchases there would be at an early day any number of strikes. He was in favor of a bi-metallic standard to be maintained and a sufficient amount of silver utilized through careful legislation. He did not want the United States forced into the commercial world. If no country wanted a single standard it would be gold rather than silver. But we could be kept, silver being made to approach a good deal and gold reduced somewhat until a purity in value was reached.

Senator Plumb's Silver Bill.

A bill introduced by Senator Plumb and announced by him to be the work of Mr. S. John, of New York, is the same as the bill introduced by that gentleman with the addition of the following section:

That whenever the president of the United States shall be authoritatively advised that the mints of France, Belgium and Italy are open for the coinage of their full tender silver money as free from all limitations, charges and restrictions as for their gold and upon the valuation for gold and silver, which is now known as the "Latin union ratio," it shall be the duty of the president to issue his proclamation forthwith declaring the following provisions, which shall have all the force and effect of a law of the United States, namely:

Directing the secretary of the treasury to suspend at once all further issuing of silver certificates, and to require that any of the same in the treasury of the United States shall be canceled and destroyed.

To declare that the dollar unit of the United States which shall contain 400 grains of standard silver, and be a full tender for all public debts as far as private debts, unless otherwise specified in any contract, and to cause the same to be coined to the utmost capacity of the mints of the United States, limited only by his (the president's) discretion as to the amount of gold, until 300,000,000 of the new standard dollars shall be coined, but not exceeding 2,000,000 of the same in any one month.

On and after sixty days from the date of the said proclamation to purchase on demand of the holders of the same all outstanding silver dollars of the present standard weight and all outstanding silver certificates of the United States at a premium of three cents on the dollar of each, with the benefit of the benefits provided notes of the United States, in payment of the same.

And, on and after the date of the said proclamation, to fix the utmost limit of price for the purchase of silver under the provisions of this act at $1 for 300 grains of fine silver.

The Eight Hour Law in Congress.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—The house committee on labor authorized a favorable report on the resolution introduced in the house by Mr. Mason (Ills.), authorizing the committee to select from the house or a sub-committee of five members to take evidence at such places as it may determine during the present session or during the recess of congress, as to the best method for the establishment of eight hours as a day's work and in regard to the operation of the enforcement of the eight hour federal law and also as to the advisability of establishing a minimum rate of wages to be paid laborers in the employ of the government. A report of the testimony taken, together with such recommendations as the committee may deem proper to make, is to be made at the commencement of the next session. The resolution appropriates $500 to defray the expenses of the committee in taking testimony, etc.

Secretary Noble Will Not Resign.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—Secretary Noble denies emphatically that he has any intention of resigning his present cabinet position. He professes to be entirely satisfied with it, and he seems to be. He says there is something very ridiculous in the report that he should resign from the administration to take service with a railroad company.

The Kemmler Case Again.

BUFFALO, June 3.—The Kemmler case comes up in the general term here today on the question whether Kemmler should be examined by the district attorney or the warden of Auburn prison. It has been arranged that the motion for Kemmler's discharge will be denied without argument and case to the court of appeals. This, it is expected, will enable this phase of the case to be decided within two weeks. Attorney Hatch was asked if this decision would end the case and he replied, "So far as this point is concerned it will." It is believed that other steps will be taken in the effort to save Kemmler, or at least delay his execution.

An American antiquarian offers the sarcophagus and skeleton for sale for the modest sum of $60,000, the delivery of the goods to be made at Alexandria.

IN A TENEMENT HOUSE FIRE.

One Smothered to Death and Several Badly Burned.

ST. LOUIS, June 3.—Six persons were badly burned and one smothered in a tenement house at No. 1,623 Franklin avenue at 3 o'clock in the morning. The firemen did not know that anybody was in danger until some time after they reached the scene. The names of the injured are as follows:

Mrs. Mary Hause, burned about head and arms; little son of Mary Hause, badly burned; ——— Schlottman, smothered; George Schlottman, 32 years, badly burned; Annie Schlottman, his wife, burned about the head, neck, shoulders and arms, probably fatally; Harry Schlottman, 9 years; Walter Schlottman, 4 years.

When the firemen entered and found the family of George Schlottman struggling in the smoke and flames in the two front rooms Schlottman was frightfully burned and was lying helplessly on the floor. His wife and two children were also burned, and his father, nearly 70 years old, had been smothered to death in his bed.

Charles Hause, who occupied the rear apartments with his wife and child, had just left to go to work, and his wife and little son were caught in the flames. Mrs. Hause, who could have escaped, but her little boy was so frightened that he ran under the bed, and in the frantic mother's efforts to save her child she was dangerously burned. The child was found in an unconscious condition.

George Schlottman is not expected to live. The recovery of his two children is also doubtful, although Mrs. Schlottman may pull through.

George Hyde, the lessee, has been arrested on suspicion of having fired the building.

DENOUNCED BY STUDENTS.

Harvard Men Have No Sympathy with Acts of Vandalism.

BOSTON, June 3.—An effort is being made to efface the disfigurations made on Saturday by Harvard students on the college buildings and the John Harvard statue. It is found that the paint itself is easily removed, but to obliterate the stain of the oil is a much harder job. It will doubtless be necessary to scrape the daubs off the statue and then redecorate it. It is said that this can be done without serious injury to the figure. It will depend on how deep the oil is sunken into the granite portion whether the injury can be repaired. The same is true of the disfiguration of the Memorial hall steps and Appleton chapel. A large force is hard at work on the various buildings trying to make things presentable.

Gen. Bridge, the donor of the John Harvard statue, visited the college yesterday to see how much damage had been done his gift.

At a large meeting of students last night resolutions were adopted denouncing the recent acts of vandalism and declaring that they were the work of but one or two men, and that they did not be charged by public opinion upon the students as a body. It was resolved to raise money among the students to repair the damage so far as possible and the faculty committee to ferret out the guilty parties and bring them to justice.

Last of the Old Brooklyn Theatre.

BROOKLYN, June 3.—The last performance in the Brooklyn theatre was given last night. The theatre is to be torn down and a building erected on the site for The Eagle. There was a crowded and fashionable audience, including hundreds of the prominent people of the city. The performance included the scene in the "Two Orphans," which was being played when the fire broke out in the theatre on the December night in 1876, when 300 persons perished. After the performance United States District Attorney Wilbur delivered an address appropriate to the occasion and in the theatre's history, and Rose Coghlan recited a poem written for the occasion.

Encouraging Crop Prospects.

WINNIPEG, Man., June 3.—Reports received from fifteen grain centers in Manitoba and the western territories all give very encouraging news of the condition of crops. Many farmers assert that even if they should have no further rain wheat cannot suffer from drought, as the plants have taken good root and are in a healthy, flourishing state. It is estimated that there are 800,000 acres—an increase of over 20 per cent. over last year—in wheat alone in Manitoba. The western territories also show a large increase in acreage.

Importers Will Protest.

NEW YORK, June 3.—About 200 importers met yesterday and completed arrangements for a trip to Washington to protest before the senate finance committee against certain features of the proposed tariff legislation. Each delegate will take with him a sample of the goods in which he is interested and concerning which he is to make an argument. They left this afternoon, and the hearing takes place tomorrow.

The Election in Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE, June 3.—The results of the little town elections yesterday show much bolting, and the presence of the independent voter everywhere. In some cases fusion tickets were elected. In Burrillville the three Republicans and four Democrats were chosen. In North Providence the council is Republican. In Johnston a fusion ticket was elected.

THE READY MADE MAN.

In the sages of Hindustan
Of erudition love,
Determined to make a ready made man,
Which had never been done before;
All this, you know,
Was some time ago,
In the pre-historical yore.

So they mixed their chemicals up
In a mighty potsmoke bowl,
And they stirred them up on pre'd stir up cup
Of coffee or tea, on my soul;
Then a hole in the latter,
And set on a platter,
With carbon and salt in the hole.

These sa'ves of Hindustan
Then poured the chemicals in,
Their phosphoric acid they poured from a pan,
And their soda and galatine;
With baryric acid,
To make the flesh shield,
And wood and creatine.

And they made the form of a man,
Organically sound and complete,
And they found these sages of Hindustan
No due from his head to his feet;
And one of their fellows
Blew air from a bellows,
And the man leaped up from his seat.

They'd made the ready made man,
But he was crazy and wild;
He howled like a beast in a caravan,
And then he cried like a child;
They put magnesia on
His bib and his pinafore
To make him reconciled.

And this—it made him hum—
'Twas withering flame to feel,
And they took chloride of potassium
And a little bit of lead,
Then he acted like a fool
Till he had never been to school—
His idiot grooms were cried.

Then carbon from the pen
They placed beneath his crown;
Then he fought like John L. Sullivan,
And knocked the sages down.
Then the sages of Hindustan
They titled the ready made man,
Who had done them up so brown.

My moral all may scan:
It's just designed to show
That the making of a perfect man
Is a process rather slow
The perfect fellow
Takes time to mellow
And plenty of time to grow.
—S. W. Foss in Yankee Blade.

She Understood.

An old gentleman, speaking to a young lady, and commenting upon her freshness and good looks, remarked:

"Ah, my dear, may you long retain them. Yours is a happy period of life. You know nothing yet of the jealousies, the heart burnings, the contention, the rivalries that beset the pathway of existence."

"Don't I, though?" she interrupted, "I want you to understand that I belong to a church choir."—Drake's Magazine.

YOUNG FOLKS' COLUMN.

AMUSING AND INSTRUCTIVE ENTERTAINMENT FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

The Study Hour—Kings and Queens and Wars and Things All Shut Within the Book of History—What a Little Girl Has to Say on Caterpillars.

Oh! what a mystery
The study is of history!
How the kings go ravaging
And ravaging about!
Pentagenet or Tudor,
I can't tell which was ruder;
But Richard Third,
Upon my word,
Was worst of all the rout.

Alfred was a hero,
Knew no guile nor fear, oh!
Beat the Danes and chased the Thanes
And ruled the country well.
Edward Five, the Hammer,
Was a sheep-dear and shammer;
And Bruce alone
Saved Scotland's throne
When wash his blows it fell.

OH! WHAT A MYSTERY!

Edward Third was great, too,
Early fought, and late, too,
Drove the French from Cressy's trench
Like leaves before the blast,
But Harry Fifth, the glorious,
He, the all victorious,
He's the one
I'd serve alone,
From first unto the last.

Oh! what a mystery
The study is of history!
Queens and kings,
And wars and things,
All shut within the book.
Though sometimes a trifle bloody,
'Tis our best beloved study.
If you want to know how good are we,
Why, only come and look!
—St. Nicholas.

A Little Girl's Composition.

The caterpillar is a crawling thing and hears all over his back and fannie found one down her back and it made me crall likx everything, birds eat caterpillars and give them to their children to eat. I don't see how they can eat them, they are such horrid things, they look so offl, , and feel I don't know how. Caterpillars climb trees, the other day I saw a big, big caterpillar, he was as long as almost that I took a stick and kild him with it and threw it away to let the swill man take it home period caterpillers have a many legs, he may not have so many, and he may have more the litle I gess that but I don't know.

Caterpillars eat flies and other insects, such as ants, misatos and others like that. Also they eat leaves, plum leaves and in short all kinds and some flowers too. Some have baby caterpillars, in short all of them. Caterpillars drink water, in short everything they can get. Caterpillars, I cannot say much more about caterpillars, but one thing I can say it never threw a caterpillar at a man or anybody for it gives them such a fright. I have told you all they eat, drink here and legs it has and the soul. A caterpillar can climb, you cannot. Ma be some of you can, I cant, but most of the things that a a caterpillar can do we cannot, and many of the things that ... can do they cannot.—Buffalo Express.

The Main Point.

A boy, particularly when he is small, is not given to sophistry, says Golden Days; he has a charmingly frank way of disentangling a subject from quips and quibbles and coming directly to the main point.

A small boy had a dog that was rough, as most small boys' dogs are, and a young girl who lived next door had a kitten, sly as all cats are.

One day the boy came nonchalantly into the girl's presence, and after some desultory conversation he said:

"You know my dog Baron and your cat Darling?"

"Yes."

"Well, my dog had a piece of meat, and he thought your cat was going to take it away from him."

"Thought!" exclaimed the wise little girl. "What makes you say that the dog thought? You know dogs don't think—they instinct."

"Well," said the boy, "I don't care whether he thought it or instinct it, but anyhow he killed your cat."

Sweet Pansy.

Would you know what German children
Call their flower dear and sweet?
"Little Stepmother," they name her,
And they tell her tale complete.

Here's the foremost middle petal;
That's the stepmother herself.
And her daughters two beside her,
Just like her each pretty elf.

See, behind, two other petals,
On which silent ones are shown.
These are the stepdaughters, always
In the background, and alone.

So, to German children, Pansy
Tells her story o'er and o'er;
And they listen, and they sing it
In a little song once more.

But I love our own name better,
For it sounds more heartcomely;
Sweetest Pansy, dearest Pansy,
She shall always be to me.
—Our Little Ones.

A Bird Story.

The Examiner tells a pretty story of two birds in Dr. Prime's collection. Last spring one of the old birds—a gray sparrow—became blind. Straightway a little dark brown and white bird, known as a Japanese nun, and named Dick, became the sparrow's friend. The sparrow's home had a round hole as a doorway. Little Dick would sit down on a perch opposite the hole and chirp. The blind bird would come out, and guided by Dick's chirps would leap to the perch, and so on to the seed cup and water bottle. But the most curious part of the performance was when the blind sparrow would try to get back into the house. Dick would place the sparrow exactly opposite the hole by showing him along the perch from opposite. Dick would chirp, and the blind bird would leap in, never falling.

Handsome Is as Handsome Does.

Out of sight, my boys and girls,
Every rose of beauty starts;
So think less about your curls,
More about your minds and hearts.
Cherish what is good, and drive
Evil thoughts and feelings far,
For, as sure as you're alive,
You will shine for what you are.
—Allen Cray.

His Original Topic.

Associate—Have you finished your lecture to be delivered before the association of physicians?

Doctor—I have, and it will create a sensation.

"New subject?"

"Totally new and original in medical circles."

"What is it?"

"The Good Results to Be Attained from the Use of Food."—Chicago Times.

Success at Last.

"I don't know whether to go to London or not."

"You shouldn't back out, now that success has crowned your efforts."

"Success? Efforts? What efforts?"

"To hold a monocle on your eye without using your hands."—Harper's Bazar.

Unsolicited Testimonial.

"If I am wakeful at night," said the author, "I always put myself to sleep by following out, in my mind, the thread of some one of my stories from the beginning. Presently the incidents and characters become confused, and the first thing I know I am asleep."

"That's a fact," said the friend, enthusiastically. "I can go to sleep over any of 'em."—Chicago Tribune.

He Took Great Pains.

Dissimulating Tator—Yes, indeed; your James is a very conscientious boy, and takes great pains with his lessons. Don't you, James?

Pupil—Well, between what lickin's I get here and what I get at home from pop I guess I'll quit school for the hospital about the end of next week.—American Grocer.

The Idea!

"I s'pose you read a great many books now," said the unsophisticated country farmer who was visiting his nephew, a member of the editorial staff of a city paper.

"Read a great many books? Good gracious, no; I don't read any. I'm the book reviewer."—Drake's Magazine.

The Difficulty.

Miss Vere-de-Vere—Only think, Mr. Tumly, they have a custom in Spain that when one admires anything the owner immediately presents him with it.

Mr. Tumly (desperately)—I admire your hand very much, Miss Vere-de-Vere.

"Ah yes; but, Mr. Tumly, we are not in Spain."

On Business.

Distinguished Prince (at foreign watering place)—My dear Mons, you are looking so vigorous and charming! Surely you do not need to drink so watairs.

American Heiress—No, prince. This is my fifth season in Europe. I am not here for my health this time.—Chicago Tribune.

Beyond Redemption.

"Mamma," said a little Boston boy, "Willie Jones is a very bad boy, isn't he?"

"Why, Willie?"

"He uses bad language."

"Why, I am surprised. What did he say?"

"Pants."—Washington Post.

In Original Packages.

Farmer—Come out here to the bars, Miss Beacon Street, I want to show you my new Jersey calf.

Miss Beacon Street (enchanted)—Oh, what a lovely little cow! Now, I suppose that is the kind that gives the condensed milk, isn't it?—Somerville Journal.

Outwitted.

Indignant Landlord (to tenant of flat)—I thought you said that all your children were grown up, and have you've got three noisy babies in the house.

Tenant—Yes, those are my grandchildren.—Munsey's Weekly.

Reasonable.

Dolly (as the song ends)—Why did the minstrel boy take his harp to the war, papa?

Papa (grumpily)—So that he might practise where he wouldn't be heard, I suppose! —Churchman.

The Old Man Knew.

"Papa, there's something I want to know."

"What is it, my boy?"

"Why is the moon called she?"

"Because it is changeable, my son."—Exchange.

A Justifiable Excuse.

"What's the reason you have robbed and cheated so much?"

The Accused—Like all men, your honor, I was anxious to secure for myself a quiet and comfortable old age.—Fliegende Blatter.

Too Generous.

"Is your husband a very generous man?"

"Indeed he is. You remember those nice cigars I gave him for a birthday present? Well, he smoked only one and gave all the others away to his friends."—The Epoch.

Amicably Arranged.

Husband—Am I never to have my own way?

Wife—Certainly, my dove; when we are both agreed you can have your way, and when we differ I'll have mine.—Der Ulk.

Disconcerting.

A young physician was showing a friend a recent purchase he had made in the way of a skeleton. "Very interesting," commented his friend. "One of your patients, doctor?"—Exchange.

An Unsafe Companion.

Mr. Dumpsey—Johnny, do people ever say you look like me?

MacCrackle—What is it?

McCorkle—Get sentenced to die by electricity.—Life.

THE ARIZONA KICKER.

Showing That Editorial Machinery Sometimes Slips a Cog.

We extract the following from the latest issue of The Arizona Kicker, which came out on a half sheet:

EXPLANATORY.—We owe our readers an apology for the half sheet we are compelled to issue this week. Monday morning, as we entered the postoffice after our mail, which, by the way, is five times as large as that of any other inhabitant in Arizona, the postmaster came out into the corridor and demanded a personal apology for what The Kicker said about him last week. In our pioneer days, when we lived on roots and hadn't a second shirt to our back, we used to get down and crawl whenever requested. We felt that we had to. We were a tenderfoot and lacked sand. A change came. We haven't been doing any creeping for the past two years. On the contrary, we have had the revolver and the other man has done the four legged act.

Therefore, when the postmaster demanded an apology, and took us by the ear to enforce obedience, we shut him with the weight of two tons, and had him hollering for mercy inside of two minutes. Before letting him up we took his gun away, and in some manner it was discharged, and the bullet went through the palm of our right hand. The wound will prevent our using the pen for some weeks, and we must dictate our copy.

MORE EXPLANATORY.—The postmaster has a brother named Jim, who is a loafer and a cur from way back. We stated last week that we believed he stole money letters from the mails, and the statement seems to have put some "git" into him. After we had licked his brother and got back to the office Jim came sneaking down the street and fired at us through a window. He had a shotgun, but he fired so high that no one was touched, and he was out of sight before we got to the door.

In a few days we are going on a hunt for Jim. We shall locate him and walk in on him and allow off his ear and nail it on our office door. Let him accept this notice as fair warning of our intentions. While he didn't hit us with any of his buckshot, the idea of such a chuckaloo firing at us with intent to kill rattled our nerves and sent us to bed when we ought to have been getting out copy.

FURTHER EXPLANATORY.—Some three weeks ago a wild eyed guysaticutus entered this town by the dirt road and struck us for a "sit." He gave the name of J. Melville Gasham, and claimed to have furnished all the brain fodder for most of the New York papers for the last ten years. As he offered to work for $4 per week and buy his crackers and cheese from our grocery, we didn't question him as closely as we otherwise might. He had worked two days when he got hurt, and what did the lop eared brother of a hyena do but go off and get drunk and lay down just where Col. Hicks's cows usually like to wind up run over him in going to water! He was trampled out of sight into the sand, and on top of our other troubles we had to hire him dug out and buried. The only lucky thing we could have issued a full sheet and got it out on time. We've had him carted off to one corner of our private burying ground, and shall mark his grave; but we don't mourn.

THE LATEST.—If our readers are not satisfied with the above explanations we have another to fire at them. Owing to our wounded hand we could not do a stroke of writing. We could dictate, however, and we hired young Bill Ellis, son of Old Reprobate Ellis, to act as our amanuensis. We had dictated about half a column when he differed with us on how to spell "corduroy." He insisted that it was "corjul," and rather than see the English language knocked out we ceased dictating, fired Bill out and gave an old tramp printer $10 and told him to go ahead and run out half a sheet. It's all we could do under the circumstances, and we beg the indulgence of our subscribers. Next week we shall be all right, and we promise an issue of The Kicker which will make the sand fly in fifty directions.—Detroit Free Press.

A Scurrilous Remark.

Brown was mentioning to his wife the old legend, based, no doubt, on St. Peter's exploit, that every time a cock crows some one tells a lie.

"Ben how is it, then," asked his doubting helpmate, "that the roosters chiefly crow very early in the morning when almost everybody's asleep?"

"I don't know, my dear, unless it is that at that hour most of the big dailies go to press."—Judge.

Too Previous.

Caller—Is Mr. Jones in?

Mrs. Jones—What do you want to see him for?

C.—I have a bill here that——

Mrs. J.—He ain't in, he——

C. (continuing)—That I wished to pay him and as I require his own signature to the receipt I will call some other time.—Boston Courier.

At Her Old Tricks.

Amy—Well, Susie is engaged to Mr Gingget at last.

Mabel—Yes: she fairly coaxed him to propose too.

Amy—That's just like her. In the literary society debates at school she was always begging the question.—Judge.

Getting the News at the White House.

"What is the news in the papers this morning, my dear?" asked the president.

"You are laid up with the influenza."

"Really? I'm very sorry to hear it."—Racket.

The Return of the Hair.

Dog Face (recently with the Wild West show)—Bon jour, mama. Just back from Paree, y' know.

Spanish-with-the-hair (to her husband)—You hold. I lick him.—Life.

A Tale.

He lived a life of calm content;
Unnoticed quite he came and went;
At noon he opened up his store,
At night with care he locked the door.
Sometimes he dropped a little sigh
Because nobody came to buy.
"And yet," he thought, "this quiet ease
Has much about it that should please."
His bank account he'd most gone through,
And then he said, "Well, will not do;
I'll have to work to swell its size—
I guess I'd better advertise."
—Washington Post.

LOVE, HONOR AND ?

CUPID'S SUCCESS.

Some Grooms and Lovely Brides United in Wedlock. Those Happy Couples.

WELCH—MOORE.

All the strains of sweet and most appropriate music from the grand organ of the First Episcopal church, last evening at 8 o'clock, and witnessed by a large and fashionable audience, Miss Adelaide Frances Moore was wedded to the Rev. Herbert Welch, by the pastor of the church, an intimate friend of the family, Rev. Charles B. Smith, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Foley of Port Jervis, N. Y., the college chum of the bridegroom.

The bride was given away by her father, Hon. James McGee. Miss Emma McGee, a sister of the bride acted as Maid of Honor, Oliver Welch of New York, a brother of the bridegroom acted as best man. The church was handsomely decorated with lilies, hydrangea, etc.

The following gentlemen acted as ushers: Mr. Welch, Mr. Welch and Slayback of New York and Messrs. Walter McGee, Joy and Clifford McGee of this city.

After the ceremony, the bridal party and the invited guests assembled at the handsome residence of the bride's parents on Park avenue, North Plainfield, where a reception was given. Mr. and Mrs. McGee and Mr. and Mrs. Welch, parents of the bride and groom received in the library and the bridal party received in the parlor, standing in the bay window, under a canopy of beautiful roses. The bride wore a handsome dress of white satin and lace. The presents were numerous and very costly. Many distinguished guests were present. The bridal couple left on their wedding trip, which will be taken immediately after the reception.

Mr. and Mrs. Welch will hereafter be found at the beautiful parsonage of the Methodist Episcopal church of Belford, N. Y., to which Mr. Welch was recently appointed.

The bride is one of the most estimable and popular of our young women. She has been a prime worker during the past few years with our young women have engaged she has been a leading spirit, either as president of the Young Women's Christian Temperance Union, or in other capacities, to minister to the sick and suffering or to relieve the poor and many a one made happier by her pure heartily wished her joy upon her wedding day, and in the days to come. None will wonder who knew her that the capacious church would not contain all, and that the seat in front of the church was fairly thronged by those who had come to contribute to her happiness by their presence. It is a beautiful testimonial of their affection for one who had shown so much interest in and zeal for the welfare of others, and was an exemplary sight to see.

BUNYON—SUDLEY.

Mr. Howard J. Runyon of this city, and Miss Mary W. Bulkley of Brooklyn were united in marriage yesterday.

The service was performed at the Lee avenue Congregational church, Brooklyn, at 6:30, by pastor of the church officiating, assisted by a uncle of the bride. The bride wore a wedding dress and carried a beautiful bridal bouquet of clover blossoms.

Mr. Runyon lives on Front street and is in the wholesale hose and rubber department in the Union church and in the Young Men's Christian Association. He is a foremost member of the Plainfield Bicycle Club. In business he is one of the firm of J. D. Stout and Company, commission merchants in New York.

Miss Bulkley is a cousin of the bride, Miss Bessie Smith of Brooklyn, and Councilman Raymond Rushmore of this city, acted as ushers. The wedding ceremony was simple but impressive.

The church was filled during the services, there were some friends from this city, besides Mr. Runyon's parents and sisters. No reception was held afterwards, but the immediate family met at the bride's father's home in Nostrand avenue, for a short time. The bridal trip will take Boroughs, and it is said some of the more fashionable homes in the East. Mr. and Mrs. Runyon will make Plainfield their home.

WESSENFIELD—VANDERWEG.

At St. Mary's church at nine o'clock this morning occurred the marriage of Mr. John Wessenfield and Miss Mary Ellen Vanderweg both of this city. The ceremony was performed with a nuptial mass and the Rev. Father Stafford was the celebrant. Mr. Harold Melvin acted as best man and Miss Libby was the bridesmaid.

A large number of friends of the young people witnessed the ceremony. A wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's mother after which the happy couple left on a wedding tour.

Lecture by Rev. C. L. Goodrich.

Attention is called to the advertised lecture at Florence to be given by the Rev. C. L. Goodrich at the Congregational church on Thursday evening, at eight o'clock p. m. The well known descriptive power of the lecturer, together with the peculiar virtues and enthusiasm which the very name of the beautiful Italian city always awakens, will be more than sufficient to attract many, and the fact that this lecture is to be accompanied with music by the most talented vocalists in Miss Alice Holmes and Mr. Elmer E. Runyon leaves for all who attend an enjoyable evening.

Their Thirteenth Anniversary.

The thirteenth anniversary of the Children's Home will be held in the First Presbyterian church on Front street, Thursday evening, June 5th, at eight o'clock. Short addresses will be made by Revs. Rodman and Ketchum, and the musical reports of the teachers and friends given. Special music by a quartette, trio and solo, will add to the interest of the occasion. All friends are cordially invited to be present.

HIS PROMOTION PROBABLE.

The Rumor About Bishop Wiggor Believed to be Well Founded.

No one seems to know exactly where the information first came from relative to the probable appointment of Bishop Wiggor, of this diocese, to succeed the late Archbishop Heiss, of Milwaukee. The Bishop refused to say anything on the subject. At Seton Hall College, where he lives, there is an absence of definite information, but nearly all, professors and students, believe that the rumor is more than probable. So good do they consider the Bishop's prospects that they are guessing who will be his successor. In the event of the vacancy occurring it is deemed likely that the next Bishop will be H. P. Fleming, of Orange. Mgr. Doane could probably get the appointment if he were ambitious for it, but his health is hardly strong enough to permit him to undertake the heavy duties and responsibilities attaching the Bishopric of the Newark Diocese. Dean McNulty, of Paterson, is also mentioned.

A Country Justice's Mistake.

A North Plainfield constable went to Sterling a few days ago with a warrant to arrest a girl who was employed as a domestic in a family living in the borough. When he arrived at that village he went to a justice of the peace to have the warrant countersigned. The justice complied with his request, but informed the constable that if the girl returned the clothes he could not arrest her, and to prove what he said procured a law book and read a chapter which he said covered the case. The constable taking it for granted that the justice was authority on law went to the house with the warrant and obtained the clothes. The girl was there, but the constable did not arrest her, when he returned to North Plainfield he was informed that he should have made the arrest. The next day he went back to do so but the girl had fled. It now appears that the country justice had shown the constable a law covering civil suits. When informed of his mistake he looked very sheepish.

A Serious Runaway.

A team of horses attached to a heavy wagon belonging to the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company became frightened when turning a corner at Evens yesterday morning and ran away. The driver was thrown from the seat on the wagon and two wheels of the vehicle passed over his body. He was injured internally. Further down the street the wagon collided with a small tree and uprooted it. The force of the collision, however, checked the speed of the frightened animals and they were caught. The driver says he does not know what frightened them, but thinks that a bee stung one of the horses.

He has two live-heads confined in a large glass jar with a ladder reaching from the bottom to the top of the jar, and whenever there is a storm coming they climb to the top of the ladder and make a peculiar noise. This is a good idea for Plainfielders who are always wondering "if it will storm."

BAPTIST CONVENTION.

NEW JERSEY BAPTISTS MEET AT NEWARK.

Committees From the Various Churches Report.—Plainfielders Present.

Peddie Memorial Baptist church, in Newark, never looked prettier than it did yesterday morning when the sunlight streamed in through the stained glass windows and smiled a welcome on the delegates representing the thirty-three churches in the East Jersey Baptist Association who had assembled to hold their forty-ninth annual convention. The main auditorium was well filled and the fair sex were in the majority.

The Rev. G. W. Nicholson called the meeting to order. After the reports of several committees were received the Rev. Asa Reed Dills, of the Park avenue Baptist of this city, who was down on the programme for the initial sermon, arose. He began by defining the church, its scope, authority and duties, and spoke of the question of free churches, and reproved pew-holders who were unwilling to give up their seats to others.

"Some," said Mr. Dilts, "say that they don't want to let their seats be taken by the mob. I say let the mob come and we should be glad, if need be, to go elsewhere and worship our God. The true function of the church is to seek and save men.

"When the church is corrupt, when there is worldliness in the church God does not use it as his instruments in carrying blessings to men. Therefore the church should be most thoroughly prepared for its God-giving work. The world is the antagonist. They are done only in Japan and China and Africa. They are everywhere in Europe and in this country."

After Mr. Dilts had finished, various committees were elected, concluding the morning session.

At the conclusion of the morning session Rev. Dr. Boyd invited the delegates down stairs where an ample lunch was waiting. When the tables were cleared the visitors had an opportunity of minutely inspecting the building, with which they were delighted.

The afternoon session was opened at two o'clock, at which hour Mrs. Downie of Burnham, was addressing a meeting of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society. Letters from the various churches were read. The reports were uniformly gay and encouraging. Peddie church reported its building worth $350,000 and declared it was free from debt through the generosity of Thomas B. Peddie. Piscata way church reported having five Sunday schools going, and said the year had been a good one. Rev. Mr. Tains, Mount Bethel, Lyons Farms, New Brooklyn, and the First church of Perth Amboy all sent encouraging messages. Plainfield had a pleasant report and Rahway joined the host in telling how nicely the cause of religion was getting on. Elizabeth's First church had a glowing tale to tell and then there was more music.

Various other churches reports were also heard. Westfield church declared that "the past year had been one of manifold blessing." They had paid off a small floating debt and had made progress in other directions. A harvest of souls had been won. Park avenue church of this city had a steady, earnest, persistent work to report, which, however, showed no special result.

After that there were short address by representatives of the various institutions connected with the Baptist church. Then came supper, served down stairs.

The evening session opened at 7:30 with praise and prayer. First on the programme was the reading of a historical sketch of the Westfield church. At the conclusion Rev. M. H. Pogson, of New Jersey, delivered an interesting address.

The convention will resume this morning. All the reports of the standing committees will be read. To-night Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes of this city will deliver a doctrinal discourse.

Dayton; Guardian, John Messerschmitt; Sentinel, James Davis; Representative to Grand Lodge, Seymour Smith; Alternate, S. C. Baker; Trustees, J. E. Stewart, E. W. Conklin and C. B. Corwin.

The Boys' Form a Bicycle Club.

For some time past boys between the ages of 10 and 16 who ride bicycles have been desiring to initiate their older brothers and form a Boys' Bicycle club. At a meeting held at Dr. Tomlinson's residence on LaGrande avenue yesterday the club was formed and the following officers elected:

V. Green, President; B. Bowers, Vice President; W. Probasco, Secretary; R. Tomlinson, Treasurer; G. Homan, Captain; H. Wills, 1st Lieutenant; H. Johnson, Color-Bearer. Any boy wishing to join the club is requested to call on V. Green, 303 Fifth street, for particulars, between 12 and 1 m, and 6 and 7 p. m.

—A gold hitch key designed for a bride was the suggestive wedding present to her new husband.

Plainfielders to Tent at Northfield.

The World's Students Conference will, at Mr. Moody's invitation, be held at Northfield, Mass., from 25th to July 9th. We quote the following from the advance circular: "The commodious buildings and beautiful grounds of the Northfield Seminary have been placed at the disposal of the conference. It commands one of the grand views in New England. The Connecticut River flows closely by, and the mountains are on every hand. It is the birthplace and present home of Mr. Moody; and is rapidly becoming the leading resort of Christian workers.

Students will converge their from all quarters of the Globe. It will have a widely varied programme and will be characterized more by its practical conferences and spiritual addresses than by actual study. To read what a great man has said is well; it is better to go and hear him. At these conferences one may catch a living inspiration from some of the grandest men of the age.

The singing will be made one of the strongest features of the conference. It is a mistake to suppose that these gatherings are given up to an uninterrupted series of meetings. The afternoons are reserved for recreation. Every facility is afforded for tennis, singles, doubles, tournaments, etc., base ball, foot ball, track athletics, swimming, boating, tramping and sleeping. At Northfield, as last year, there will be a jovial Fourth of July celebration and field day. Other interesting special athletic features will be introduced. A. A. Stagg of Yale will have charge of the athletics.

The total expense at Northfield (including board, room and registration fee) will be $15, for each delegate."

Reckless Driving.

Reckless driving in this city has become so common that it is scarcely noticed. The people who spend a considerable part of each day in the streets, and the storekeepers in the routine of daily business have long since accepted the condition which most them when ever it is necessary to step from pavement to crosswalk. Yesterday a little boy who was crossing Central avenue and Second street had a narrow escape from a team of horses but fortunately he escaped serious injury. The drivers of vehicles seems to forget that in crossing the street the pedestrian has the right of way, and that if he or she is run over the driver is liable to a heavy fine or imprisonment. It is about time that people have educated the pedestrians to relinquish their exclusive rights to the streets. At almost any hour of the day a person standing at the corner of North and Park avenues or near the post office will notice persons dodging to get out of the way of carriages. It is a wonder that more accidents do not occur. The police are vigilant in this matter, but the drivers seem to escape their eyes, and consequently very few arrest are now made.

Chicken Thieves at Bernardsville.

The residents of Bernardsville have had their hen-roosts robbed from night to night by the Italian laborers employed on the work of building the Pospack extension of the Passaic and Delaware branch of the D. L. & W. road.

Many persons have lost all they have, they possess. Detective McKenna, of the Lackawanna, was advised, and several dusky sons of sunny Italy are now under shadow and may get a taste of Jersey justice.

AN INDIGNANT CORRESPONDENT.

Angry (?) at The News' Criticisms of His Poem.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—I sent you a poem last week and asked you to publish it in your paper. You declined, and returned it to me with the crushing reply that I was no poet, and that you "could turn out better poetry out of a sausage machine." Now, I want to be candid, and I propose to show up your attempt to throttle budding genius. Publish this card and the following poem in your advertising column and charge me your full advertising rates.

Yours, ROGERS,
and his brother.

THE POEM.

I stood upon the ocean's sandy beach,
And with a reed I wrote upon the sand these words:
"Agnes, I love thee!"
But the briny tides and the waves rolled mountains high,
And blotted out the fair impression,
Cruel waves, treacherous sand, fragile reed!
No longer will I trust to thee!
But from the highest mountain peak I'll pluck the tallest pine,
And, diving in the crater of Vesuvius, with it I will write
Upon the lava and burnished heavens these tender words:
"Rogers Bros. are holding the biggest low price sale of shoes ever held in Plainfield. They are now offering better shoes for less than ever cheap shoes would almost take your breath away."
And we would like to see any dog-gone wave wash that out.
Down for a bargain. Cut this out and bring it to us, it is worth 25 cents to you. For every purchase of $3 worth at one time, if you bring this ad., to us we will allow you a reduction of 25 cents. If you want $15 worth of shoes or repairing or both secure five of these ads's and we will allow you $1.25 for them. This will hold good until July 1st. Remember, we carry a full line of the best shoes that can be had in all widths and styles at low prices, and do fine repairing. ROGERS BROS., successors to D. F. Randolph, 19 West Front street.

Farmers' Contest Stores.

The thriving and 1st little town of Warren, Huntington county, Ind., has a prospect of being swept out of existence because the farmers of that region have boycotted it. It drew its life from the rural trade, and now that the Farmers' Mutual Benefit association have decreed that they will not trade there any more, blank ruin is to be the fore. The village newspaper has already suspended, and the threat is to skip the tricounty fair this year. That would indeed be a calamity.

The F. M. B. A. desired the merchants of Warren to enter into a contract to let their members have goods at certain specified rates. The merchants refused to do this, hence the trouble. It is now a question which can hold out the longer.

The F. M. B. A. should remember the experience of the grangers with contract stores. If the merchant agrees to let the farmers' society have goods at rates below those which he gives other customers, he does an injustice to the other customers which they will not endure. On the contrary they would quickly leave a merchant who should thus discriminate against them. Moreover, farmers would never have any certainty that the merchant was only making a given per cent. off them. There is such a thing known among merchants and others as double invoicing. Some wholesale men who sell to the retailer furnish such rascally double sheets when desired.

Why do not the farmers start co-operative stores of their own and be their own middlemen? This plan would work injustice to nobody, and would in time become as profitable to farmers as the great London and Rochdale stores have become to their stockholders. There would be, perhaps, failure in some instances at first, but success and profit would almost certainly come finally to those who, taking the English co-operative store system as their model, should cautiously build on it a farmers' co-operative supply house. A store like some farmers have of running in debt annually for groceries and dry goods would be fatal to it.

A Great Reform.

The Traction company of Philadelphia have posted conspicuously in their street cars the following notice: "Spitting on the floor is positively forbidden." As there is now no place left except the walls and windows for the expectorators to operate on, and as public opinion would probably deter even them from spitting on walls and windows before people, it seems likely that the Traction company may be able to make a beginning of breaking up the most disgusting habit of the American nation. Conductors have the right to put anyone off the car who refuses to obey the law, a right which it is to be hoped, in the interest of national decency, they will use without stint.

Unpleasant is not the word for it when a man with polished boots or a lady with a delicately tinted gown takes a seat in a car and finds himself or herself after a moment spattered and stained with disgusting saliva from the mouth of some creature who has regard for neither deity nor man. The spitting habit is not a necessity. It is only a habit, and a habit that weakens digestion and injures the salivary glands and nervous system. The more a man expectorates the faster the saliva will be secreted, and the more he will want to expectorate. The way to stop it is to stop it.

In The Cosmopolitan Magazine Mr. Murat Halstead gives it as his lively and cheerful opinion that the world's gold mines do not begin to be all discovered yet, but that "we shall, before many years or months or days, find gold in abundance unexampled." When a man talks that way it is a sign the world is going well with him. M. H. remarks further: "It is not necessary that a mountain of the yellow metal shall be revealed. A few gorges where it crops out will be sufficient. Then gold will be poured upon the world in torrents, as silver has been. That would work a beneficent revolution, and one good thing, end the silver question in its present form."

The United States supreme court has rendered a decision in the dressed beef case from Minnesota which is of interest to the country. Minnesota passed a law that all fresh meats sold in that state should be slaughtered within the state and inspected within twenty-four hours of being killed. This would have prevented the dressed beef men from selling their wares in Minnesota. The case was, therefore, carried to the United States supreme court. There the Minnesota law was decided to be contrary to the United States constitution, and, therefore, null and void. Now the Minnesotans can eat refrigerator beef and pork.

CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

Two Cases That Are at Present Agitating Congress.

SOUTH CAROLINA ELECTION LAWS

The House Committee's Chairman Says They Are Unconstitutional—A Voter May Be Disfranchised for Failing to Register. The Clayton-Breckinridge Case.

WASHINGTON, June 4.—Mr. Rowell (Ills.), the chairman of the house committee on elections, has completed the report of the committee in favor of seating Miller (Republican), who contested the seat of Elliot (Democrat), the present member from the Seventh district of South Carolina. The report is unanimous. It sustains the contest that the registration and election law of the state of South Carolina is unconstitutional, and grounds for this statement are set forth at length. Promising his argument in this connection, and showing that the constitution of the United States provides that persons shall be disfranchised for murder, treason or felony only, Mr. Rowell synopsizes the South Carolina law, which he claims is in direct opposition to the federal constitution. This law, it is stated, provides that any person who was qualified to vote after the year 1881 and failed so register shall be forever disfranchised. It is also provided that persons who failed to register at the first election after acquiring residence in the state and persons who negotiated their registration certificates for a consideration also should be disfranchised.

Ballot Box Stuffing Charged.

The report states that the committee did not throw out votes in dispute because of the unconstitutionality of the state election law, however, but because of ballot box stuffing, shifting of ballot boxes so as to deceive the Republican voters, and other alleged frauds. The committee decides that according to fair and true counting most favorable to Elliot, giving him the benefit of the doubts, Miller, the contestant, still has a majority of 731 votes, while, according to the strict legal method of counting, Miller's majority is placed at 1,448.

Mr. Wilson (Mo.) will make a minority report for the Democratic members of the committee.

The Clayton-Breckinridge Case.

The sub-committee of the house committee on elections charged with investigating the contested election case of John M. Clayton (deceased) against Clifton R. Breckinridge from Arkansas, heard argument by Attorney General Garland in favor of the application made by Mr. Breckinridge for the further hearing of testimony. After Mr. Garland had finished the committee decided that it would not hear the large number of witnesses that Mr. Breckinridge asked to have called because full opportunity had been given for hearing their testimony while the sub-committee was in Arkansas and because as the case had been closed with the consent of the contestee there was no reason why it should be reopened. The sub-committee decided however to allow Gen. Powell Clayton and Dr. Taylor, of Arkansas, who are now in Washington, and Mr. Breckinridge, to testify. Mr. Breckinridge requested that several witnesses be summoned from California to testify as to the theory that Thomas Hooper killed Col. Clayton, but this was overruled by the sub-committee on the ground that these witnesses had telegraphed full statements while the sub-committee was in Arkansas.

To Secure Pure Teas.

WASHINGTON, June 4.—The committee on ways and means held a meeting yesterday and decided to make a favorable report on a bill amending the law to prevent the importation of adulterated and spurious teas. The bill provides for the examination of imported teas and creates officers for that purpose. Several technical amendments were made to the bill at the suggestion of the treasury department.

Congressional Campaign Committee.

WASHINGTON, June 4.—The Republican congressional campaign committee organized by the election of Representative James J. Belden, of New York, chairman, and Mr. Schuyler S. Olds, of Michigan, private secretary to Senator Stockbridge, secretary. An executive committee, of which Mr. Belden is chairman, was also appointed.

The Husband's Revenge.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., June 4.—Charles E. Lewis, of Jacksonville, was under arrest at Cortland, charged with grand larceny by William C. Chandler, with whose wife the prisoner ran away about a month ago. It is explained by the husband that when his wife deserted him some of Lewis' friends held him until three trunks could be got out of the house. The examination takes place today and a number of witnesses from Philadelphia are present. Mrs. Chandler declares that she will not return with her husband under any circumstances, but threatens to go back and have him prosecuted for violation of the revenue law if he appears against Lewis.

New York State Laws.

ALBANY, June 4.—Bills filed at the secretary of state's office today are as follows: Relative to burial plots in Van Cortlandt and Pelham bay parks, New York city; to provide for short terms for deeds and mortgages; to provide for water supply in Glens Falls; appropriation for state armory at Utica; for improving streets in Saratoga Springs; regarding heirs of Roger Floed, in Troy; amending Wendell's charter; College point charter amendments regarding taxation.

Highway Robbery on the Beach.

SEABRIGHT, N. J., June 4.—George Faddy, aged 17, of Elizabethport, was found unconscious on the beach here yesterday morning, bleeding from wounds on the head. He recovered sufficiently to say that he had been assaulted and robbed by a man he knew only as Billy, employed as a painter at Long Branch. His assailant, after beating him with an iron bar, tried to drown him. Faddy's injuries are serious. His assailant is under arrest at Long Branch.

Cheadle Pulls of Renomination.

KOKOMO, Ind., June 4.—Judge Daniel Waugh, of Tipton county, was nominated on the fifty-first ballot last night to succeed Congressman Cheadle in the Ninth district. Up to the fifty-first ballot the vote stood: Cheadle, 80; Waugh, 55; Littlefield, 50; Lindley, 65. On the fifty-first ballot Waugh received 138 votes.

New Haven Masons Happy.

NEW HAVEN, June 4.—The trouble between the builders and the masons has been settled, the builders agreeing to pay first class masons forty-five cents per hour. This is generally acceptable to the men.

HOW JOHN GETS HERE.

Consul Myer Explains the Ways of the Heathen Chinee.

WASHINGTON, June 4.—The secretary of the treasury sent to the senate dispatches from L. W. Myer, United States consul at Victoria, B. C., and A. Willard, United States consul at Guaymas, Mexico, in regard to the smuggling of Chinese into the United States. Mr. Myer, under date of May 16, reports in detail the passage of seventy-two Chinese into the United States from Victoria on the night of May 12.

These Chinese were taken across the Straits of Fuca by the steam propeller North Star, a British craft. On May 7 she took out a clearance for Saturne Island, and then hid away in her anchorage until the night of May 12. The Chinese were taken aboard about midnight, and then she slipped out of the harbor. The Canadian collector was on the lookout for her, but she got away safely.

The following day at noon Inspector of Ports George H. Young hired a tug and went in pursuit. His search for her was unsuccessful, and the vessel eluded also Collector Bradshaw at Port Townsend. Whom Mr. Myer notified of the facts in the case. The North Star passed the straits Monday night and put her twenty-two passengers on the American shore. She came into port on the morning of the 15th, and Mr. Myer surmised that at the time of his writing she was working up another trip.

"She packs her human freight like sardines in a box in her small hold," writes Mr. Myer, "until she gets out of the harbor, when they are allowed a breath of fresh air on deck. The charge is $23 per head passage money."

A Bloodthirsty Marshal.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., June 4.—Reports received here state that Bud Lindsay, deputy United States marshal, shot and killed Kilts, a distiller, in Campbell county. Lindsay went to Kilts' house to arrest him to sell him a smaller quantity of whisky than ten gallons. The distiller's son, thinking his father in danger, threw a stone at Lindsay. Lindsay then attempted to shoot Kilts, but his party took his pistols from him. They left, and when a mile away Lindsay asked for his pistols, saying that he would do no harm with them. He got them and immediately rode back to Kilts' house. The latter saw him come and locked the door, but Lindsay broke it down and shot Kilts twice, killing him instantly. He then attempted to shoot the boy, but missed him and hit a little girl, slightly wounding her. It is reported that Lindsay's party arrested him and gave him over to the sheriff of the county. Lindsay is a desperate character, having murdered a prominent citizen of Campbell county five years ago, but escaped through lack of evidence.

An Insurance Company's Suit.

NEW YORK, June 4.—The trial of the suit of the Union Insurance company, of Philadelphia, against the Continental Insurance company, of New York, was begun here in the United States circuit court. The suit is brought for $80,000. Thirty-one cases of action are cited, chiefly on the ground of misrepresentation in 1884 by Lorenzo Dimick, an agent of both companies, who was convicted in Buffalo and sentenced to five years' imprisonment, but who fled to Canada pending appeal, and died there. The trial will last a week.

An Electric Sugar Suit.

NEW YORK, June 4.—James Moore, the assignee of the Liverpool shareholders of the defunct Electric Sugar Refining company, is suing J. M. Robertson and W. H. Cotterill, members of the company, to recover $3,493 put into the company, it is claimed on their representations. The defense is that Robertson and Cotterill were victims of fraud as well as the plaintiffs, and were not responsible for the losses. The trial was begun yesterday.

BAYNE'S DECLINATION.

It Causes a Sensation in Allegheny County

AND IS BITTERLY DENOUNCED.

Friends of the Congressman's Opponents for the Nomination Say That the Selection of Col. Stone Cannot Stand—Another Convention Demanded.

PITTSBURG, Pa., June 4.—The various Republican conventions were held yesterday. Hon. John Dalzell was renominated for congress in the Twenty-second district without opposition.

Probably the greatest political sensation that has ever taken place in Allegheny county occurred in the Twenty-third congressional district convention. The entirely unexpected action of Hon. Thomas M. Bayne in declining renomination to congress after having defeated his opponent, George Shiras, five to one, and the subsequent nomination of Col. William A. Stone to succeed him, created an immense sensation all over the county and rumors of all descriptions are in circulation.

Bitterly Denounced.

Col. Bayne's action is bitterly denounced by many prominent Republicans. George Shiras, Col. Bayne's opponent, now claims that he is entitled to the nomination and threatens to cause trouble. In accordance with the rules of the county committee, prominent Republicans, friends of both Shiras and Bayne, claim Stone's nomination is irregular and cannot stand. Mr. Bayne's friends are refusing the nomination was that he was worn out, unable longer to work. He had worked for the honor of the position as a vindication, had succeeded and was satisfied. Mr. Bayne says he decided upon this course several months ago, but told no one, but his wife. After March 4 he will retire to private life and will not again be identified with politics in an official capacity.

Some of the Rumors.

There are, however, rumors to the contrary, one mentioning Mr. Bayne as a Quay compromise candidate for governor and another that he is to be appointed to a foreign mission. Just previous to the close of the convention of the Twenty-third district in Allegheny City George D. Riddle, a prominent attorney, read a series of resolutions censuring Congressman Bayne for his action in declining the nomination in the manner in which he did, and demanding that the county committee call another convention at the earliest possible date. The resolutions were adopted.

The Constitutional Commission.

ALBANY, June 4.—The committee appointed by the constitutional commission to report as to the method of procedure in revising the judiciary article of the constitution held two sessions yesterday, and last night agreed to report, calling for the appointment of five standing committees. One to deal with the jurisdiction of the court of appeals; one concerning the supreme court; one concerning the superior city courts; one concerning county and surrogates' courts, and the fifth to consider miscellaneous questions which may come up. The first two committees shall be composed of eight members, one from each judicial district. The members of the other committees will be named by the president without regard to districts. The committees will be instructed to prepare their respective reports in time for submitting them to the commission when it reconvenes, Aug. 5.

TWO TONS OF POWDER

Exploded by Lightning Near Mansfield, O.

AN INFANT SADLY MUTILATED.

The Queer Also Brings Death to an Insane Woman for Feeble Minded Children at Glenwood, Ia.—Lives Lost and Property Destroyed in Wisconsin.

MANSFIELD, O., June 4.—During a heavy storm yesterday afternoon lightning struck Troop & Avery's powder house, located about a mile east of this city. The house is said to have contained two tons of powder, which exploded, causing a tremendous report. Hundreds of windows in the city were broken, china and glassware were knocked from shelves and people threw from their feet. Many buildings in the vicinity were badly wrecked.

Two frame houses on the opposite side of the street from the magazine were leveled to the ground, scarcely anything remaining to show that they were dwellings.

One of the houses was vacant; the other was occupied by Henry Roost, his wife and two children. The husband was absent at the time of the explosion. A 6-months-old baby was instantly killed, it being mutilated beyond recognition. The mother and an other child, 2 years old, were blown over a hundred feet away and are thought to be fatally injured.

Bedding remains of the powder house. The bricks are scattered in all directions. Those being found a quarter of a mile distant. The explosion was heard ten miles away. Fully 4,000 people have visited the scene.

IN WESTERN IOWA.

A Chimney Blown Down, Killing Two Feeble Minded Children.

CRESCENT BLUFFS, Ia., June 4.—A terrific storm visited southern Iowa. Rain fell in torrents, and the wind in some localities partook of the nature of a tornado. The storm display was remarkably brilliant, and much live stock was killed by lightning, the wire fences attracting the electric fluid.

At Glenwood the chimney of the Institution for Feeble Minded Children blew down and crashed through the roof, killing two and injuring six others of the inmates. The killed are William Cline, of Clarke county; Wesley Emery, of Monroe county.

The injured are Samuel Askins, of Council Bluffs; William Prather, of Waynesville; Harry Spyker of Benton county; John Swallos, of Dubuque; Edward Sweet, of Lee county, and Frederick Wright, of Fort Dodge. Several of the injured are not expected to live. The flour mill was wrecked and canning factory demolished.

Lives Lost Near Madison.

MADISON, Wis., June 4.—A terrific storm of wind, rain and lightning passed over this city. A perfect deluge of rain fell and telegraph wires were prostrated in all directions. The storm was very severe in the southwestern part of the state. Telegraph lines were prostrated, corn washed out for thousands and many farmsteads are reported. The storm was very heavy east of here also. A man was killed near Oregon, Wis. A tornado occurred near Hay, sixty miles south, on the Chicago, Burlington and Northern, which caused the ditching of an engine and twenty cars of stock. Engineer Cole and St. Paul train. A fireman and a brakeman were killed.

The Damage at Arcadia.

ARCADIA, Wis., June 4.—As the waters about this submerged village recede they show more and more the damage. Many foundations are badly undermined, and houses are racked which at first were thought uninjured. The lumber yards report the loss of over a million feet. The bridge of the Green Bay Railroad company now estimates its loss at $30,000. No trains can reach here for at least three days. One hundred thousand dollars is a low estimate of the loss occasioned by the floods, and it will take many weeks to repair the damage.

Gettysburg Directors.

CARLISLE, Pa., June 4.—The Gettysburg Battlefield Memorial association stockholders elected the following directors to serve the ensuing year: Maj. Gen. S. W. Crawford, Gen. Louis Wagner and J. M. Vandersliee, Philadelphia; Col. Phil W. Hazzard, Monongahela, Pa.; Gen. Henry A. Barnum, New York; Gen. Frank D. Hunt, New Haven, Conn.; Gen. Charles H. Young, Toledo, O.; John C. Linehan, Pensacook, N. H.; Gen. Lucius Fairchild, Madison, Wis.; Col. Wheelock G. Veasey, Rutland, Vt.; Col. George G. Briggs, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Gen. Henry W. Slocum, Brooklyn; Col. John B. Bachelder, Boston; J. Lawrence Schick, Col. Charles H. Buehler, Jacob A. Ziemiller, Calvin Hamilton, Rev. H. W. McKnight, S. S. McSwope, Edward McPherson, Gettysburg, and Dr. C. E. Goldsborough, Hunterstown, Pa.

Stephen B. Elkins' Daughter Married.

NEW YORK, June 4.—Miss Sarah Elkins, eldest daughter of Stephen B. Elkins, and Maj. A. C. Oliphant, of Trenton, N. J., were married last evening at the residence of the bride's father. Rev. Heber Newton officiated. Among the ushers were James Y. Long, of Pittsburg; Richard Colter, Jr., of Greensburg, Pa., and Lieuts. Griffin and Woodward, U. S. N. The wedding was a quiet and very select affair. Among the numerous costly and beautiful presents were gifts from President and Mrs. Harrison, Secretary and Mrs. Blaine, Andrew Carnegie and Gen. Sewell and staff of the New Jersey state militia.

Cheap Baseball in Pittsburg.

PITTSBURG, June 4.—President O'Neil, of the Pittsburg National League club, has decided to put the price of admission at baseball games upon arrival of the Pittsburg Players' League club in this city to play its next series at home. The Pittsburg National League club will play the Cincinnati series scheduled for Pittsburg this week at Cincinnati, and will likely play in Brooklyn July 4 instead of Pittsburg.

To Be Transferred to Montreal.

MONTREAL, June 4.—Arrangements have been completed for the transfer of the Buffalo baseball team of the International league to this city. The regular scheduled game of that team will be played on the Shamrock lacrosse ground here, beginning on Monday next.

Broke the American Record.

They Object to Detectives.

BOSTON, June 4.—The committee appointed by the students' meeting to take action in regard to the recent acts of vandalism at Harvard college in that pearl of their instructions relating to the employment of detectives and called another meeting for last night, at which they tendered their resignations. The second meeting was a stormy one. The committee of investigation was severely condemned by several speakers, but a motion to appoint a committee to give instructions to hire a detective was lost—112 to 134. The meeting then adjourned. It was stated at the meeting that if some decisive action was not taken the faculty would prohibit athletics at the university. The result of the meeting causes much disappointment to friends of Harvard.

Geirichs-Fair.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 4.—Herman Geirichs, of New York, and Miss Theresa Fair, daughter of ex-United States Senator James G. Fair, were married last evening at the home of the bride's mother in this city. The ceremony was celebrated according to the rites of the Roman Catholic church, Archbishop Riordan officiating. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Birdie Fair, Miss Lillie O'Connor, Miss Nellie Jolliffe, Miss Jennie Blair and Miss Belle Crocker. The groom had for best man Hollock and David Barnes, of New York. After the wedding fete the bride and groom left for New York. The wedding dress was a marvel of beauty, costing $3,000.

Preferred Death to Imprisonment.

UTICA, N. Y., June 4.—When the jury in the case of D. Webster Stoddard, who has been on trial for forgery at Herkimer, announced a verdict of guilty, Stoddard arose and went into an anti-room of the court house, pulled a revolver from his pocket and shot himself through the head. It is thought that he will die. The case is the most sensational ever tried in Herkimer county and the unexpected tragedy at its close creates great excitement.

ABDUCTED BY HER FATHER.

Eugene Cowles' Summary Action Causes a Decided Sensation.

CLEVELAND, June 4.—A profound sensation was created here yesterday afternoon by the annonncement that Eugene H. Cowles, eldest son of the late Edwin Cowles, had violently abducted his daughter Florence, a girl of 7 years, and hurried her out of the state in spite of the efforts of the sheriff and his deputies to intercept them. Mr. Cowles, who is about 35 years of age, married Alice, daughter of E. B. Hale, a leading banker of this city, ten years ago.

The marriage did not result happily, and a few months ago Mr. Cowles' conduct was such that his wife refused to live with him any longer and returned to her father. A separation was agreed upon, and since that time Mr. Cowles has lived most of the time at Lockport, where the works of the Cowles Aluminum company, of which he is president, are located. On his frequent visits to this city he has always sent for his daughter, who would usually spend the day with him, in pursuance of the agreement of separation. Mr. Cowles came to the city Monday and in the afternoon went to the residence of his mother on Case avenue, and sent a messenger for Florence.

When she arrived he said he wanted her to go the depot with him, and the peculiarity of his actions aroused the suspicions of Mrs. Chase, his sister, who was present. She insisted on going to the depot with them, and on arriving there Mr. Cowles informed her of his intention to take Florence with him. Mrs. Chase implored him not to do it, and even resisted his efforts to get the girl on the train. A crowd gathered, but Mr. Cowles threatened violence to any one who interfered with him, and succeeded in reaching the car with the girl in his arms just as the train started east. The alarm was at once given and intercepting telegrams and officers quickly followed. It is learned that Mr. Cowles left the train at Conneaut and drove from there across the line into Pennsylvania to be out of the reach of the Ohio officers. The will of Edwin Cowles left $5,000 a year to each of his sons and daughters. In the case of Eugene one-half the amount was secured to his wife. Dissatisfaction with this arrangement is said to be the cause of Eugene's course in abducting his child.

AFTER THE HATFIELDS.

The Outlaws Fortified in a Mountain Pass—Bloodshed Feared.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., June 4.—J. W. Napier, of Pike county, Ky., known along the Big Sandy at Kentucky Bill, has created a big sensation in Logan county among the Hatfields by going before Justice Aldine at Brownstown and swearing out warrants for Anse, Cap, Jonse, and Elliott Hatfield, Thomas Mitchell, Frank Ellis, and Clayton Bishop, charging them with having murdered Dan Stratton at Browne town on the night of May 17 last.

Stratten, who is one of the McCoy leaders, lived over the line in Pike county, and was on his way to this city. He stopped over night at Brownstown, and the next morning his dead body was found lying beside the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad track, about a mile from the town. It is known that Bishop was in Brownstown that night, but as he is now known none of the others of the accused were in the vicinity.

It seems the object in swearing out the warrants was to secure aid in the arrest of the Hatfields, after which it would be easy to turn them over to the Kentucky authorities, who would be only too glad to get their clutches on them. Stratton was under indictment in Logan county for a felony at the time of his death.

The Hatfields are well fortified in a mountain pass, and bloodshed is inevitable.

General Synod of America.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., June 4.—The general Synod of the Reformed church in America began its eighty-fourth regular session here today. There are about 300 clerical and lay delegates. These delegates come from the twenty-five classes which make up the particular synods of New York, Albany, Chicago and New Brunswick. The denomination has 546 churches, 600 ministers and 90,000 communicants. A report of the special committee upon the proposed union of the Reformed church in America and the Reformed church in the United States will be discussed. This committee was appointed four years ago. The special committee upon hymn books appointed two years ago will also report.

Sixty-five Years of Wedded Life.

BEDFORD, Mass., June 4.—Monday Alfred Bacon and Susanna Reed Bacon celebrated the sixty-fifth anniversary of their marriage, which took place in 1825. Mr. Bacon is 88 and his wife is 84 years of age. They have lived in Bedford and have lived here all their lives. Both families are associated with the early history of the town, the Bacon ancestors having settled here before the King Philip war.

Austin, aged 79 years, was sent to jail yesterday, there to remain until discharged by due process of law or until he pays $6,254.04 belonging to the estate of Henry L. Hall to William J. Hall, the present administrator of the estate. The ex-judge was made administrator of the Hall estate in 1876 and ten years, when he was removed. Henry Hall married a girl in Oswego, N. Y., and perished with her in the Ashtabula (O.) horror. Austin says he is penniless and believes the claim he owns 30,000 acres of land in the south. The estate was worth about $25,000.

Fitch, Grace Daggett, Onias R. Dodge and Constance H. Blake. There was but one prize awarded, the Ellen Childe Walker prize, awarded to Miss Constance H. Blake. Following the graduation exercises lunch was served to the friends of the graduates, the graduation thus terminating in a society event.

The Little One Perished in the Flames.

ASHLAND, Pa., June 4.—The frame dwelling of James Fogarty, near Big Mine Run, a few miles from here, was destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon. The flames were started by Fogarty's 6-year-old son, who was playing in a second story room. The fire spread so rapidly that the child could not be reached and he perished. Four adjoining houses, owned by John Carl and Peter Joyce, were also destroyed. The loss will reach $12,000.

SAVED BY A PRO READER.

What Might Have Appeared in a Certain Newspaper.

Morn newspaper office the business it is to record gentleman one of the live stock markets the finding from the young man to whose sits said to report a wedding ceremony, he are graphic writers and enjoy that Rhode of expression characteristic of writers journalists. Both young men knew of good and their commendable is not to like. Not long ago the wedding reporter was suddenly called out of the office and left in the middle of the table several sheets of paper on which was a description of a fashionable wedding. These sheets were gathered up by the live stock writer when he finished his report, and the two stories became mixed. This is what the zealous care of a proof reader, later in the evening, saved from reaching the public eye:

The church was elaborately decorated with holly and evergreen, and the altar was hidden in a wealth of flowers. Out of the recesses of rare tropical plants, and from the ceiling hung fifteen western veals, which at this time of the year are scarce and correspondingly dear at six to eight and a half cents a pound. There was also an active demand for choice lambs, and farmers east of the Mississippi river can profitably turn to sheep raising and cater to the bride, who wore a gown of white corded silk, a creation of Worth's, with pearl ornaments.

"Then came the maid of honor, the cousin of the bride, Miss Henrietta Blower, of Chicago, wearing a dress of white tulle, with diamond ornaments, and she was followed by a small bunch of Montana sheep, which bleated most piteously as they were driven on board and shipped to the winter hotels in Bermuda. They will there be cut as train and slightly deodorized, and after the rest of the party had reached the rail the minister turned and said impressively: I cannot but more than 65¢ coats for state vests, but cablegrams from London quote refrigerated beef at a price that will enable me to pay $4.90 for a car of choice Indiana beeves, and hearing this there was a rush for the young married couple, and the bride fell into the arms of her father, who is known to bear a striking resemblance to—a Connecticut ox weighing 1,875 pounds. The married hen's face lit upward turn, and the guests, who numbered about 200, were served with a sumptuous dinner at the house of the bride.—New York Times.

Not So Bad After All.

First Pretty Girl (angrily)—That fellow across the aisle ought to be horsewhipped. He has been staring at you for the last ten minutes.

Second Pretty Girl—Why, my dear, you are mistaken. He has been looking steadily at you, excepting when you turned, in his direction, and then he would look at me to avoid being caught.

First Pretty Girl (sentimentally)—I wonder—who—he—is.—New York Weekly.

A Graceful Compliment.

Miss Wellalong (who hopes by making light of her years to be thought quite young)—Really, I prefer to look on. I am getting too old to dance, you know.

Mr. Affable (who prides himself on always saying the right thing)—Oh, some how, you're not old. I don't believe you are within ten years of as old as you look! —Boston Times.

His Labor Was Not in Vain.

Algie—You were out shooting today, weren't you?

Cholly—Ya-as.

Algie—Did you bag anything?

Cholly—Ya-as.

Algie—What?

Cholly—My trousers.—Munsey's Weekly.

Strangers Yet.

Hardup—Do you see this twenty dollar William, Dumley?

Dumley—I see that $20 bill; but why do you call it William?

Hardup—Because I am not on sufficiently familiar terms with such an article to address it as Bill.—Chatter.

Very Considerate.

"Look here, you have been calling upon the family of Col. S——for several years; how is it you don't marry one of his five daughters?"

"How—you see I should not like to disappoint the others."—Humoristische Blatter.

One Way to Look at It.

At the Party—Hans, put down that cake at once; have you no manners?

"Hush, don't speak so loud, papa; you ought to be glad that no one saw how badly I have been brought up."—German Exchange.

Two Roasts in One.

Husband (after a sudden change in Wall street)—I've lost my all. You'll have to kill the parrot for dinner.

Wife—I'll kill the big cat. She devoured the parrot this morning. — Detroit Free Press.

The Man Who Heard It Before.

You tell him a joke you relied on as new,
He smiles in a supercilious way;
From a comedy new you recite him a bit,
He knows it and sits on the play.
You give him a story that never yet failed
To set all who heard in a roar;
He nods half approval and turns him away,
And murmurs, "I've heard it before."

The girl whom you woo in your tenderest tone,
Whose hours you are seeking to gain,
Listens coldly to all you may have to protest,
Seeming only to wish you'd refrain.
You seek for some phrase not totally trite,
And even the theme of the weather,
But all of no use, and you bid her good-by—
You see she has heard it before.

How sad it must be to go onward like this,
With nothing on earth to enjoy,
And never make any one happy yourself
And only find fault to employ!
His life, like an orange whose juices are gone,
Is dry, empty shell, and no more,
And he is ready to be planted and blessed—
The man who has heard it before.
—Washington Post.

Crowded Out.

"I called on Mrs. Snap today and found her bathing the baby in the washtub. Haven't they a bathroom?"

"Yes, but her husband is an amateur photographer."—Life.

"Defying the Statutes."

"Squar' Jackson," as he was called from having held the office of justice of the peace for over so many years in a small town in Missouri, came into the village one evening from his farm, a couple of miles out, and reported that two suspicious characters had been seen looking around his place, and he wanted help to go back and capture them. As the constable was out of town, four or five of us young fellows, who were guests at the hotel at the time, at once and volunteered for the expedition. When we reached his place his wife came out with the information that she had seen the men enter the barn. This meant that they were after the squire's pacing mare, and the crowd wanted to close in at once and capture them.

"No, gentlemen, it wouldn't be regular and accordin' to law," protested the squire. They are simply trespassers now, and trespassing ain't enough of a crime to demand for choice lambs, and farmers east of the Mississippi river can profitably turn to sheep raising and cater to the bride, who wore a gown of white corded silk, a creation of Worth's, with pearl ornaments.

"Then came the maid of honor, the cousin of the bride, Miss Henrietta Blower, of Chicago, wearing a dress of white tulle, with diamond ornaments, and she was followed by a small bunch of Montana sheep, which bleated most piteously as they were driven on board and shipped to the winter hotels in Bermuda. A Romance Spoiled.

Two lovers went to the baseball game
One afternoon in May.
He was a "crank"; she never had seen
Professionals play.

He faithfully tried to explain it all.
She tried to understand;
But the more he talked, the less she knew
Why he thought the game was "grand."

He cheered, he dueled, he yelled "Hi! hi!"
She calmly looked about;
And if any one made a three base hit,
She asked if that was out.

She tried her best to keep the score,
But when the game was done
He found that whatever a foul was his
She had given the man a run.

It dampened his ardor to have her say:
"Why doesn't the umpire bat?"
And each question she asked diminished his love,
Though he wouldn't have owned to that.

Till at last she asked in her guileless way,
"Which side is playing now?"
He broke the engagement then and there,
And now they don't even bow.
—Somerville Journal.

A Short Stop.

She—Did a big, fat grasshopper pass here a minute ago?

He (with a gulp)—No, he stopped.—Texas Siftings.

His Terms.

Mrs. De Fashion—I give a little reception next Thursday evening, and I would like some music, piano solos particularly. What would be your terms?

Professor Pianissimo—Ed! I go sure simply as a musician, and blay my selections und leave, I charge twenty-fife tollars; but ast I must go as a guest and spend as whole evenings talking to you pack of fools, I charge vifty tollars.—New York Weekly.

A Test of Memory.

Mrs. De Brown (of Chicago)—Now that I am divorced again I don't know whether to resume the name of my last husband, or the one before the last, or the one before that, or the one—

Friend—Why not resume your maiden name?

Mrs. De Brown—That's a good idea. I believe I will if I can remember it.—New York Weekly.

A Waste of Money.

Husband—Well, my dear, what did the magnetic physician say to you?

Wife—He says I am a sick woman, and that my nervous system is not in equilibrium. He says I am too positive.

Husband—Humph! I could have told you that and saved a half guinea.—Exchange.

An Industrious Boy.

Mrs. Pangle—How industrious your boy is. I saw him digging in the garden just now, I wish I could get our Freddy to work like that.

Mrs. Cumso (with a sigh)—He's digging bait to go fishing.—Munsey's Weekly.

Rather Broad.

Chelly—They say that excessive coffee drinking leads to softening of the brain.

Miss Snyder—I suppose you regret now that you have been such a slave to the habit.—Drake's Magazine.

A Kitchen Gardener.

Lady—Have you any oyster plant seeds?

Grocer—Yes, ma'am.

Lady—Well, send me two or three dozen, and, mind you, I wish to raise blue points. —Detroit Free Press.

Youthful Modesty.

Mr. Smith (to neighbor's son who is dining with him)—Well, sonny, what part of the chicken would you like?

Boy—The whole of it.—Detroit Free Press.

Terrible!

"Ah, mam'selle, you are really beautiful this evening. That rosy mouth, those heavenly eyes, those hands, those feet—oh, they're all immense!"—Filegende Blaetter.

Well Known.

She—Do you ever see your name in the papers?

He—Yes, occasionally. My name is John Smith.—Detroit Free Press.

M'SWAT'S TROUBLE.

Wherein McSwat Resembled Job in His Afflictions.

The misguided robin chirped cheerfully among the frost bitten blossoms in the cherry tree, the early bee banged up against the window pane and buzzed profoundly, the neighbors' chickens scratched and cackled with demonical glee in Mrs. McSwat's prematurely aged lettuce bed, and the gentle zephyrs of spring came sneakingly and smilingly on the McSwat dwelling as if he didn't know perfectly well that within two or three hours there would be a deluge of rain, a hailstorm and a cold wave.

"Billiger," said Mr. McSwat's young wife, with a shade of anxiety in her voice and manner, "you seem out of spirits this morning. Won't you have another flannel cake?"

"Do you think, Lobelia," he replied, gloomily, "that flannel cakes will cure a man of low spirits?"

"Don't the ham and eggs suit you, Billiger?" she asked, tenderly.

"Am I making any complaint about the provender?"

"No, you are not complaining. I'd rather you would find fault than sulk. Then I would know exactly what the trouble is. If the coffee isn't strong enough, or the ham is too fat, the hens haven't used to get it at home, why in mercy's name don't you"—

"Lobelia, will you oblige me by checking this rapturous gush of solicitude? I'm not kicking up any fuss over the confounded grub, am I?"

"I think you—you are just as m—mean as you—you can be!" sobbed Mrs. McSwat. "I do the best I—I can to—to please you, and you speak of my efforts as confounded gr—gr—grub."

Billiger groaned.

"The breakfast is all right, Lobelia," he said. "I've paid a dollar for a worse layout many a time."

"Then what is the matter dear?" urged Mrs. McSwat, drying her tears. "I know there is something wrong. Is it—is it anything I have done or failed to do?"

"Isn't it beginning to look like rain?"

"You know it isn't. Don't try to put me off, Billiger. What is the—"

Why he thought the game was "grand."

He cheered, he dueled, he yelled "Hi! hi!"
She calmly looked about;
And if any one made a three base hit,
She asked if that was out.

She tried her best to keep the score,
But when the game was done
He found that whatever a foul was his
She had given the man a run.

It dampened his ardor to have her say:
"Why doesn't the umpire bat?"
And each question she asked diminished his love,
Though he wouldn't have owned to that.

Till at last she asked in her guileless way,
"Which side is playing now?"
He broke the engagement then and there,
And now they don't even bow.

Keeping Mosses Down.

The colored people in a small town in Georgia had gathered at their church to hold funeral services over the remains of a woman who had died a couple of days before, and the ceremonies were about to begin when the bereaved husband, who was a large, powerful man, beckoned to one of the men standing in the vestibule to follow him to the horse shed in the rear of the church. When they had arrived there the bereaved turned on him with:

"See heah, Moses, I wants an understandin' wid yo' 'befo' dis funeral goes any further."

"What is it, Julius?" asked the other.

"Las' week, when we buried Henry Carter's wife, yo' was right at hand. Yo' crowded yo'self up to de front. When de weepin' begun yo' set yo'self to work an' moaned an' took on until Henry hadn't no show 'tall.' Some of de white folks reckoned dat was de bereaved husband."

"I dun couldn't help it, Julius."

"Yo' couldn't? Well, now, let me give yo' a pinter. Lucinda was my wife an' she died on my hands. I'se de bereaved wid me, an' I'se got to foot all de 'spenses. Relief for the Fighting Editor.

Angry Visitor—I want to see the editor of this sheet, sir. He accuses me this morning of being a briber and a ballot box stuffer, sir.

The Modern Muse.

He sang of the balmy spring time breeze,
Of the sunlight gleaming thro' the trees,
Of loving couples and kissing bees,
Of April showers and sunsets red;
"Chirpiest a chestnut," the editor said.

He sang of this wild and wintry sea,
Of a gentle maiden waiting he be free,
With snow-soaked cot and breakers a-lee;
And how she'd die if they sundered her hand;
"This sheet is no morgue," the editor said.

He sang of a maid beyond compare,
With eyes of azure and golden hair,
Loved by a brave young man of worth;
Who fled to the east with him to wed.
"Well! of all the rot!" the editor said.

He sang at last of the city's sins,
And cast off their lasting reproach. Grins,
Their spiderlike webs and their dabbled sins,
And told how all clubs at their coming fled.
"Now, that is a page," the editor said.

CAUGHT IN THE STORM.

DESTRUCTIVENESS ON CRESCENT AVENUE BY ELECTRICITY.

A Trotting Horse Valued at $2,500 Instantly Killed and Its Driver Shocked by the Electric Currents.

At about eight o'clock last evening as Gus. Sadler, a colored man employed by Mr. John Chandler, was returning from the track of the Gentleman's Driving Park with Mr. Chandler's valuable trotter "Rambo" the horse suddenly fell in front of the Crescent avenue church. Mr. Sadler jumped from the sulky in which he was riding and endeavored to assist the animal to its feet. He caught hold of the bridle and was almost knocked down by an electric shock. Further examination revealed the fact that one of the street light wires belonging to the Electric Light Company had been torn from its position on the pole by a limb of a tree and that it was sagging in the roadway. The night was very dark and Mr. Sadler did not notice the wire. The horse became entangled in it and was instantly killed.

Manager William H. Moore of the Plainfield Electric Light Company, in conversation with a News reporter this morning, said: "The wire which killed Mr Chandler's horse was on the regular street lighting circuit and the voltage is necessarily about three times as great as that used for lighting private residences and stores. Another thing to look at is that the horse which was killed was just returning from the race track, where he had been racing, and was wet and greatly excited, and consequently more susceptible to the electric current. I think that if the horse had been going to the track instead of returning from it, and had been quieted in the ordinary way, the accident would not have resulted fatally. The current would have caused him to jump around and he would then free himself from the wires."

The Long and Short of It.

A number of long, short, slim, thick individuals being in doubt which of the foregoing adjectives best described the complete man, determined the question by a game of base ball yesterday on the grounds of the Crescent League. The day was all that could be desired. The sun poured down his genial and inspiriting rays upon the players. Mortimer, with his cornet, marked each brilliant play, and the small but select circle present gave eager attention to the contest.

It is difficult to particularize amid so much excellence, but among the Shorts should be noticed Hoelscher's run on foul tips, batting of Voehl and Sebring, and the base running of Beerbower. On the part of the Longs, Van Winkle, Van Sickle and Winn were most effective at the bat, and the game was decided by a fine two bagger of Leggett. The only double play was made by Keasey assisted by Winn.

The person who attracted the most attention was a gentleman gloved in black which gloves he stretched bewchingly toward every ball. Many changes in positions were made during the game which do not appear in the tabulation below.

Bands of Mercy to Meet.

The seven Bands of Mercy which have been organized in this city will hold a meeting in Reform Hall next Tuesday evening. Address will be made by the Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis and Aaron M. Powell.

Mr. McKinley, the tenor of Rev. Heber Newton's choir, and Mrs. McKinley, a most accomplished pianist, very kindly consented to contribute to the enjoyment of the evening. The little family of the "Home" will also be present and will sing a few selections. There will also be recitations and other services illustrative of the work of the Bands. As the object of the Bands of Mercy is to inculcate kindness in every direction, it is very appropriate that their first public meeting should be pledged for the benefit of dumb animals.

A cordial welcome to come to Reform Hall next Tuesday evening, is extended to all.

State Scholarship.

Examinations will be held in all the counties of the State on Saturday next, June 7, for admission to the college of the State scholarships provided for by the recent act of the Legislature. There are 60 of these scholarships to be filled each year.

Applicants from this Assembly district will be examined by County Supt. Ayres at the Court House, in Somerville, on Saturday, at 9 a. m.

HARDENBERG—THOMPSON.

A Pretty Home Wedding Which Took Place Last Evening.

At seven o'clock last evening at the residence of the bride's parents, Ex-Councilman and Mrs. W. P. Thompson, on the corner of Central avenue and Sixth street, there occurred a very pretty home wedding, uniting Miss Margaret Helen Thompson of this city and Mr. John E. Hardenberg of Newark.

The ceremony was performed under a floral bower and in the presence of about 200 friends of the family, by the Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, the pastor of the First Baptist church.

Miss May Taylor and Miss Beth Thompson were the bridesmaids and Mr. John Conger of Newark acted as best man.

The parlor was profusely decorated with flowers and evergreens.

After the ceremony all present sat down to a banquet which had been prepared by a regular caterer. Dancing was then indulged in, the music being furnished by Prof. Hamilton. The ushers were Messrs Alphonso Wright and Alexander C. Thompson.

Mr. and Mrs. Hardenberg left on a wedding tour, and upon their return they will reside in Newark. They have the best wishes of a large number of friends. The bride was the recipient of many very handsome presents which were displayed in a room on the second floor.

The bride looked beautiful in a dress of white faille and orange blossoms. Miss Taylor and Miss Thompson, the bridesmaids, were dresses of pale blue muil; Mrs. William Thompson, the mother of the bride wore a dress of gray faille; Mrs. Hardenberg, the mother of the groom wore black silk; Miss Clara L. Thompson, Nile green silk: Miss Emma G. Thompson, blue moire; Miss Marion Willett Thompson, white; Miss Minnie Hardenberg, black lace over lavender; Miss Hattie Wright, a cream of the groom, lavender pink silk with point lace.

Among the guests present were: Mr. and Mrs. John M. Hardenberg Philadelphia; Miss Louise Harper Bradley, Waldron, N. Y.; Dr. and Mrs. Freedergast, Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. George Clark, Elizabeth; Mr. W. C. Thompson, Flushing; Mr. Albert Cook, Trenton; Miss Louise Everitt, Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Pomeroy, the Misses Maggie and Emma Pomeroy, Brooklyn; Mrs. A. C. Thomson, Newark; Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Hamilton, Elizabeth; Mrs. Laura C. Mix Meade and Mr. Chas. Anderson, Fort Richmond, S. I.; Miss Ella Turbell, New York; Miss Lena Bateman; Brooklyn; Miss Julia Schock, Mercersburville; Mr. and Mrs. Morgan Turton and Miss Ada A. Fox, Plainfield; the Misses Kate and Ella Martine, Mr. and Mrs. O. T. Waring and two sons; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Waring, Mr. and Mrs. Timpson, Mrs. Yerkes, the Misses Yerkes, of Plainfield; Mrs. Dumar, Mrs. William Brice, Dr. and Mrs. T. M. Bradfield, Newark and many others.

—Plainfield has 28 miles of macadamized roads, which has led to the erection of scores of palatial residences and increased the population nearly fifty per cent. New Brunswick has natural advantages far superior to Plainfield, and should address outside capital more easily. Give us good roads both inside and outside of the city.—New Brunswick Home News. About the only way New Brunswickers will ever be advanced to Plainfielders level and have Plainfield's good roads, city, residence, is to move here and become citizens. As to New Brunswick having any natural advantages superior to Plainfield's? Well, we smile.

BAPTIST CONVENTION.

THE SECOND AND LAST DAY A BUSY ONE.

The Legislature Denounced.—Elections Made.—Plainfielders Prominent.

The delegation to the East Jersey Baptist Association Convention greeted one another with smiling faces in the Peddie Memorial church at Newark yesterday morning, and made preparations for the second and last day of the annual gathering. Previous to the opening of the convention two meetings were in progress. Rev. W. A. Bronson, of Perth Amboy, led an experience meeting and Rev. Dr. Yerkes presided over a conference of the Woman's Home Mission Society.

Moderator Jones opened the convention with prayer shortly after ten o'clock. There was singing, and immediately thereafter an election was held to fill two vacancies in the Board of Trustees of the Disabled Ministers' and Widows' Fund. O. B. Leonard was re-elected and C. E. Sutphen was chosen to succeed Robert Johnson, deceased.

Next year the fiftieth anniversary of the Association occurs and Rev. Dr. Lewis proposition to celebrate it in an exceptional manner was enthusiastically received. Rev. William Rollison, D. J. Yerkes, Geo. Guirey, A. Arm strong. W. W. Boyd and William Hill were appointed a committee to co-operate with the officers of the association in arranging for the jubilee. Rev. J. K. Fowell was chosen to preach the introductory sermon and Rev. A. Armstrong was selected to preach the doctrinal sermon at next year's convention.

Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes was down on the programme for the pastoral discourse. He preached an able sermon on "Regeneration."

The most important action taken during the day was the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, that the action of the Legislature in throwing on the people, against their earnest protest, an act legalizing gambling in the form of pool selling is deserving of the severest reprobation while the noble, generous vote for the petitions of the people of Union county now being demonstrated by the vote thus shrewd, merits an emphatic rebuke on the part of the people of the entire State. And we pledge ourselves to support only that which the State becomes a beneficiary of the bill, as an attempt to debauch the consciences of the people by the legalization of vice is a flagrant violation of the father of lies in his temptation of the Lord Jesus.

The saloon business was ruled over the coals as follows:

Resolved, That in the Judgment of this Association it is still binding on the followers of Christ to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," and as the liquor traffic is confessedly an emanation from the pit of hell, we regard any support to the perpetuation of the liquor traffic by a disciple of Jesus as disloyalty to his Lord, and we esteem it a shameful inconsistency for any to be found in an open stand against the protection of this unmitigated curse.

O. B. Leonard was heartily thanked for his services as standing clerk for five years.

It was reported that there were 291 delegates at the Convention, representing thirty-three churches. The total increase in membership during the year was 666, and the decrease was 466, leaving a net increase of 200. Last year's net increase was 109 less. The present membership is 8,306 and the amount contributed for benevolence during the year is $18,376 93, an increase of $1,877 over the preceding year.

The convention was closed in a fitting manner with prayer and singing, after several addresses had been delivered.

The Story of a Strange Potato.

"A soldier went down south during the war, and in the long siege of Charleston, S. C., was killed. In his breast pocket, nearest his heart, was found a picture of a little girl, a token of his sweetheart, which was buried with him. During the intervening quarter of a century the worms had devoured the soldiers body, and were in time themselves devoured as bait for fishes, food for birds or fowl, or nourishment for plants. It chanced that by the vegetables, to bed forth into some other form of life, to be again reabsorbed and thus live on forever. Thus some fisherman on the coast of the famous city may have eaten a fish that eat a worm that helped to eat every vestige of the remains of the gallant soldier. Some darky may have eaten the fowl, some blue-blooded southron the bird, or yet some lovely southern maiden may have worn on her chaste bosom flowers whose perfumes was produced from the soldier's decaying flesh and bone while some lovely young girl of the new south snapped into her willing ear the same old tale of love the soldier whose blood they both imbibed in the perfume of the flower had told to his sweetheart years before. Or Nature's economy some of the soldier's remains absorbed into the vegetable matter gladdened the eye and appeased the appitite as a plate of potatoes at some good family's table. Around the picture there was the well known copper border cast. The metal on which these pictures were cast was almost indestructible, and so was eaten by rust into dust, but the copper withstood the ravages of time and is all that remains of the soldier and his picture.'

A potato grew at last around the border and was, with a load of potatoes from Charleston, shipped to the markets of Philadelphia for sale by Mrs. Jas. K. Arnold, grocer, of Somerset street, who is responsible for the above story, largely the outcome of his vivid imagination, and in proof of its possible correctness to-day exhibited to us the potato, as he told the fascinated tale.

The circumstance recalls the verse from one of Lord Bulwer Lytton's poems:

"Nothing is lost.
The dew drop on the morning flower
It but exhales
To fall anew in Summer shower."

There were seven indictments set down for trial in the Union County court of general quarter sessions yesterday morning. There were five retractions by defendants, and one trial was postponed on application of the counsel for the defense.

James Kinsella, colored, retracted a former plea of not guilty and pleaded non vult.

In the case of James Pratt, of this city, who was indicted for careless driving, the State entered a nolle pros. The wagon driven by Pratt knocked down a little child and injured it. The prosecutor stated that on examination of the case by State officers satisfied him that Pratt was not reponsible for the injury.

Freeman and John Merrill were tried for assault and battery. Mr. Edward Ward appeared as the counsel.

All other jurors were discharged until Friday.

BALLOT BOX FRAUD.

Chief Justice Beasley of the Supreme Court Gives a Decision.

TRENTON, N. J., June 5 (Special)—Chief Justice Beasley of the Supreme Court today rendered a decision in the case of Robert Conger vs. Patrick Conelly. The case was about the contested election to the office of County Clerk in New Brunswick. Judge Scudder of the Middlesex county court thinking the matter was out of his jurisdiction had it referred to the Supreme Court. Judge Beasley's decision to-day was to the effect that the law of Middlesex county covered the affair. OUR READERS' COLUMN.

A CORRESPONDENT'S STORY OF INTEMPERANCE.

Deploring a Result Which Cannot be Changed at This Time.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—One of the fruits of high license in Plainfield was seen a few days ago on West Second street: A little child about four years old, leading a drunken father. It was hard for the little feet to keep pace with the staggering steps of her (ought to be) guide and protector yet the little thing kept a tight-hold, all unconscious of the sad picture she was making, or the lesson she was teaching the voters of this city, whose influence has brought about this unnatural and deplorable state of things. Let the voters take care that the injury done to these little ones does not come back to them and theirs. HOME PROTECTION.

The Talented Miss Maud Bowers.

The Plainfield public who know our gifted Miss Maud Agnes Bowers, who graduated a few years ago with high honors from the Plainfield High School, and more recently from the Boston school of Oratory, will be pleased to learn that she has taken the first opportunity, to attend a recital by her at Seminary Hall, next Thursday. Miss Marchand who assists her is also a graduate of the famous Boston school of Oratory. Both will be well worth hearing.

A contemporary writes as follows of the method of dentistry used by Dr. Esterbrooke, who is now at 21 West Front street:

Having had 15 teeth extracted yesterday by Dr. Esterbrooke, at his parlors in the Arlington Hotel, Jersey City, I testify in this public manner my hearty appreciation of his services. The operation was entirely painless and absolutely painless and cannot be too strongly endorsed. An operation that ordinarily would have occupied a week was performed in a way that inflicted no suffering whatever.

Here's Another.

This is to certify that Prof. Esterbrook has extracted twenty teeth for me after preparing the gums by the use of his local anesthetic. The operation of extraction is about harmless and I consider the method a boon to all who need teeth extracted.

Angry (?) at The News' Criticisms of His Poem.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—I sent you a poem last week and asked you to publish it in your paper. You declined, and returned it to me with the crushing reply that I was no poet, and that you "could turn out better poetry out of a sausage machine." Now, I won't be crushed, and I propose to show up your attempt to throttle budding genius. Publish this card and the following poem in your advertising column and charge me your full advertising rates.

Yours, ROGERS,
and his brother.

THE POEM.

I stood upon the ocean's sandy beach,
And with a reed I wrote upon the sand these words:
"Agnes, I love thee!"
But the winds came and the waves rolled
And blotted out the fair impression.
Trust waves, treacherous waves, fragile reed!
No longer will I trust to thee!
But from the highest mountain peak I'll pluck
the tallest pine,
And, dipped in the crater of Vesuvius, with it
I will write
Upon the high and burnished heavens these words:
"Rogers lives, are holding the biggest mortgage
On boots and shoes ever sold in Plainfield.
They are now offering boots and shoes so low in prices
That purchasers would almost take your breath away."
And we would like to see any dog-gone wave
wash that out.

Don't miss this bargain. Cut this out and bring it to us, it is worth 25 cents to you. For one dollar and this card we will sell one shine. If you will bring this ad. to us we will allow you a reduction of 25 cents. If you want $15 worth of shoes or repairing or both sewed five of these ads's and we will allow you $1.25 for the same. Senator Carlisle is already at home in his new seat.

It is said to be a pure love match that of Miss Clara Ward, aged 17, of Detroit, with Prince de Cansman Chimay, or whatever his accordion plaited name is, of Belgium. But how can anybody tell whether it is a love match or not, when the girl has $2,000,000 in her own right? At any rate, it is safe to say the Prince de Camomile Catamaran was not so enveloped in the love cloud that he was at any moment unable to peep over the edge of it and see that it had an ample silver lining in the shape of marriage settlements.

When persons unused to political power come suddenly into it the wild and impracticable laws they make in the beginning somewhat legislation gone crazy. Now that the farmers, through organization, will probably have strong influence in the fall elections, journals that desire to be funny at their expense are recommending them to legislate that every hill shall have at least one bushel of potatoes and to declare that potato bugs are hereby abolished, etc. This is funny, oh, immensely funny. But would it not surprise these writers who are straining themselves to be witty to find that the farmers legislate soberly, cautiously and wisely?

The Louisiana Lottery.

In 1869 the Louisiana State Lottery was chartered by the legislature for twenty-five years. It expires by limitation Dec. 31, 1893. It has meantime gained such power that it is said to practically own the state of Louisiana. Its original shares of $100 each are now reputed to be worth $1,200 a share, and its total assets amount to $12,000,000. This is controlled by a private corporation, consisting of some 20 men, who divide among themselves the enormous profits and keep their mouths shut.

Strenuous efforts will be made to have the charter renewed in '93. Meantime the Anti-lottery League of Louisiana have sprung up, who believe the Louisiana lottery is the deadliest curse and degradation to their fair state. They have sent a circular to every part of the Union, begging the assistance of good people to help them put down this powerful enemy of society. They quote among other things the following from Justice Grier and Chief Justice Waite:

> Experience has shown that the common forms of gambling are comparatively innocuous when placed in contrast with the widespread pestilence of lotteries. The former are confined to a few persons and places, but the latter infest the whole community; it enters every dwelling; it reaches every class; it preys upon the hard earnings of the poor, and it plunders the ignorant and simple.—(Justice Grier, in 8 How., 281.) And also: They (lotteries) are a species of gambling, and a source of the most pernicious evils. Experience has shown that the checks and balances of a well ordered community, Society built on such a foundation would almost inevitably bring forth a population of speculators and gamblers, living on the expectation of what they call the casting of lots, or by lot, chance or clairvoyance. "It might be regarded" as them from the accumulations of others.—Chief Justice Waite.

Ah There, Stanley!

For a good many years Stanley has caused it to be understood that he was a woman hater. No carpet knight he. Elephants, negroes, African fever, malaria and quinine were all his meat, but women—no! He even assumed a languidly bored air in presence of his best friend and patroness, Baroness Burdett Coutts. He would not talk to women, he said. He could think of nothing to say to them, this hero of four trips to Africa, two of them in the capacity of savior and rescuer. Women, confound 'em, bored him even more than the dinners—these silly creatures, with their everlasting tendency to fall down and worship him and fall in love with him.

Such strong minded sentiments did honor to the manly breast that had been bared to a hundred perils and immediately thousands of downy youths thought what a grand thing it would be to turn woman hater, too, and assume a bored expression and wish the women would only let them alone.

Now comes the story that he, Stanley, the woman hater, is soon to be married to a fair protegee of Baroness Burdett Coutts. Moreover, the proposed marriage is but before he entered the Dark Continent last time, grouped after a few weeks' acquaintance, and was surprised no end to be flatly rejected. He was very indignant, the story goes. Perhaps that made him conclude that he was not a success in conversation with women. The reason Miss Tennant gave for declining his hand was that she could not abide a man who dyed his hair. Such a reason was amply sufficient, and the girl served him right.

Now, however, that he has come back with added honors, and wearing his own white hair like a crown of glory on his still young head, the lady has reconsidered and will take him. He is all there still, minus the hair dye.

Such is the tale. It ought to serve as a warning and an awful example to those widowers of six months' standing or thereabouts who, as a sign to manhood that they have begun to "mother," straightway commence to dye hair and whiskers.

VICTIMS OF A CYCLONE.

A Nebraska Town Wiped Out of Existence.

TEN KILLED AND MANY INJURED.

Not a Family in the Place That Escaped Without Injury to One or More Members, Though the Death List Is Miraculously Small.

BRADSHAW, Neb., June 5.—This town of four or five hundred inhabitants was laid waste by a cyclone which struck it about 8:20 Wednesday night. Nearly every house in town was demolished and nothing remains but a mass of ruins and roofless walls. Five persons were killed and a score or more injured.

The wind was accompanied by a deluge of rain and a stunning fusillade of hail. Almost before the frightened inhabitants had time to realize the nature of their misfortune they found themselves in the street and their houses reduced to a shapeless mass of ruins. The business part of the town is nothing but a pile of kindling wood, not one store being left standing. Every dwelling but the hamlet is in ruins, only a few walls remaining, and these without roofs.

The scenes enacted after the wind had subsided are beyond description. In every house in town somebody was either killed or wounded. A hospital was at once improvised in a roofless barn and the dead and wounded were taken there. The killed and injured are:

Those Killed and Injured.

John Miller.
Child of J. Bromsey.
Wife and child of Issac Denner.
Child of Mr. Chapin.
Two members of Mr. Shaw's family.
Wife and child of Mr. Minke.
Mr. Minke's hired man, name unknown.
Mr. Shaw, father of John Shaw, is missing, and is supposed to have been killed.
Injured—J. A. Brumsey, broken arm; Mrs. J. A. Brumsey and two daughters, the wife and family of Mr. Cushaw, Mrs. M. Williams, an unknown emigrant, who was taken up and dashed against an elevator's side, will die; Nellie Dorsey, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Miller and wife and his entire family, Dr. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. Keiser, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Babcock and their three children, Willie Chapin, P. M. and T. J. Daly, H. N. Cass, Willie Heath, Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Charles Miller and Mrs. E. Chapin, Isaac Pinner, Mr. and Mrs. Williamson, Professor McDermott, R. D. Logan and many others. Eight are said to be mortally wounded.

Freight Cars Twisted Like Empty Boxes.

The B. and M. depot was destroyed and telegraph communication is down. Freight cars were blown and twisted about as though they were empty paper boxes. The prairie around is strewn with dead hogs and fragments of buildings. The exact extent of the storm in the surrounding county is not known at this writing. The Russian settlement south of here is destroyed, also the places of William Morrison, D. Chicken and H. Koch. Ninety hogs and one horse were found in a grocery cellar.

A few houses are left in the extreme western part of the village, but they are without windows and doors and their contents were scattered broadcast over the prairie. All the cars on the line of the railroad track were blown away except one loaded with stock, which was blown, with out leaving the track, to York, a distance of nine miles.

Western Iowa Again Deluged.

DES MOINES, Ia., June 5.—Western Iowa was again deluged with heavy rains Wednesday night. Great damage was inflicted upon several towns in Pottawattamie county. Mosquito creek, which flows through the towns, suddenly overflowed its banks. At Underwood about thirty-five residences were wrecked, and as many families rendered homeless. Five miles of the Milwaukee tracks were washed away and that part of town traversed by the Milwaukee and Rock Island roads is submerged under fifteen feet of water. No lives were lost, but there were many very narrow escapes by residents of the flooded district. At Weston the same creek overflowed and the city was flooded to a depth of five feet throughout. Thirteen houses were wrecked and fifty more or less damaged. Water flooded the town of Persia five feet. The creek at this point was one and a half miles wide and the current strong. Four houses were wrecked. No trains are running on the Milwaukee and Rock Island roads. The storm about Adair was the worst ever known there. Hundreds of pigs and cattle were drowned or killed by lightning, and one $2,000 stallion was lost.

Troops Ordered Out.

YORK, Neb., June 5.—At 9.30 yesterday morning Capt. Lundeen received a message from Governor Thayer ordering him to report to Governor Boyd at that place for consultation of what to do in the matter. Mayor Williams ordered the company to Bradshaw, where it will remain on duty till order is brought out of the chaos which now reigns there. The injured have been removed to York by special train.

The relief party which left for Bradshaw Wednesday night arrived here yesterday. The party found a scene of horror that words cannot portray. There was not a building fit for occupancy, every one being roofless. On account of the rain, fires for cooking could not be built. There is the utmost need for immediate and efficient relief in the shape of food and shelter.

Shrieking women, with their garments blazing, ran in all directions, defying the efforts of friends to extinguish the flames and many were thrown with violence born of desperation to the floor, and held while their burning clothing was torn from them by the ladies rushing into the ball and were burned to death before pursuing friends could overtake and relieve them.

EMPLOYED TO DO MURDER

A Conspiracy Which Excites Newcastle.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED FOR A LIFE.

That Is the Price Mrs. Randolph Was Willing to Pay to Have Banker W. P. Foltz "Removed"—Detectives Heard the Bargain Made.

NEWCASTLE, Pa., June 5.—A great sensation was created here yesterday by the arrest of Mrs. Randolph, who is charged with having conspired to murder Banker W. P. Foltz. The woman, who is best known as Mrs. McGinty, made a business of illegal medical practice, and, after carrying on her nefarious trade for twelve or fifteen years, she was finally convicted and sentenced to two years in the penitentiary. When she was released, three years ago she started a little house on the outskirt known as Rhinetown, on the west side and that was her occupation when arrested.

Samuel Kissinger is a well known character. He was sent to the penitentiary about fourteen years ago for being implicated in the Nesbit robbery near Mount Jackson. A few years ago he purchased the McKinley farm and now runs a milk dairy.

She Wanted a Man of Nerve.

William P. Foltz is president of the First National bank. About a month ago Mrs. McGinty cautiously approached Kissinger and told him there was big money in a job she had on hand, providing he had nerve enough to do it. She finally told him he was to make away with Mr. Foltz The next morning Kissinger came over to town for the purpose of telling of the scheme to William M. Brown, Mr. Foltz's brother-in-law. Mr. Brown was absent from the city, and feeling that he must, as he says, get rid of the burden disclosed the matter to Dr. John McKinley, not revealing, however, the name of Mrs. McGinty. Mr. McKinley advised him to go direct to Foltz and acquaint him of the conversation. He did so, but Mr. Foltz treated the matter as a trifling joke, and Kissinger refused to tell him the name of the person desirous of having him murdered. The matter worried Mr. Foltz more than he cared to admit, however, and he went to Mayor Brown and employed him and De tective Alex Marshall to watch the case.

Detectives Heard the Bargain.

Detectives Marshall and Brown went to work. They first found that the person wishing to employ Kissinger was the Mc Ginty woman. In order to bring out developments they had Kissinger stand in with them and at the same time negotiate with Mrs. McGinty for the commission of the crime. Several meetings were had by appointment, and at each of these Marshall and Brown were hidden in the room and heard the conversation.

The last rendezvous was on Monday night, when final arrangements were made and the killing. The price of the job was finally fixed at $1,500, and Mrs. McGinty, who had intimated all along that a third person was furnishing the money, said she would be ready to pay it over in ten days. In none of the arrangements did she assert that she had any vengeance to wreak upon Mr. Foltz. The details of this bargain were heard by Marshall and Brown who were not ten feet away from the speakers.

She Says It Was a Joke.

A warrant was issued by Jr

AGAINST THE MEASURE.

Wisconsin Citizens Denounce the Bennett Law.

AND STATE THEIR OBJECTIONS.

They Declare That, Regardless of Party Affiliations, They Will Vote Only for Candidates Who Will Pledge Themselves to Work for Its Repeal.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., June 5.—There were nearly 700 delegates present when Mr. Christian Kouner, chairman of the anti-Bennett state central committee, called the anti-Bennett Law convention to order yesterday afternoon. The delegates came from all parts of the state, and most of them were from Lutheran churches, but there was quite a number from other denominations and societies opposed to the law. After the appointment of committees on credentials and resolutions Mayor Peck delivered an address of welcome. Speeches were delivered by Hon. F. W. Cothausen and Col. Conrad Krez, of Milwaukee, and Professor Anderson, of Madison, and others in opposition to the Bennett law. The committee on resolutions reported the following platform, which was unanimously adopted:

"We, citizens of Wisconsin, in convention assembled in order to protest against the so called Bennett law, and to take such steps as may consider it necessary to defend ourselves against false representations calculated to prejudice our cause, and do therefore declare:

Not Enemies of the English Language.

"We are not enemies of the English language; on the contrary, we endeavor to furnish our children the very best instruction therein. We consider public schools necessary, but maintain that parents have the right to establish and to select for themselves schools for their children. We claim no part of the public school fund for the use of parochial or other private schools. We are not opposed to a law prohibiting the employment of children in factories nor to an enactment providing for reasonable compulsory attendance at school, nor do we object to an interference by the state with schools conducted contrary to the public order and morality.

The Objections to the Law.

"But we protest against the so called Bennett law because it unnecessarily and unjustly curtails our civil and religious liberty, for it offers the school board an opportunity of determining arbitrarily that a child, during the period of infancy attendance, must attend a school in the city, town or district in which it resides, thus depriving parents of the right to send their children to a better or more suitable school outside the district.

"It compels parochial and other private schools to observe the time or times of attendance fixed by school boards without regard to the rites and customs of churches or their schools.

"It gives certain studies as also the medium of instruction therein; further more its wording is such as to afford school boards ample opportunity to usurp powers not given them, although the state and its officers have no right to interfere with the management of parochial and other private schools.

"We therefore declare that regardless of former party affiliation we shall vote for such candidates only as pledge themselves to work for the repeal of the Bennett law.

Its Repeal Demanded.

"As patriotic citizens, maintaining human rights, both civil and religious, advocating sound principles of education and with no enmity toward the English language, we are opposed, however, to all measures tending to oppress the immigrated citizens to suppress their native tongue, we call upon all who cherish liberty above party and nationality to join us in the effort to have this unnecessary, unjust and discord breeding measure repealed."

Committees will be appointed in each district to ascertain the views of all candidates on the law, and only those who advocate the absolute repeal of the Bennett law will be supported.

The Hebrew Convention.

RICHMOND, Va., June 5.—The Grand Lodge I. O. B. B. of America met President Lowenstein in the chair. It was resolved to change the time of meeting of conventions to the last Sunday in April or first Sunday in May for each year, the last Sunday in May or first Sunday in June. Adolph L. Sanger, of New York, offered a resolution, which was unanimously adopted, that the executive committee be authorized to co-operate with the trustees of the Baron Hirsch fund for the aid of destitute immigrants and with such other bodies as may be organized for similar philanthropic objects; also that a committee of one member from each district be appointed to carry out such measures as the executive committee may from time to time direct for the purpose of furnishing opportunities for employment and education to immigrants.

Gen. Palmer for Governor of Illinois.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., June 5.—The Democratic state convention was called to order by Chairman Delos P. Phelps, of the state central committee, who read a letter from ex-President Cleveland. Wilson, of Olney, was nominated for state treasurer, and Henry Raab, of Belleville, for superintendent of public instruction. Richard Morgan, of Livingston; John H. Bryant, of Bureau county, and N. W. Graham, of Jackson county, were nominated for trustees of the state university.

Presbyterians Against Secret Societies.

NEW YORK, June 5.—In the Reformed Presbyterian church synod a report condemning secret societies was debated. The only objection made was that it was not strong enough, and after Dr. H. H. George of Beaver Falls, Pa.; Rev. N. R. Johnson of Oakland, Cal., and others had urged more decisive action, the report was adopted and a committee appointed to draft resolutions further indicating the sense of the synod. Rev. T. A. H. Wyley, of Washington, Ia., presented the report on "The Sabbath;" Professor D. L. Willson of Allegheny, Pa., the report on "Domestic Missions," and Rev. J. C. K. Milligan, the report on "Sustentation and Church Erection."

United Presbyterians Adjourn.

BUFFALO, June 5.—The United Presbyterian general assembly wound up its business yesterday and took its final adjournment at the conclusion of the afternoon session. The Rev. George D. Matthews, of London, England, delivered an interesting address in behalf of the Pan-Presbyterian alliance, and the fraternal greetings of the Reformed church were conveyed by the Rev. Dr. Talbot W. Chambers, of the Sabbath Reform union. The following appropriations were made for the year: Sundry To Egypt, $46,000; India, $46,000; Home salaries—missionaries, $3,300; children, $1,300; miscellaneous, $15,000.

A Sioux Indian Graduate.

His father was the son of one of the Sioux chiefs, and joined in the Sioux outbreak of 1862. He was wounded, captured and condemned to be hanged, but was reprieved by President Lincoln.

Christian Scientists Charged with Manslaughter—An Alleged "Stoma."

JAMESTOWN, N. Y., June 5.—Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Lovejoy, in whose care as Christian scientists Mrs. W. A. Barrows died recently with cancer of the breast, without having received medical treatment, and who were found guilty of culpable negligence by the coroner's jury, are under arrest on a charge of manslaughter.

Messrs. Boyd and Letchworth, of the state board of charities, visited the Mike Smith home on foundling establishment in this city, run on the "Christian Science" managers say. They found the institution in a fearful condition. There was but one supply of victuals in the house, the sanitary conditions were bad, the sleeping apartments were unclean, the beds being infested with vermin, while the bodies of the children were in a like condition. Mrs. Gibson, who conducts the place, is a religious enthusiast, and says she makes known her wants at the throne of grace and that God provides. Messrs. Boyd and Letchworth are considering what action to take in the matter.

MRS. COWLES SEEKS DIVORCE.

Her Husband Still Has Possession of the Abducted Child.

CLEVELAND, O., June 5.—Mrs. Eugene H. Cowles, whose husband ran away with her little girl Monday, began a divorce suit against him yesterday. Her petition says for a number of years past, under a plea that his health and business would not permit him to live here, Cowles has been living a part of each year in Florida the acquaintance of one Clara Lumschelous, of Belleville, N. J., and has twice taken her abroad under the assumed name of C. L. King. Knowledge of this came to Mrs. Cowles last fall, and Cowles gave her a written promise to break off with Clara.

She forgave him and went to live with him in Buffalo. She learned last December that he had again visited Miss Lumschelous and she returned to Cleveland Since then he has not contributed toward her support. She also charges him with cruelty in abducting her child and asks its custody, together with divorce and all money.

Cowles is still in possession of the child, and although he has been tracked to Connecticut and Buffalo the sheriff has not overtaken him.

Cash, Cashier and Landlord's Wife Missing.

LOUISVILLE, June 5.—Frank W. McIlvain, cashier of the Sulphur Deposit Bank of Sulphur, Ky., is missing, and so is Mrs. Hattie Watkins, wife of John Watkins, the leading bookkeeper of Sulphur. About $10,000 of the bank's funds, it is believed, have also gone. Expert accountants from this city and Cincinnati are at work upon the books, but have as yet made no report, and the other bank officials are uncommunicative. McIlvain and the woman have been missing for four days. Both belong to excellent families and moved in the best society. McIlvain is married, and his father is president of the bank. The former was a bank clerk here and recently past his majority, and was an excellent official.

Killed While Resisting the Sheriff.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., June 5.—Jim Turner and Ed Parker were killed and Tom Turner wounded in Lee county, Va., in a fight between the sheriff's posse and a crowd of the Turners from Harlan, Ky. The Turners had come over to see Wile Turner's post sessions from where he was living to a home in Kentucky. On the way they shot a boy belonging to J. D. Carter. A quarrel with Carter ensued. Next day Carter took out warrants against the Turners and the sheriff attempted to execute them. A fight followed, in which Wile Turner got away. The men killed were of the Turner crowd.

Proposed New Departure for Harvard.

BOSTON, June 5.—At a meeting of the board of overseers of Harvard college yesterday a resolution was adopted favoring the reduction of the age at which scholars may enter the freshman class from 15 to 17 years. The resolution will be forwarded to the president and faculty for their consideration. The recent academic incident of certain of the students in disfiguring the property of the college was discussed, and while no formal action was taken, it was evident that strong measures be adopted to prevent such vandalism in future.

Protesting Against the McKinley Bill.

WASHINGTON, June 5.—The senate finance committee gave a hearing to a delegation of importers representing interests aggregating many millions of dollars, who came to Washington to protest against the passage of the McKinley tariff bill. All of the members of the committee were present, with the exception of Mr. Morrill. J. N. Constable, of Arnold, Constable & Co., New York, was the principal speaker.

Allegheny City's Mayor Arrested.

PITTSBURG, June 5.—Mayor Wyman, of Allegheny City, was arrested yesterday charged with perjury on taking his official oath of office. The prosecutor is S. H. Walkup, who charges that Mayor Wyman gave different persons money and valuable contributions to secure his nomination and election. The mayor is under $1,000 bail for a hearing Saturday, when he claims he will be cleared of the charges.

A School House Demolished.

CHESTER, Ia., June 5.—A cyclone passed near this place yesterday afternoon. A school house, three miles south, was struck by the storm and completely demolished. The teacher, Miss Mary Smith, was badly injured and pupil Lucy Holly injured. Miss Smith may possibly recover. Several farm houses and numerous out buildings were blown away. The number of people injured is estimated at twenty.

The Lottery Company's Latest Move.

NEW ORLEANS, June 5.—Mr. Shattuck of Calcasieu, has given notice in the house that he would shortly introduce a bill providing for the submission to the electors of the state an amendment to the constitution by inserting therein an article on levees, schools, charities, drainage and lotteries. It is generally understood that this is simply the Louisiana lottery bill somewhat disguised.

New Jersey Prison Deputies.

TRENTON, June 5.—Edward Leonard, of Union; Benjamin Naar, of Mercer; Sylvester Groff, of Warren, and Joseph E. Malloy, of Hudson, have been appointed prison deputies by the board of inspectors to succeed the four Republicans who were recently dismissed.

Two Brothers Drowned.

CINCINNATI, June 5.—Harry and Charles Bodeker, aged 14 and 9 years respectively, sons of Henry Bodeker, restaurateur at 216 Main street, were drowned in the Ohio river by the upsetting of a skiff. The upturned skiff and two hats, which were identified as theirs, were found floating in the river near the Newport barracks.

Assuming Large Proportions.

CINCINNATI, O., June 5.—The strike inaugurated by the boiler makers and carpenters of this city has assumed large dimensions. The fight is for shorter hours without a reduction of wages. A number of non-union men have joined the movement and the ranks of the strikers are now swelled to a total of 1,700 men.

Beat His Brains Out with a Handspike.

MITCHELL, Ont., June 5.—During a dispute Edward Rumford, of this place, was having with George Houghton's wife, Houghton interefered and Rumford beat his brains out with a handspike. Rumford has been arrested.

WOMAN AND HOME.

THE CORSET QUESTION FROM A CONSERVATIVE STANDPOINT.

A Higher Education for Women—She Teaches Little Savages—Don't Wash Your Hair—An Exclusive Women's Club—The Women of Seventy Years Ago.

"I don't wear corsets," said a lady to me the other day, with quite a superior air, "at least when I am at home."

I felt a strong inclination to tell her that the information was not necessary. She looked about as shapely and beautiful as a Maltese cross; and she wore slippers that were run "down" at the heel and "out" at the toe. It was 2 o'clock in the afternoon, yet she wore an ungainly and shapeless morning wrapper, with no collar or bit of lace at her throat, and her hair had not been touched since she twisted it up before breakfast. She was a young married woman, with no family to take up her time, and there was no earthly excuse for her appearance save laziness. Why should you not wear corsets? They hurt you? Why, of course they hurt you if you only put them on when you go out. Accustom your feet to low slippers, as nearly flat-soled boots will cause you agonies of suffering when you wear them.

A corset loose enough to be comfortable impairs the figure of any woman; but if you have fully made up your mind not to wear them, at least have the good taste to wear gowns that will partly conceal their absence. Don't wear waists which fasten tightly about your body, and which were meant to be fitted over corsets, and then ask your friends, with a glance of unspoken contempt and complacence, if they "would have guessed from your 'looks' that you didn't wear a corset," because if they do you will be indignant; while if they say no they will have a little white lie on their conscience.—Ella Higginson in West Shore.

Higher Education of Women.

But the higher education of women, as it is called, is already here. The experiment, if so we may term it, is now going on in many places, and on a scale of great magnitude. It is settled for the time being, at least, that their education is to be substantially the same as that of young men. They are receiving no quarter in the lists, but are boldly competing with their brothers for the prize of scholarship and intellectual supremacy. All told, there are today thousands of girls under collegiate instruction and contending for scholastic degrees, and statistics show that they are strong in the battle.

It used to be prophesied that women would lose the loveliest qualities of womanhood in the strife and pursuit; but the event has proved that such baleful predictions were without justification. Of course, it is as a rule, women who compete with men in trade and industry, in public life, in platform debate, or in the realm of knowledge and learning; they retain and never lose or impair the charm and the power of their womanhood. The more they can do and know, the more attractive they become to men and the more they dominate their affections.

The only danger is that they will be driven too hard because of their willingness, their spirit of emulation, and their conscientiousness. They are so eager to get ahead and to escape from old time conventional restraints that they need rather to be checked than spurred. They will win the race more surely if they make an easy start.—New York Sun.

Don't Wash the Hair.

"Don't wash your hair." This is advice given by a woman who has been at the head of a ladies' hairdressing establishment for the last twelve years. She says further: "I believe the average young woman drowns the life of her hair by frequent washing in hot and cold water. We send out about twenty young women who dress hair by the season, contracting for the entire family. Their plan to give each head a combing twice a week, and, by special arrangement, make house to house visits daily. Not a drop of water is put on the hair, and every head is kept in a clean and healthy condition. We pin our faith to a good brush, and prefer a short bristled, narrow brush, backed with olive or palm wood. We use the brush not only on the hair, but on the scalp as well.

A maid has to be taught how to dress and care for the hair by the first lessons. The instruction is part of my duty. In teaching one novice I operate on the other. The first thing to do when the hair is unpinned is to loosen it by lightly tossing it about. The operation need not tangle it, and as the tresses are being aired they fall into natural lines. When the head is ready at the scalp, the first combing should start at the end of the hair. In other words, comb upward to avoid tangling, breaking and tearing the hair out. This raising of the hair will remove the dust. After this the scalp should be brushed thoroughly. By this I mean that a full hour should be spent, first brushing the hair and then the head.—New York Star.

A Successful Teacher.

Miss Elaine Goodale, the superintendent of the Indian schools in Dakota, is a small, gentle voiced, sad faced young woman, with the pluck of a fandango and much less physical strength than a 10-year-old boy. In the course of study prepared by her for the civilization of the red man small attention is given to the spiritual development of the little savages. She lays particular stress on the humanizing influences of soap and water, hair and flesh brushes, diligent toil, warm clothing and good pleasant industry. Things rather than facts are taught, the post teaching having learned that knowledge is better than wisdow for the children of the wigwam.

She governs them through their vanity as formerly she ruled sensitive American school children by appealing to their pride. During her leisure hours Miss Goodale writes verses and songs, some of which the savage little boys are taught to sing. Special arrangements have been made for visiting schools during the coming summer months. Commissioner of Indian Affairs Gen. Morgan has supplied her with a span of horses and a covered wagon for the novel journey. She will be attended by two Indians—man and wife—and the wagon will be her summer home during the school to school visits across the two Dakotas.—New York World.

An Exclusive Women's Club.

The Meridian club, which meets once a month at the Fifth Avenue hotel, is very much averse to notoriety of any sort. Sometimes a woman writer will be invited as a guest, but she is told that if she writes anything about it she will be considered as having violated hospitality. One would suppose from its secrecy that the workings of this club were something out of the ordinary, but in reality its programme is of the most commonplace order. A luncheon is served, at which the members chat. On the day that the writer was admitted the conversation began regarding the intimacy between the poets Byron and Shelley, and the tragic death of the latter, but before we reached the salad we were discussing Elizabeth Stuart Phelps' baby, and over the ice cream we tried to decide whether discarding the bustle was really an improvement to the ensemble of the average woman.

After luncheon some papers were read and speeches made which were like sauce piquant, full of good things, but not pungent. Really, for a very choice, enjoyable social time one could not find a better place to go than the Meridian, in spite of its lofty and exclusive airs. The membership of this club is limited to thirty. Nothing is specified as to qualification for membership. A name is proposed to fill a vacancy only. The Meridian club elects no president. A presiding officer is appointed for each meeting.—Margaret Manton in New York Press.

The Women Then.

The average wife of today has but little idea of the toil of the pioneer mothers who, with their husbands, took up lands in Maine sixty or seventy years ago. Old Lady Barker, as every one in Troy calls her, settled down in that town when there was but an ox road to Bangor and to Belfast, and she tells the following: "Soon after we moved into our log cabin my first child was born. My husband had been down the fall and winter before and cleared away quite a piece of land by felling the trees, and about this time he began to pile them for a burn. Trees were big ones in those days, and my husband could not pile them alone, and we had no neighbors with whom he could exchange work.

"So when baby was about six weeks old he used to help me in the morning about the house, and then we all three went out into the clearing. Husband would get one end of a log well up on the pile, and then I used to put a handspike under that and hold it until he could pry up the upper end. The baby we used to lay out on a pillow, with a few boughs over it to keep off the flies, and I suppose, take it all in all, I helped clear up over thirty acres in this way. We had no money, so we did not need a store. I made all the cloth we had; made our year's sweetening from maple syrup. I knit mittens, socks, shirts and drawers, and even made cloth caps and my own bonnets. Looking at it now as I write I wonder how we lived at all; but we did, and, as you know, grew to be quite well off, but the wealth came slow."—Lewiston Journal.

Chance for Dressmakers.

A lady who lives in Yonkers aired her grievances and the grievances of her husband about dressmakers' bills and unskilled labor by saying: "I have had a dressmaker at my house every spring and fall for the past eight years, and I never yet found one who was satisfactory. Ask any lady and she will tell you that I am not an unreasonable woman. The greatest fault I have to find with these dressmakers is that they exhibit poor judgment and wretched taste. Because a certain style of dress is fashionable is no reason why a figure like mine will look well in it. I pay the dressmakers $2.50 per day and their board.

About three years ago my husband inserted two advertisements in a morning paper. One was for a young lady to address envelopes in his office at ninety cents per thousand; the other was for a seamstress at $20 per month and board. He received half a dozen young ladies who were willing to write in his office for about $6 a week, and only received seven answers from seamstresses. A woman who is skilled with her needle, and is possessed of some intelligence, can afford to be the most independent woman in the community."—New York Press.

The Yankee Girl Abroad.

In her aptitude for the details of traveling the American girl often astonishes the stolid Britisher with his own heath. One summer, in Leamington, an American girl wishing to have her "luggage" taken to the railway station, and finding no porter near it herself that there was no need of taking a cab, went to the station and asked to have a porter sent around for it. (They do not have baggage express in England.) On mentioning this little incident in the presence of an Englishman and an army officer he was surprised to learn that such a thing could be done, and said he should never have thought of doing it, but would have been quite helpless in such an emergency and obliged to take a "fly" in order to get his luggage to the station. He had his doubts as to the success of this bit of American enterprise and shrewdness, and when the hour arrived at which the impromptu expressman was due the India colonel was on the qui vive to see if the plan really succeeded. I am happy to say it did, and the brand of beginning "boxes" go off, admiring the while the American girl who knew how to travel.—Philadelphia Times.

Boston's Single Women.

Single women in Boston, who have taken upon themselves to be practical, sensible and useful according to their own methods, are so numerous and happy that they are envied all over the world. In many parts of the west it is the chief ambition of unprotected women to "come to Boston," ostensibly to study or work, but often in reality to enjoy the freedom and respect which is accorded to single women in that city; the result being that the superfluous female population in Massachusetts has never a chance to diminish, but increases steadily through women's immigration. Such a pleasant state of things is created by the independent action of single women in securing an education and afterward in establishing for themselves, and opposite sent industry. Things rather than facts are taught, the post teaching having learned that knowledge is better than wisdow for the children of the wigwam.

She governs them through their vanity as formerly she ruled sensitive American school children by appealing to their pride. keeping them on a chair or even on the floor would not harm them in the least. But it is utterly impossible to make a woman realize this, and so we suppose that year after year, till the arrival of the millennium, and perhaps longer, man will have to go through May and part of June engaged in putting up shelves, adjusting hooks and hanging wardrobes to take the place of closets which ought to exist, but which do not.—New York Tribune.

Hints for Housekeepers.

A tablespoonful of turpentine boiled with white clothes will aid in the whitening process.

To clean plaster of paris ornaments, cover them with a thick layer of starch and let it dry; remove with a stiff brush.

There is an art in carving boiled ham for dainty dinners, and he who cuts the slices thin is declared to be the artist.

Matting which has been worn somewhat may still be used under carpets. It may be cleaned by washing on both sides with hot salt water and drying out of doors.

Asthma may be relieved by burning a small piece of blotting paper which has been immersed in a strong solution of saltpeter and then dried.

After washing tin vessels, set them on the stove or in the sun for a few minutes to dry thoroughly, and thus avoid rust, which will soon destroy them.

For candy creams, icings and sweets in general, confectioners' sugar, which is fine powdered and known to the trade as XXX, is much better than cut loaf or granulated, and costs about the same.—Good Housekeeping.

One Girl's Secret.

I know a girl of the period who thinks she has solved a secret which will bring her untold wealth. I am half inclined to think her fortune is assured. Every woman knows how easy gloves soil, and they also know how abominable cleaned gloves are. In fact no girls of the period will wear cleaned gloves. We all know, too, that a supply of fresh gloves costs a good deal of money. Well, this clever friend of mine has discovered a cheap and simple way of keeping her gloves clean. She makes one pair last several months and yet retain a new, fresh appearance. She cleans them, of course, but how she does it is her secret. I can only testify that an expert like myself will tell that the gloves had ever been worn more than twice, and as for being cleaned, they would hoot at the idea.—Racket.

White for Young Brides Only.

Mrs. Annie Jenness Miller thus writes in her magazine: "A widow or divorcee, no matter how youthful, should never be married in a white gown. The white robe is symbolical of original purity, and to the second loses its significance, as does also the wreath of orange buds and the flowers which are properly the prerogative of the bride. The bridal gown is considered a good form; but some widows prefer a rich gown of heliotrope broonde, pale blue satin duchesse, or, in fact, anything that appeals to the individual taste. Widows sometimes embarrassed to know what disposition to make of the first wedding ring. It should be removed so soon as the lady has plighted her troth, for no man likes to be continually reminded of his predecessor."

Clothes for the Baby.

A young baby should have a flannel band long enough to go twice around it. Be very careful not to put it on too tight, and when it wets or soils it, remove it. Some mothers prefer linen diaper, but it does not retain the moisture as well as the cotton.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Blackboard.

Our little ones have had such a time playing school with our blackboard. We made it ourselves, too. It is a pine board two feet, and six inches long and one foot and seven inches wide, made very smooth and painted several coats of black, a cleat across the bottom to catch the dust and hold the crayon and erasers. The latter is made by tacking some soft cotton flannel over some blocks.—Cor. Detroit Free Press.

Window plants may be grown any season of the year in the following manner: Soak a large piece of coarse sponge in water, squeeze half dry and sprinkle in the openings red clover seed, millet, barley, rice and flax seed. Hang it in the window where the sun shines a portion of the day and sprinkle daily with water. It will soon form a mass of living green where even the clover will bloom.

Six things are requisite to create a happy home. Integrity must be the architect and tidiness the upholsterer. It must be warmed by affection, lighted up with cheerfulness, and industry must be the ventilator, renewing the atmosphere and bringing the fresh salubrity day by day; while over all, as a protecting canopy and glory, nothing will suffice except the blessing of God.—Hamilton.

Miss Carrie Bartlett, the young Unitarian preacher of Chicago, is described by a warm personal friend as a young and beautiful woman. She has a fine figure and a wealth of golden hair that waves. She affects the womanly, rather than the clerical, in manner and attire, and, with all her rare gifts, is exceedingly modest and unassuming.

There is an old lady living in Polk county, Fla., who is quite a genius. She can write poetry and set it to music, and has written two books. She hunts phosphate lands, raises cane, land, works in an orange grove, can hats and bonnets, braid shoes, plait hats of palmetto and make flowers out of shucks.

Kate Field has adopted a novel method to checkmate the autograph fiend. If the latter wishes her autograph it is a sub scriber to her paper, she jots down in the book the name, date of publication and subscription price of her journal.

A woman one day was given a receipt to sign, and it was laid on the large desk blotter. When the clerk came to pick up the receipt he found the lady had ignored it and signed her name in a good round hand on the blotting pad.

Mabel Mason, the 14-year-old daughter of a Michigan lighthouse keeper, recently became a heroine. She launched a boat, rowed a mile and saved a drowning sailor at the last second.

One of the most important inventions made by a woman is a machine for sewing shoes. It was patented by a Boston woman, who sold her title to the patent in 1863 for $150,000.

WHAT SHALL WE WEAR?

FASHIONS THAT ARE APPROVED AT HOME AND ABROAD.

New Features of Tailor Made Gowns—A Stylish and Becoming Walking Costume Illustrated and Described—Of Fine English Tweed and Masculine Cut.

Tailor made clothes cease to resemble each other with almost mathematical exactness, but like all styles of their own and almost every costume differs in some particular from its neighbor. The plain severity of the more mushy style is often tempered by dainty little inventions in braiding, draping, etc., which, without being frivolous, give a coquettish look to really useful gowns.

WALKING COSTUME.

A pretty tailor made costume in one of the most popular and becoming styles is shown in the cut. This is of fine English tweed, with a trimmed side panel and natty jacket of masculine cut, opening over a checked waistcoat.

Worthy of Mention.

Colored ribbon velvet, in white, very light and every dark shade, is quite a feature of the season, and can be had from less than one inch to a wide width inches. It runs round the edges of dresses, usually in three or five rows; trims bodices, parasols hats and bonnets, and generally expends itself in lavish profusion. It is now often worn around bare throats in the evening. Small collarets of piece velvet, shaped to fit the neck, are beginning to appear and one recently worn was fringed with pearls and headed with a single row of diamonds. Jet coronets, long discarded are quite in the fore again, and may be seen run through fluffy hair or on bonnets among masses of flowers. Anything fancied ful in the way of coronets, large comb first and then a wide band across the head now appear in fully dressed heads or smart bonnets.

Hats and Bonnets.

Hats have low crowns, some are minu them altogether, and bonnets appear to grow "small by degrees and beautifully less." In fact, on some youthful heads where the hair is profuse, it is possible a first sight to doubt the existence of a bon net at all. All the front hair is drawn forward and a good deal puffed, all the back is drawn up and arranged in three horizontal rows, and nowhere is the lace butterfly or handful of flowers that the wearer is pleased to call her bonnet. Other bonnets are, however, larger, and most beautiful fal in make and material. The lace straw hats, with their dainty velvet or lace bows holding a few flowers, are quite things of beauty.

Finger Rings for Men.

The beauty and large number of rings now worn by men ought to be seen in every place that men frequent. These rings, according to Elsie Bee in Jewelers' Circular are worn on the third and little fingers of the right hand, the same now adorned by women. Men's rings are larger and richer than ever. They are usually of deep yellow gold twisted and massive, and set with large emeralds, rubies and diamonds, used separately or combined.

Men do not always wear masculine rings. Diamond solitaires mounted in the bezel of ladies' rings are frequently worn on the third finger, and circlets and odd rings as with smaller stones on the fourth finger.

Cloth Gaiters.

Gaiters of finest black cloth, or of colors to match the gown, lined in most case with satin, are to be much worn this season for wearing over walking shoes. They are cooler and easier than boots and answer the same purpose, for town wear especially if they are made to fit more carefully made and fitted and button up like a boot.

Gloves of Perfumed Russian Leather.

Russian leather gloves perfumed with the original odor that comes from the leather are being worn now. They are rather stout, but not clumsy, and are made in mahogany and tan and brown shades.

Novelties in Millinery.

Among novelties in millinery are the flower toques, which promise to be popular this season for youthful heads, one in corn flowers and yellow crocus on a rolled band of blue velvet, and another of cowslips with two large black wings, butterflies, being especially pretty. A fancy black crinoline hat, much bent up and almost hidden by a mass of shaded cornflowers, is finished off at the back with a bunch of the field blue some resting on the hair.

WIDOW'S BONNET.

Among bonnets is one composed of band of rolled red velvet, with large half bands of cut jet placed in between, two red still tongues, and a large butterfly of black lace. Another of cream Tuscan, edged with tinted lilac, had the open space above lace across with gold ribbon, which emerged at the back and formed strings.

A favorite model for a widow's bonnet is here illustrated. It has a fulled crape front, with the veil forming the point in front of the bonnet and back.

THE RUIN OF A HORSE.

AND THE ATTEMPTS TO PUNISH THE ACCUSED.

The Plainfield Society's Persistent Efforts In Behalf of Humane Treatment. The Suit Against Farmer Smalley.

The case of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals vs. Walter Smalley came up for trial before Justice Nodyne and a jury yesterday morning at ten o'clock.

The case occupied the attention of the court nearly the whole of the day. Mr. William A. Coddington appeared for the Society and Borough Counsel Read for Smalley.

Twelve witnesses testified for the Society, among them Messrs. Lewis Bird, ex-Chief Carey, Constable Hornaday, James Dent and widow, William Barbell, A. M. Randle, and Dr. Stevenson.

By their testimony it appears that Smalley, who is 18 years old, and who is by occupation a driver, residing with his father on Woodland avenue, on Sunday, June 22, 1890, hired a horse and buggy, of Andrew Rhoff, about one o'clock in the afternoon and took his girl out riding. It being understood that he was only going to Oak Tree. The testimony tended to show that Walter drove a distance of about sixteen miles, instead of four and a half miles as agreed, and lashed the horse so severely that huge welts were raised all over the body. The animal, it seems, was not returned until after midnight and its injuries were not discovered until next morning when Mr. Huff went to feed it. It refused food and seemed very sick. It would eat nothing for several days, and it was several weeks before Mr. Huff could use the horse at all, and even then the animal was ruined for the owner's purposes, as that he was compelled to sell it at much loss to himself.

Mr. Huff complained to ex-Chief Carey, and asked that Smalley be punished. A summons was issued against the accused. Walter has a brother who closely resembles him. The constable served the warrant on the brother, supposing him to be Walter. It was the same error in the trial of course the society was—because of this mistake of the constable—non-suited.

A new summons was issued, but Walter made himself scarce, so that it could not be served on him by Constable Moffett, who had used the summons for about two months. Mr. Carey had another summons issued, giving it to another constable who spent the third month in a fruitless search. Then a third summons was issued, the Chief, true to his record of never giving up until he had secured his prisoner at last, had Walter arrested on a bench warrant by special Policeman Krisey, who caught Smalley the day afterwards, or some eight months after the offense was committed.

The case was tried, but the jury disagreed. They had stood eleven for conviction to one for acquittal.

It appears that the juryman who held out had borrowed some money from a poor workwoman which she could not collect from him until she was compelled to put the matter in the hands of a lawyer, who compelled him to pay her. The lawyer was the one prosecuting in behalf of the society. It was supposed that the juryman's refusal to agree to a verdict was on account of this circumstance. But whether this is so or not he held out, and saved the accused from conviction.

A new suit was begun and was tried yesterday. It was before an unusually intelligent jury, but they were not satisfied that the evidence was conclusive enough to justify conviction, and brought in a verdict of not guilty.

The society is satisfied, however, as to the guilt of the accused, and propose to appeal the case, and fight it until they secure a conviction, even if it is necessary to carry it to the Supreme Court.

The society is determined that those who treat dumb animals brutally shall be punished if justice can be had, and in their laudable efforts they are deserving of highest praise. This particular case has been under way, as it will be seen, for about a year, and a leading member of the society says it will be fought for ten years, if necessary, to teach a lesson to inhuman brutes who maltreat dumb animals, the court to determine whether the accused is guilty or not.

A Masonic Event.

The masonic fraternity of this city and vicinity participated in an event of much interest last evening, it being the conferring of the third degree on one candidate by Orient Lodge of Elizabeth.

There were present at the ceremonies delegations from Tyrian, Rose and Hermann lodges of Elizabeth, Anchor lodge of this city, Gerusalem lodge of Jersey City, and Atlas lodge of New York. After the ceremonies the guests were invited to a restaurant and a fine supper was served.

CHILDREN'S HOME ANNIVERSARY.

The Exercises Last Evening in the First Presbyterian Church.

The anniversary exercises of the Children's Home were held in the First Presbyterian church last evening. Addresses were made by Drs. Rodman and Ketchem. Miss Jessie Utter presided at the organ, and a special choir consisting of Mrs. Collier, Miss Julia J. Kesler, Miss Thompson, of North Plainfield, Mr. Van Arsdale and Mr. Arthur Freeman rendered some excellent music.

The teachers' report showed the total receipts of the year to have been $5,001.81, total expenditures $4,436.29. Leaving a balance on hand May 1, 1890, of $175.52. Since that time generous responses have been made to the appeal for funds. The "Kinder Sym. phony" netted the association $118.55. Mr. Nouman of New York city having sent the ladies $20 from the share of the receipts he received from a similar charity. The address of the President was read by Rev. A. R. Dilts. The ladies of the association wish to return their thanks to all friends who in any way aided in either entertainment.

—The meeting of citizens of Bound Brook and Bloomington to discuss the subject of buying a fire engine, decided against the purchase. Another town carriage and 500 feet of hose will be purchased.

The Trentons are said to be a very strong team, but they must indeed be good if they prevent the St. George's from coming back with the score, for the Plainfield team is said to be one of the strongest in this section.

—The census enumeration is going on in this city, and, so far as we can learn, all through the country with good speed and good humor. A crank is about occasionally, but they are generally amenable to reason. You are doing yourself a favor when you answer the enumerator's questions promptly and speed him on his way.

—The Somerset County Board of Freeholders have awarded the contracts for the Bridge stone over Peter's brook Somerville as follows: Masonry, to Walter Robbins, Walter Lindsay and John MacKenzie of Bound Brook at $6 per cubic yard; iron superstructure to the Wrought Iron Bridge Company of Canton, O., for $2,925.

Second Day of the Synod.

The second day's session of the general synod of the Reformed church in America opened at Asbury Park yesterday with a largely increased attendance. The President, Rev. Dr. Brett Van Dyke, of Catskill, N. Y., in ill, and Rev. C. Vanderveer, of Montague, Mich., the retiring Vice-President, preached the synodical sermon. His subject was direct vision, and was based on the prophecies of the book of Revelations. The Special Committee appointed to examine in the preparation of a new hymnal brought in a partial report urging the proposed work, but not recommending full details of the methods of preparation. A long discussion ensued, but the report was finally referred to the committee for further details. The annual reports of the New Brunswick Theological Seminary and of the Western Theological Seminary at Holland, Mich., showed a prosperous condition both as regards finances and students. Last evening the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered by the Rev. J. Romeyn Berry, assisted by the other members of the Synod. Mr. Peter P. Van Arsdale of the Trinity Reformed church and Mr. Valentine Utzinger of the German Reformed church of this city are in attendance.

A score of the best society people of this city have organized a select book club. A costly library has already been bought, and a large sum has been expended for magazine subscriptions. The subscribing members, who are prominent persons, are: Alexander Gilbert, Mrs. J. R. Corlies, H. M. Stockton, J. P. Mason, R. C. Perkins, John Bushnell, J. Evarts Tracy, Mason W. Tyler, W. T. Eastman, W. E. Stewart, C. W. Beebe, J. M. Whiton, E. H. Ladd, Jr., Rowland Cox, C. J. Fisk, J. K. Myers, Frank Bushnell, N. C. D. Hodges, I. H. Brown, F. O. Herring, A. C. Baldwin and Pliny Fisk.

Miss Ella Moffett, daughter of Mr. Elmore D. Moffett, President of the City Commercial Council was married last evening at the residence of her parents on Orchard place to Mr. William H. Tams of Trenton. The bride was becomingly attired in rose silk. The Rev. D. J. Yerkes, the pastor of the First Baptist church, performed the ceremony. Guests were present from this city, New Brunswick, Elizabeth, Paterson, Trenton and Jersey City. The happy couple left on a late train, under showers of rice, on their wedding tour. Upon their return they will make Trenton their home. The bride is one of the beauties of Plainfield, and a charming young lady generally.

Rev. Wesley Martin, of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Westfield, preached to the resident members of the Grand Army of the Republic Sunday evening. He touched on the unwisdom of the Lodge states at Richmond. The Southern people, he thought, were patriotic at heart. When he read in the New York Mail and Express of the homage paid to the rebel flag and the dishonor shown the Stars and Stripes he thought he would have to withdraw from his sermon that portion which referred to the Southern people as loving the Union. But he read in the New York World and the Tribune that the alleged treasonable acts were not true, and he was glad. There were, the speaker said, but few South in the North, but as well as the North, but he thanked God that the people of the North, South, East and West were now all Union men.

That Fast Time.

The following which is of interest to many explains itself:

To the Editor of The Somerset Democrat.

I notice in both The Unionist Gazette and The Messenger, that Jud. Iszard had made fast time with a train on the Central road. It was said he made the 23 miles from Jersey City to Bound Brook in 28 1-3 minutes, including two stops. That train was No. 516, a Sunday train. The schedule time is 39 minutes so that Mr. Iszard could not have made the time much slower and come up to the schedule. This effectually disposes of the "fast time" of that particular trip.

For the fast time, just notice the following: "Uncle Jerry" has three of the fastest runs on the road. Train No. 505, leaves Bound Brook at 8:45 and arrives at Jersey City, 21 miles (not 23), at 9:18, making the run in 33 minutes. There are no stops on this train. Train No. 512, a five-hour train between New York and Washington, leaves Jersey City at 11:42 and arrives at Bound Brook at 12:18, taking 36 minutes and making no stop. Train No. 517, another five-hour train, leaves Bound Brook at 2:12, makes Plainfield and Elizabeth and arrives at Jersey City at 2:48, taking 36 minutes for the run. This train has the same stops as the train Iszard claimed to have made such time on, but the time is three minutes shorter.

From the above figures it will be seen that Iszard's run was not a fast one. There are men who every day make faster runs.

W.

Through New Jersey on Bicycles.

Six young men have just completed an interesting bicycle tour through New Jersey. The members of the party, who called themselves the Ramblers' Sextet, were C. J. Drexel and W. H. Mayo, of Philadelphia; Harry H. Hayes and Frank Dabenport, of Trenton, and Claude St. Albans and Ivan Rodrigues, of Cuba. Starting from Philadelphia, they journeyed leisurely through the lake and mountain region of Northern New Jersey, and then sped over the good roads of the Central and Southern parts of the State, stopping at Trenton, Plainfield, New Brunswick, Long Branch, Atlantic City and Cape May.

THEY FLED WHEN SHE FIRED.

A Brave Young Woman Puts Two Highwaymen to Flight.

Bound Brook, June 5th, (Special).—A woman's bravery frustrated a daring attempt at highway robbery near Millstone yesterday. William Dilley, of Bella Meade, was driving with his sweetheart over the Somerset county country roads when two young men sprang out from a bit of woodland, halted his horse and dragged him from the buggy. As they were rifling his pockets the girl produced from the folds of her belt a small silver-mounted revolver, which she had been accustomed to use in target practice at home, and, firing a shot through the coat of one of the fellows, put both her lover's assailants to flight. Dilley recognized the men as Larry Shine and Joe Barnington, for whom warrants were issued on his complaint. Two constables went to Millstone this morning to arrest the fellows, but a mob of roughs drove the officers away.

Angry (?) at The News' Criticisms of His Poem.

To the Editor of The News:—I sent you a poem last week and asked you to publish it in your paper. You declined, and returned it to me with the remarking reply that I was no poet, and that you "could turn out better poetry out of a sausage machine." Now, I won't be crushed, and I propose to show up your attempt to throttle budding genius. Publish this card and the following poem in your advertising column and charge me your full advertising rates.

THE POEM.

I stood upon the ocean's sandy beach.
And with a rod I wrote upon the sand these words:
"Agnes, I love thee!"
But the winds came and the waves rolled mountains high,
And blotted out the fair impression.
Cruel waves, you carry a full load of light reads!
No longer will I trust to thee!
But from the highest mountain peak I'll pluck
And, dipped in the crater of Vesuvius, with it I will write
Upon the high and burnished heavens these words of love:
"Rogers Bros. are holding the biggest low price sale of shoes ever held in Plainfield. They are now offering boots and shoes so low their cheapness would almost take your breath away.
And we would like to see any dog-gone wave wash that out.

Don't miss this bargain. Call this out and bring it to us, it is worth 25 cents to you. For every purchase of $1 worth at one time. If you will bring this adv. to us we will allow you a reduction of 25 cents. If you want $15 worth of shoes or upwards we will expect five of these adv's and we will allow you $1.25 for them. This will hold good until July 1st. Remember, we carry a full line of the best shoes that can be had in all widths and styles at low prices, and do fine repairing. Rogers Bros. successors to D. F. A Thrilling Experience.

Every ship that crosses the Atlantic looks out every trip during warm weather for iceberg: off the Newfoundland coast. Once in a while one is sighted, and two summers ago it was said a berg with a polar bear basking in the sun upon its frozen brow was seen by the imaginative crew and passengers of an ocean steamer.

But the oil steamer Beacon Light has actually run into one of these monsters, and the experience will be sufficient to last her crew the rest of their lives. It was like this: Fancy a huge white cloud, as large as the largest building in the world, suddenly looming alongside of you in the dead of half darkness, as you look out over the void from a ship's bow. Suddenly the cloud begins to gleam and glitter with all the hues of the rainbow, in the rays of the ship's great electric reflector. Then the frightened scream from the captain's lips: "My God, it's ice!" And he orders the engines backed instantly.

The next moment the steamer's bows glide under a great overhanging ledge of ice. It strikes with a grating sound and glances off just in time for its own salvation. There are a thundering crash and a roar, and ice enough to keep a whole city cool all summer, even at this year's prices, falls into the sea. Some fearful fragments fall upon the forecastle, too, and turn the Beacon Light sideways. She careens over upon her beam ends, but rights herself again, the stanch ship. But the greater danger is still before her. A terrible bump! bump! comes against the ship's bottom, and it seems as if the universe was shivered to splinters. The tons of ice that split off the berg and sank are coming up again, being lighter than the water, and they are rising under the Beacon Light, and lift her hull ten feet above the water line.

The water rushes in, but the iron plates are welded true and strong. The ice cannot destroy them, though it spreads them so much that the pumps must be worked constantly all the way to New York to keep the vessel from sinking. But the men do not mind a trifle like that now. As they huddle together and look into each other's eyes with blanched faces they realize what it is to meet an iceberg.

Meanwhile the iceberg has gone calmly on its way.

The Old Castle of Heidelberg.

At last comes word that steps are to be taken to prevent Heidelberg castle from entirely going to ruin and crumbling away to dust. It was high time. Heidelberg is the most picturesque and wonderful old castle in all Europe, representing the phase of architecture from the Fourteenth to the Seventeenth century." Its immense size, as it must have been originally, dwarfs every modern structure that wears the name of castle.

About a quarter of a million dollars has been subscribed, and will be expended under the direction of the government of the grand duchy of Baden. The grand duchy itself contributes half this sum. The rest is obtained from private subscription.

In two years the projected work will be accomplished, as far as it is planned. But the plan only contemplates renewing the foundations and restoring the suite of rooms once occupied by Princess Elizabeth, daughter of James I of England, and ancestor of the present German family that rules Great Britain. But the whole great castle ought to be restored fully. It is a place where a million tourists from all the world have had so much pleasure that many of them, from all nations, would be glad to contribute their share towards renewing in pristine splendor of this grand old relic of the feudal ages.

Newspapers are supposed to do so much harm that when one does a good thing it does not always get credit. Yet they do much good. An instance is the subscription The Chicago Tribune raised for Kate Shelley, the Iowa girl who saved a train load of passengers at the risk of her own life, and got not much more than a formal "thank you" for it, till The Tribune took the matter in hand, told the story to the world, and started the subscription. It subscribed to more than the terrible mortgage debt that had been hanging over the little home, and then brave Kate Shelley, woman to her heart's core, said: "Mother, we'll fix up the house and get a new carpet."

A rubber pneumatic tire for bicycles has been devised in Great Britain by an Irish wheelman, which it is expected will do away with the jolting that now wearies riders so greatly in long distance spins. In the new invention the rubber tire is pumped full of air and then tightly closed. The elasticity of the air keeps the wheel from bouncing and trouncing the rider till he is lame and sore. The pneumatic tire adds, however, to the weight of the machine several pounds, and the tube is liable to have holes torn in it on rocky roads.

A COMPROMISE MEASURE

The Caucus Silver Bill in the House.

TEXT OF THE SUBSTITUTE BILL.

Maj. McKinley Provokes a Spirited Debate—Mr. Conger Says the Substitute Is Not Entirely Satisfactory But Is Much Better Than No Bill at All.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—Mr. McKinley provoked one of the most spirited debates of the session when he reported from committee in rules a resolution providing that the house should proceed at once to consider the silver bill agreed upon Wednesday night and that the previous question should be ordered at 2 p. m. One hundred and twenty voted to make the silver bill the special order and 117 against it. Messrs. Anderson, Bartine, Connell, Dehaven, Featherstone, Funston, Kelly, Morrow, Hermann and Townsend (Colo.) voted with the democrats in the negative. Mr. Blount was brought in after the vote was recorded by a vote of 124 to 118. The pending bill was then read, after which Mr. Conger offered the caucus bill as a substitute. It was discussed at considerable length but no vote was reached. The caucus bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., that the secretary of the treasury is hereby directed to purchase from time to time silver bullion to the aggregate amount of $4,500,000 worth of fine silver in each month, at the market price thereof, not exceeding $1 for 371 and 25-100 grains of pure silver, and to issue in payment for such purchases of silver bullion treasury notes of the United States, to be prepared by the secretary of the treasury in such form, and of such denominations not less than $10 nor more than $1,000, as he may prescribe, and a sum sufficient to carry into effect the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Redeemable in Coin.

Sec. 2—That the treasury notes issued in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be redeemed on presentation to the office of the treasury of the United States, or at the office of any assistant treasurer of the United States, and when so redeemed may be reissued; but no greater or less amount of such notes shall be outstanding at any time than the cost of the silver bullion then held in the treasury purchased by such notes, except that such treasury notes shall be a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract, and shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued, and such notes when held by any national association may be counted as a part of its lawful reserve. Provided, that upon demand of the holder of any of the treasury notes herein provided for the secretary of the treasury may, at his discretion and under such regulations as he shall prescribe, exchange for such notes an amount of silver bullion which shall be equal in value at the market price thereof on the day of exchange to the amount of such notes presented.

The Coinage Clause.

Sec. 3—That the secretary of the treasury shall coin such portion of the silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act as may be necessary to provide for the redemption of the treasury notes herein provided for, and any gain or seigniorage arising from such coinage shall be accounted and paid into the treasury.

Sec. 5—That so much of the act of Feb. 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal tender character" as requires the monthly purchase and coinage of the same into silver dollars of not less than $2,000,000 nor more than $4,000,000 worth of silver bullion is hereby repealed.

Sec. 6—That whenever the market price of silver is determined in pursuance of section 1 of this act to be such that 371.25 grains of pure silver, it shall be lawful for the owner of any silver bullion to deposit the same at any coinage mint of the United States to be coined into silver dollars for his benefit, as provided in the act of Jan. 18, 1887.

National Bank Balances.

Sec. 7—That upon the passage of this act the balances standing with the treasurer of the United States to the respective credits of national banks for deposits made to redeem the circulating notes of such banks, and all deposits thereafter received for like purpose, shall be covered into the treasury as a miscellaneous receipt, and the treasurer of the United States shall redeem from the general cash in the treasury the circulating notes of said banks which may be presented for redemption, subject to examination, and upon the certificate of the comptroller of the currency that such notes have been received at his office; that they have been destroyed, and no new notes will be issued in their place, reimbursement of their amount shall be made to the treasurer, under such regulations as the secretary of the treasury may prescribe, from an appropriation hereby created, to be known as "National bank notes redemption account," but the provisions of this act shall not apply to the deposits received under section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, requiring every national bank to keep in lawful money with the treasurer of the United States a sum equal to 5 per cent. of its circulation, to be held and used for the redemption of its circulating notes, and the balance remaining of the deposits so covered shall, at the close of each month, be reported on the monthly public debt statement as debt of the United States bearing no interest. Section 5 provides that the act shall take effect thirty days from and after its passage.

Proposed Amendments.

Mr. McCreary (Ky.) moved to amend the substitute by adding to section 6 the words "and the purchase of silver bullion shall be suspended while it is being so deposited for coinage." Mr. Taylor (Ills.) offered an amendment to the original bill providing that if the net amount of silver bullion reported to the treasury, $2,000,000 in any month the secretary of the treasury shall on the succeeding month purchase a sufficient amount to supply the deficiency. Mr. O'Donnell (Mich.) moved to amend the amendment by striking out $2,000,000 and inserting $3,000,000. This exhausted all the amendments which can be offered under the rules, and, although Mr. Bland was on his feet demanding recognition, he was ignored by the speaker.

The Compromise Bill.

Mr. Conger (Ia.) said that all general legislation must of necessity be a sort of compromise. So the bill before the house was not entirely satisfactory to every one. It was not such a bill as would be drawn by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Walker) or by the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. Bland). It was not entirely satisfactory to himself. He believed that the bill first reported was the best. But it was the bill which the majority believed would greatly improve the present status and make a long stride in the direction the government ought to go. It would add $54,000,000 treasury notes to our circulation every year. They would immediately go into circulation, because the secretary must pay for the bullion with these notes and with nothing else. Under the present law the secretary must pay for the bullion in any money on hand. Under the proposed law every ounce of silver purchased would be represented in paper circulation.

Mr. Williams' Views.

Mr. Williams (Ills.) spoke in favor of the free coinage of silver. Under the caucus bill, he said, the secretary of the treasury could not comply with the law and not increase the circulation more than $1,000,000 a year. Some silver syndicate could present 4,000,000 ounces of silver to the secretary the first month and receive notes therefore. It could then return the notes and take out the silver, and the following month again present its silver. And this could continue from month to month and from year to year.

Silver in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—Mr. Hiscock, addressing the senate on the silver bill, said that in the portion of the country with which he was conversant nine-tenths of the agricultural population and of the intelligent mechanics and wage earners were opposed to the free coinage of the world's silver by the United States. Senator Sherman, who followed, said he believed that treasury notes based on silver bullion would be as safe a substitute for paper money as gold bullion. There was no fear to give to those notes every sanction and value that the United States could confer.

WEST POINT EXERCISES.

The Firing Drill of the Sea Coast Battery a Success.

WEST POINT, N. Y., June 6.—Thursday was the hottest day of the present spring. The spectators, seated in the shade along the hillside, suffered from the weather, while the men participating in the drill and artillery exercises were in real danger of being overcome by the great heat. The board of visitors inspected the treasurer's office and different departments, which they seemed to find everything satisfactory. The examinations of the classes in natural and experimental philosophy and in ordnance and gunnery also took place under the supervision of the board. The members of the classes acquitted themselves creditably.

Then came the great event of the day, the firing drill of the sea coast battery. The firing was from a point on the river side to the old "Kosciusko's Tower" at a distance of 2,100 and 2,200 feet. Col. J. M. Wilson, superintendent of the academy, personally directed these exercises. The target was a floating structure of white upon the side of the cliff. The guns were manned by the cadets of the second class, commanded by chiefs of detachments from the first class, and that their work gramatically was good was evidenced by the frequency with which the projectiles could be seen striking the target and sending fragments of white painted rock flying.

There were two 15-inch smooth bores, firing 450 pound solid shot; three 8-inch converted rifles, firing 180 pound solid shot, and a 13-inch 216 pound mortar.

Want the McKinley Bill Amended.

COLUMBUS, O., June 6.—The Ohio Wool Growers' association is holding an important meeting here. Among those present were David Harpster, president of the Ohio sheep breeders, Hon. Columbus Delano, president of the National association; Judge William Lawrence, Hon. Daniel Boyd and other prominent gentlemen. In a recent suit Judge Butler, of the United States court at Philadelphia, held that wools named in the third class as native South American, native Smyrna, etc., though improved by the introduction of Spanish merino or English blood, still remained as carpet wool and could be admitted and classified for payment of duty as such. This, the wool growers maintain, sweeps away the good effect of the McKinley bill and makes an amendment necessary. If the decision is sustained and the bill followed to remain unchanged all wools of foreign countries, notwithstanding the improvements, will be admitted at carpet wool classification. Judge Lawrence is a strong speech in favor of insisting upon an amendment to the McKinley bill that would effectually stop the importation of clothing wool classified as carpet wool. An effort will be made to get the senate to so amend the bill as to remove all doubt on this point and make plain the clause defining carpet and clothing wools.

The Newfoundland Trouble.

LONDON, June 6.—In the house of commons Sir James Ferguson, under foreign secretary, stated that the government was in receipt of official cablegrams showing that there had been no landing of a French armed force at St. George's bay or elsewhere in Newfoundland or Nova Scotia. The commander of the French ship had requested the removal of certain nets, which request he was justified in making. No threats had been made, nor had there been any refusal to pay fines, although resolutions to that effect had been voted.

No More Callers Received.

ALBANY, June 6.—On account of the pressure of visitors to the executive chamber who desire to see the governor in relation to the bills remaining in his hands, Governor Hill was compelled to establish the rule not to see any callers during the next three days except state officers. The thirty working days allowed to the governor for the disposition of bills will expire at midnight Saturday, and about a hundred and eighty are yet to be signed if they are all to become laws.

The Northern Society Meets.

ATLANTA, Ga., June 6.—The first reception of the newly formed northern society was held last night and was largely attended by northern born and southern born Georgians. Interesting speeches were made by prominent citizens. The society is on the new plan of the Sons of the Revolution, Colonies of New York, and is organized for the special purpose of seeing that the south is not misrepresented. The society has about 300 members.

The Gatling Gun Inventor Dead.

CINCINNATI, June 6.—Alfred T. Perrine, died in the City hospital of typhoid pneumonia in practically destitute circumstances. He was the inventor of the Gatling gun, for which he is said to have received $90,000. He has lived in Cincinnati for the past five years, and was at one time worth $150,000, but lost it in speculation.

A Small Advance Favored.

PITTSBURG, June 6.—The day's session of the 5 amalgamated association were occupied in discussing the scale for boiling iron. There is a strong sentiment among a majority of the wage committee favoring a slight advance in the wage scale in all departments. The advance, however, will not, it is said, exceed 5 per cent.

MURDERED BY REDSKINS

A Government Surveying Party Slain in Wyoming.

FIVE OF THE PARTY PERISHED.

Massacred in Cold Blood by Eleven Intoxicated Cheyenne Indians—One of the Victims Was a Well Known Engineer. The Murderers Probably Lynched.

DENVER, June 6.—The massacre by a band of renegade Cheyenne Indians of Chief Engineer William L. Crittenden, in charge of the Third division of the government survey in Wyoming, together with three of his men, is reported by J. H. Holt, purchasing agent for the Importing Cattle company, who has just arrived from the scene of the trouble. The terrible butchery occurred in the upper Green river country last Sunday. Mr. Holt says it was one of the most cold blooded affairs he ever heard of. The crime was committed by a band of eleven Cheyennes while under the influence of liquor furnished them by ranchmen who had recently opened up in the vicinity.

More Liquor Demanded.

The Indians rode into the surveying camp in the morning, but nothing was thought of such a common occurrence and they were given a kindly welcome. It was soon discovered, however, that they were intoxicated and disposed to be ugly. They demanded liquor of the surveyors, which was of course refused. The Indians became very boisterous and threatening, and Crittenden fearing trouble tried to induce them to leave the camp. But they only retired a short distance, where they began drinking again. Their supply of whisky soon became exhausted, and, returning to the camp, they renewed their demand for liquor. Mr. Crittenden told them he had none. They became very impudent and demanded provisions, which also was refused. They began to make threats and were ordered from the camp.

Nearly All Were Slain.

A quarrel then ensued, when the Indians suddenly attacked the surveying party with their knives and guns. The attack was so sudden that the men were not prepared for resistance, and consequently they were nearly all massacred before the Indians finally desisted and left the camp, thinking they had killed all the whites. It was found that Chief Engineer Crittenden and Chain Bearers W. W. Timberlake, George Wood and Henry Obermeyer were dead. Assistant Engineer Jesse Lee was also left for dead, but he recovered sufficiently to drag himself to the nearest ranch, whence assistance was sent, but too late.

They Will Be Lynched.

Before leaving the Indians rifled the camp and then escaped to the mountains. A pursuing party was at once organized, and the renegades were caught and put under guard, but they will undoubtedly be lynched before long if this has not already been done. Two of the ranchmen who are known to have furnished the Indians with whisky have also been arrested and are under guard with the Indians.

A Well Known Engineer.

Engineer Crittenden was a native of Paris, Ky., where his family now reside. He leaves a wife, a grown up son and a daughter, who have been notified by telegraph of the terrible fate which befel their father. Mr. Crittenden was the chief engineer in charge of the construction of the great Eads bridge in St. Louis, and was well known to the profession throughout the country. He was about 45 years of age.

CHICAGO GREETS DEPEW

And Depew Booms the World's Fair Scheme.

COLUMBUS THE HEROIC CRANK.

Over 6,000 Chicagoans Listen to an Enthusiastic Speech by "Our Chauncey" on the Great World's Fair—Uncle Sam's Miserable Exhibit at Paris' Exposition.

CHICAGO, June 6.—Six thousand Chicago citizens and visitors assembled in the Auditorium last night to listen to Chauncey M. Depew, who delivered an address upon the coming World's fair, under the auspices of the Chicago Press club. Stanley Waterloo, president of the Press club, introduced Mayor Cregier, who in turn introduced Dr. Depew. Loud and long continued cheers greeted the famous New Yorker as he stepped to the front of the platform. Here are a few the salient points of Mr. Depew's speech:

Journalism and the Fair.

"The question which has been assigned to me by your committee is the 'World's Fair,' and the success or the failure of this great enterprise will be dependent in a great measure upon the view which is taken of it by the press and the country. It must be a question of general discussion in the newspapers of the republic as to the character and extent of this exhibition and the support which it should receive it had better be abandoned at the start.

"Seldom here to speak upon the World's fair, in one view I may appear as the ragpicker, clashed to the chariot wheels of the conqueror for the purpose of grazing his triumph, but a broader and more general conception is, that after a healthy and friendly rivalry as to location, we are now all equally earnest and enthusiastic for a successful success.

Dead to the World.

"The marvelous expansion of our own means of inter-communication and our familiar knowledge of every part of our own country have led us to believe that the world appreciates us in equal measure with our actual and relative size. But this is only the utterance of the Fourth of July orator and the dream of the schoolboy. Our flag has almost disappeared from the seas, our people is dead to the world's progress, our navy is a myth, and the resources of our diplomacy are wholly unequal to the task of reaching the intelligence of foreign lands.

Exhibitions in the Past.

"Our first exhibition in New York in 1853 was managed by a private corporation and not properly supported by the government, was opened by the president of the United States and closed by the sheriff of the county. Foreign exhibits were seized for its debts and Horace Greeley, one of its managers, was imprisoned in Paris for his debts. Our second exhibition, the centennial one of 1876 at Philadelphia, was everything that a great success and the intelligent endeavor of patriotic citizens could create, but it lacked the cordial cooperation of the general government and all that it might have been. The grandest and most satisfactory display of the progress and the civilization of the world ever gathered for exhibition in Paris during the last summer.

A Miserable Showing at Paris.

"It was only when an American came to the limited spaces, hastily filled, assigned to the United States, and saw how sorely inadequate was the exhibit as a representation, or even a suggestion of our advancement and achievements in the arts, in mechanics, in industries and inventions, that with the blood mantling his cheek with mortification he felt that our credit and our reputation would only be established among trading and commercial peoples by an exhibition in America, the most majestic and comprehensive, and an invitation to the nations and tribes of the earth so hospitable and importunate as to bring them all within the boundaries of our fair. The Columbus quadri-centennial celebration will fill the ears of the world in recalled time in which all the world can cordially and fraternally unite. It is not necessary to dwell upon the great cause to which civilization today owes its advanced position are the introduction of Christianity and the discovery of America.

Columbus the Heroic Crank.

"Columbus stands deservedly at the head of that most useful band of men—the heroic cranks in history. The persistent assistant whom one generation despised to be a knave with one idea, succeeding ones often worship as a benefactor. The ragged navigator at the gate of the palace of Castile and Aragon outranks in fame the headless princes, the kings and statesmen and soldiers, not only of his own period, but also of those which have come after. Believing that the highest of his own generation, this celebration in his honor is not an empty pageant of music and artillery, of banners and processions but a gathering of the unseen representatives of the destries of mankind for the purpose of enlarging the liberties, promoting the peace, improving the condition and broadening the intelligence of a race."

An Eloquent Finale.

In conclusion Mr. Depew said: "Let this international fair be held; let the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus be celebrated; let it be commemorated by an industrial exhibition grander in extent and volume than any ever seen before, and let the Old World know what their children have done in the New; let the stars and stripes float from every roof and turret and flagstaff; let the bands announce the opening and closing of the fair each day with the inspiring strains of our national anthem, and we will separate from this grand communion, impressed more deeper than ever before with the fact that the proudest title on earth is that of American citizen."

Mr. Fish to Mr. Platt.

NEW YORK, June 6.—Hamilton Fish, Jr., opens war upon Hon. Thomas C. Platt in a letter to The Mail and Express denouncing Mr. Platt's action and that of the Republican state committee in reading Messrs. Fish and Gibbs out of the party. The letter accuses Mr. Platt of making deals with Tammany hall and of various other offenses, and is very bitter.

A Bridgeport Embezzler.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., June 6.—A case of embezzlement which covered several months since, by which several prominent residents of Turnbull and surrounding towns lost large amounts of money, has been brought to light, and culminated as is Rollin Beers, son of Legrand D. Beers, a young lawyer of much promise doing business in Bridgeport. Several months ago Mr. Beers visited his home and secured a large amount of money from his brother and sister, two wealthy neighbors, Miles and Elliott Bradley. Rev. C. J. Adams, proprietor of The Church Record, in Southport, and others, representing that he would invest it in mortgages in Brooklyn, paying large dividends. It is expected that his embezzlements will reach nearly $80,000. Elliott and Miles Beardsley, it is said, were victimized to the extent of $15,000, and the others in amounts ranging from $1,000 to $6,000. It is thought Beers has gone to Canada.

TO MARRY IN LONDON.

Well Known Americans Who Will Wed Away from Home.

During the present summer a number of Americans will exchange single for marital blessedness before the altars of various fashionable London churches. Why they choose to get married abroad instead of at home is a matter that concerns themselves alone, but the fact that so many residents of the United States have elected to wed at the English metropolis has of course attracted much attention and not a little comment. Among the nuptials to be celebrated there during the months of June, July and August are those of Lawrence Turnure and Miss Roxanne Stone, Antonio de Navarro and Miss Mary Anderson, and Mr. Lewis Morris Rutherfurd, Jr., and Mrs. S. S. Sands, Jr. Mrs. Sands is a blonde with regular features, oval face, blue eyes and golden hair. Her husband lost his life in the hunting field at Meadow Brook, L. I., about a year and a half ago. Mr. Rutherfurd is a wealthy bachelor of New York city, tall, brunette and of athletic build. He owns a big farm in New Jersey where he raises fancy stock and a particularly choice breed of fox terriers. The lady whom he is to wed is the mother of two pretty and interesting children.

MRS. S. S. SANDS, JR.

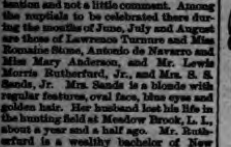
A NOTABLE JUNE WEDDING.

A Wealthy New Yorker to Marry a Baroness King's Daughter.



MR. OELRICHS AND MISS FAIR.

Mr. Herman Oelrichs has been known for several years as "the handsome bachelor" of New York city, and when he passed his 36th birthday without paying earnest court to any of the fair maidens of the social circle in which he moves anxious mammas and willing maidens erased him from their list of "possibles." He remained on the tally sheet of "eligibles," of course, for he is wealthy, rich and good tempered, but it was with some surprise that Gotham society learned last spring that he had plighted his troth and that he would wed in June.

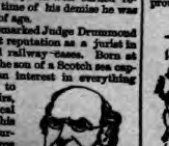
The lady of Mr. Oelrichs' choice is Miss Tessie Fair, the 26-year-old daughter of the famous California bonanza king. Lavish preparations have been made already for the nuptial ceremony, which is to take place at San Francisco. It is currently reported that the bride's trousseau has been provided at an expense exceeding $100,000. The lace drapery on the ivory satin wedding gown alone cost $5,000. The dress was made in Paris, did not give satisfaction when delivered and was remodeled in New York. Thirty other costumes are included in the outfit for the honeymoon trip.

Miss Fair is rather under the medium height and has dark hair, black eyes, a brunette complexion and a fine figure. Mr. Oelrichs is a heavily built blonde athlete nearly six feet tall. Like Miss Fair, he is wealthy and a lover of out door sports.

Many Years on the Bench.

On his decisions in railway and admiralty cases principally rests the fame of Thomas W. Drummond, ex-judge of the United States circuit court, who died recently at his home in Wheaton, Ills. In 1869 he took his seat on the Illinois district bench as an appointee of President Taylor. Nineteen years later President Grant made him judge of the Seventh circuit, comprising the states of Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana. In 1884 he retired to private life to pass the remainder of his days in well earned repose. At the time of his demise he was over 80 years of age.

As before remarked Judge Drummond made his great reputation as a jurist in admiralty and railway cases. Born at Bristol, Me., then son of a Scotch emigrant, he took an interest in everything pertaining to maritime affairs, and his practical knowledge in this direction naturally gave force and weight to his decisions of cases involving the rights of owners, shippers or sailors. It was his fortune to sit upon the circuit bench during two great financial and railroad crises—1873 and 1877. By 1876 over 16,000 miles of railroad had passed into the hands of receivers appointed by Judge Drummond, and each of these receiverships had to undergo detailed reports to the court. The mass of work imposed upon him was almost inconceivable, and that he achieved the success he did in straightening out innumerable financial tangles will always remain among the feats of remarkable legal triumphs. Two sons and four daughters survive Judge Drummond, all of them well established in life.



SAILORS OF ALL CLIMES.

THEY MAY BE FOUND ANY DAY IN COENTIES SLIP, NEW YORK.

The Black "Englishman," Who Is Proud of It—"Barbady Niggers" from Jamaica and Elsewhere—Shipping Masters, Boarding House Keepers, Etc.

In those hours of leisure when I want rest without solitude, and would lighten the sense of my own freedom by watching the struggles of others, there is no part of New York so attractive as the lower section of South street—from the Battery around northeast to Wall street ferry. There one may see specimens of almost every race of man from North Britain to Malay, and from red haired Finn to Barbadoes "nigger," and withal some crosses which would at once puzzle and delight the ethnologist.

GROUP IN COENTIES SLIP.

"Kenchies slip" (Coenties), as they call it, is the common parading ground for many races and for the shipping agent, sailors, boarding house keepers, agents of many kinds and saloon keepers of a very peculiar kind, "fakirs" of various moral shades, peddlers of foreign curiosities and sailors of every race and color. A city ordinance grants some extra privileges in that locality to seafaring men and those who deal with them, and the short, broad street or "slip" is at this season crowded with a chattering, disputing, polyglot and hilarious mass of humanity. As one walks along South street, the entire water front is thick set with the bows of sailing vessels from every part of the world; on the other side are the water fronts of houses, while the streets leading off at right angles to the shore are well supplied with sailors' "retreats" and the establishments which are usually connected with them, and from which direction the crowds center on Coenties slip, which is to the sailor what the Produce Exchange or Stock Exchange is to the speculator.

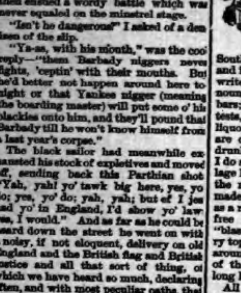
On a recent May afternoon in the slip I observed a great increase in activity for now it is the season when sailors are in demand. I was particularly struck with the appearance of a black crew just from Kingston, Jamaica, who had been paid at the rate of $20 per month for the voyage, and had already squandered enough of it to be in a quarrelsome humor and complain of imposition. They formed a noisy group, one part insisting on going at once to the British consul and asking for redress, the other advocating a combine to do the "bounding masters." Around them was a circle of interested listeners, and on the outside another set of agents watching for prey. At length one Jamaican, a black that Georgia would not produce his equal, saw the "boarding master" who had excited his special enmity, and then ensued a wordy battle which was never equaled on the minstrel stage.

"Isn't he dangerous" I asked of a denizen of the slip.

"Ya-as, with his mouth," was the cool reply—"them Barbady niggers never fights, 'ceptin' with their mouths. But he'd better not happen around here to night or that Yankee nigger (meaning the boarding master) will put some of his blackies onto him, and they'll pound that Barbady till he won't know himself from a last year's corpse."

The black sailor had meanwhile exhausted his stock of expletives and moved off, sending back this Parthian shot:

"Yah, yah! yo' tawk big here, yes, yo do; yes, yo' do; yah, yah; but ef I jes had yo' in England, I'd show yo' law yes, I would." And so far as he could be heard down the street he went on with a noisy, if not eloquent, delivery on old England and the British flag and British justice and all that sort of thing, of which we have heard so much, declaring often, and with most peculiar unction, that he was an Englishman, he was, and was proud to know it.



A BLACK SAILOR OF JAMAICA.

"Ya-as, ya-as," said my new acquaintance; "them Barbady niggers fights hard with their mouths; but I'd as soon take any locomotive out o' Blackwell's Island and put him in the cook's galley as one of them fellows. They jes' naturally got to be kicked down and keep under to be wuth anything, and they're wuth mighty little then."

The speaker was steward on a large vessel, and profanely declared that he'd had one "British nigger" in the galley and would never have another. "They'll jaw all day and not a lick, other to work or to fight; but if they's a row among these Irish sailors, look out! Some fun! He's beat'll be broke. And them Greeks you see there—they're mighty bad fellers with knives. Now, an Irishman or a Britisher will have it out with you, whip or get whipped and be done with it; but if a Greek gets a spite again you at the start of a voyage you'll never see a smile on you've got your back again something 'at he can't get at it. See that brownie there?" he asked, suddenly breaking off and pointing.

"Yes; he is a very singular looking head."

"He's a Malay nigger."

"What is that?"

"A mongrel—mixed Malay and quad roon. They's a whole house full of 'em up on Mulberry street. Good sailors, too, but not so stiddy as straight niggers. The masters never mix crews any more—either all black or all white—and they don't mix in the houses or anywhere else. Each eat to itself. Bars up jes' as tight as anywhere."

And so, indeed, I found it. No matter how poor or ignorant or degraded, whether English or Irish, Greek, Spaniard or Italian, provided only that it is not Aryan, the sailor boarder excludes the negro as relentlessly as he is excluded from the mansions of Murray Hill and Fifth avenue. But, to her honor be it said, Great Britain stands by her blacks. "Barbady nigger" is an American seaport phrase for a black sailor from any part of the British West Indies, though, in fact, most of them are from Jamaica, and the British consul in New York looks into their rights and wrongs with the same care as into those of white Britons. But the truth must be acknowledged that neither the consul nor the missionary, much less the lawyer or politician, understands the sailor's nature as well as the boarding house keepers.

In the olden time many grave charges of robbery and brutality were made against this class; but under the present shipping laws they have to prove up some kind of a character—or, at least, the fossil remains of one, which is much more than they once had to do. I have made it a point to note their appearance and method of dealing with the newly landed sailor, and my impression is that his confidence in them is, in a majority of cases, better founded than is generally believed. But the minority—ah, there is a hard lot of them! The "bouter"—landsmen would call him an agent or drummer—is a particularly active and pleasant appearing little fellow, in his way quite gentlemanly, who never runs or strikes a blow, under the worst provocation. As quoted above, however, close observers on South street assert that he sometimes has underlings to do the striking.

Under present laws the sailor has every advantage, if only he has the wit to use it and the sober determination to stand on his right. For a mile or more along

A BOARDING HOUSE RUNNER.

South street "retreats" are numerous, and it is taken by consent that all who write or talk on the subject are to denounce the "dives" sold over the bars;" but I must say, after a few "flying tests," that it averages as good as the liquor of most village saloons. Its effects are certainly no worse. I rarely see a drunken sailor in New York, and the few I do see are generally not many than village laborers in like condition. Indeed, the most surprising discovery I have made on South street is that sailors are, as a rule, quiet men and comparatively "law abiding." If they habitually "blast their eyes" and "shiver their timbers" topfights," they do it when I am not around. In short, I must add the sailor of the stage and current fiction to the long list of noted people I have not met.

All this applies to South street from the Battery around to Fulton ferry, but farther uptown, and two or three squares away from the river, there are said to be many places fully down to the old time level of horror and debauchery; in Roosevelt, Cherry and Water streets, for instance. The old Five Points are almost respectable, and the adjacent sections of Mott and Mulberry streets are monopolized by Chinese and Italians. The place to see a sailor now best is nearest to his ship, and through the whole of South street one sees a continuous line of bows on one side and shipping houses on the other. So South street is the promenade where one may find most of the curious with least of the disagreeable. J. H. BRADLE.

Lord Byron's granddaughter, Lady Anne Blunt, her husband and their daughter are living on the borders of the desert in Egypt, about six miles from Cairo. They have adopted the dress and customs of the Arabs, and seem to enjoy their lange from civilized usages.

The new Krupp gun ordered for Orenstadt is to be forty-four feet long, and can be fired twice a minute. It will throw a ball weighing 2,000 pounds a distance of twelve miles. Each discharge will involve an expense of $1,500.

"Why drag in Velasquez?" This was Artist Whistler's recent comment on a friend's remark that the world had produced but two painters—Whistler and Velasquez.

A TALENTED BOY COLONEL.

The Wonderful Military Aptitude Shown by Nicholas P. Hartman.

Nicholas P. Hartman is a native of New York city, a resident of Brooklyn, and a frequent official visitor to the city of Washington. He is 23 years of age and holds a commission as a colonel—not in the regular army of the United States, but in one of its recognized adjuncts.

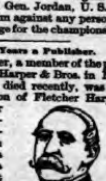
Soon after his seventh birthday Col. Hartman began to show a great fondness for things military, and from this time on devoted much attention to the study of drill movements and of the sword and musket manual. In 1886 Col. Fred Grant, who had noticed and admired the lad's proficiency, secured him a cadetship at West Point. Defective eyesight barred him from taking the regular course, but he was permitted to remain as a special student of tactics. June, 2, 1887, Hartman was made captain of the West Point military company, an organization composed of twenty-four members of the various classes specially chosen for their proficiency in drill. Under Capt. Hartman's command the company won fifty-four out of fifty-six contests, the chief cause of its success being a bugle drill arranged by the young leader. This drill is so highly thought of that it has of late been incorporated into the regular tactics of the United States army.

Jan. 1, 1890, after the muster out of the West Point company because of the graduating of the members and their assignment to different posts of duty, Capt. Hartman was commissioned colonel of the Washington military company, an organization which acts as the body guard of the president. It is composed of officers of the regular army and candidates for West Point, who are debarred from active field service by reason of some physical defect, and turns out four times a year for drill and inspection.

In addition to his other accomplishments Col. Hartman is a magnificent swordsman, and Gen. Jordan, U. S. A., offers to back him against any person in the world of his age for the championship.

For Many Years a Publisher.

Fletcher Harper, a member of the publishing firm of Harper & Bros. in New York city, who died recently, was the last surviving son of Fletcher Harper, one of the four brothers who established the business. Born in 1826, he took a voyage to China before the mast when only 15 years old, spent some time at Columbia college, made a European trip, served a long apprenticeship with the firm which his father was a member, and at the age of 41 entered it as a partnership. He was a widower and leaves one daughter, the wife of Hiram W. Sibley, of Rochester, N. Y.



FLETCHER HARPER.

Five members of the firm of Harper & Bros. now remain—Philip J. A. Harper, the senior partner, a son of James Harper; Joseph W. Harper, son of J. Wesley Harper; John W. Harper, Joseph Henry, a nephew of Fletcher Harper, and Orville Harper, son of Joseph Abner Harper, who recently retired.

A Model German Schoolhouse.

At Mannheim, in Baden, Germany, there stands a schoolhouse which is said to be the most perfect building of its kind. It cost $225,000 and contains forty-two ordinary schoolrooms, besides two rooms for drawing, two for singing, two for hand work, a large gymnasium, a hall for public exercises, two meeting rooms for directors, two sets of rooms for servants and four little prison cells for refractory pupils. The materials in the structure are almost exclusively iron and brick. The ceilings of all the rooms, corridors and the big hall are of concrete. The floors of the class rooms are hard wood laid on asphalt. They are supposed to be so constructed as to favor the accumulation of dust and the breeding of bacteria impossible. The building is heated by a low pressure steam system. In the basement are swim baths. The boys' bath accommodates twenty at once and the girls' bath fifteen. Half of the basement is a huge, bright room, full of tables and chairs. Here in winter 900 poor children will receive a half pint of milk and a roll each daily for luncheon. In the ninety winter days during which this arrangement will prevail the directors estimate that they will give away 90,360 quarts of milk and 81,000 rolls.

Telegrapher Bolosen's Untimely Death.

Telegraph operators and those interested in electrical affairs all over the country were shocked the other day to learn of the death of Mr. J. W. Bolosen, one of the New York night managers of the Postal company, whose demise at a Brooklyn hospital was due to injuries received in a collision while riding a bicycle. Although but 31 years of age, Mr. Bolosen had achieved remarkable success in his chosen profession, and up to last spring was accounted the fastest sending operator in the United States. At that time, however, the distinction was wrested from him in the New York tournament by a young man named Pollock, living at Hartford, Conn. Despite this, however, Mr. Bolosen was generally conceded to be one of the most excellent and accurate telegraphers in the country. He was a widower and leaves two sons, one 7 and the other 5 years of age.

BOROUGH COUNCIL.

ANOTHER STORMY SESSION LAST EVENING.

Mr. Emmons Wanted to Oust Justice Hardy and Introduced a Resolution to That Effect, It did not Prevail. — He Also Charges the Street Committee with Ignoring the Willow Avenue Petition for Macadamizing.

The Borough Council met in regular session last evening. It was 8:10 o'clock when Mayor Pine called the meeting to order, and in response to roll call Councilmen Buckle, Brokaw, Hageman, Needham, Sebring and Reed responded.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and on motion approved.

A communication signed by John F. Randolph, A. H. Bogardus, Henry A. McGee and others, requesting council to revoke the appointment of James Hardy as magistrate, was the appointment at a previous meeting to all borough cases was read.

Mr. Sebring declared it to be their judgment Hardy was not a fit person to fill the position.

Mr. Emmons moved that the petition be referred to the committee on Laws and Ordinances.

Mr. Bradley moved to amend the motion by making it to a special committee.

Mr. Buckle—"I think it ought to be referred to the committee on Laws and Ordinances, and let them report on it."

Mr. Hageman—"I cannot see what the Laws and Ordinance committee has to do with the matter. I should think that a special committee should be received and placed on file.

A vote on Mr. Bradley's amendment was then taken, and it was lost.

Mr. Emmons' motion to refer the communication to the Law and Ordinance committee was then put by a vote of four to one.

A communication from Warren Engine Company, No. 1, designating the officers that had been elected to serve for the ensuing year was read and referred to the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps.

Petitions from various hackmen, butchers, carriages, etc., were read and referred to the Committee on Licenses and unanimously granted.

Claims were presented as follows:

C. Hanby	$2.60
Dunham	3.50
Hall	2.25
Dunn	2.00
Plainfield	40.00
C. J. Haddock	10.22
Hageman	10.22
Hageman	28.16
Smith	35.00
Berrien	2.00
E. B. Berrien	$13.12
C. D. Berrien	34.85

Mr. Buckle—"Mr. Clerk, the borough report for the two months that he was in office that he had imposed fines amounting to $33.5. The report was received and ordered filed.

The monthly report of Collector H. N. Stone was read, received and ordered filed.

Mr. Sebring, from the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps, recommended that the Fire Department be placed in a position to do good and efficient work when called upon and that the committee be authorized to purchase 1000 feet of new hose. They further recommended that the cells be torn out of the engine house so as to enable the company to obtain horse there. The chairman further stated that two hands of $200 each would fall due Jan. 1st, 1891. The report was received and ordered filed.

Mr. Hageman from the Committee on Streets reported that the committee had several streets scraped and turnpiked and that the work macadamizing Grove street was nearly completed. The report was received and to the committee.

The Auditing Committee reported all the bills correct and they were ordered paid.

Mr. Hageman introduced a resolution authorizing the Street Committee to borrow $600 for use on the borough streets only. The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Emmons introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the action taken April 15th, by which James Hardy was appointed a magistrate to try all borough causes, be and the same is rescinded.

Mr. Emmons stated that he offered the resolution in comply with the petition of Mr. McGee and others requesting that Mr. Hardy be ousted from office.

Mayor Pine asked if the Council had power to act in the matter.

Mr. Emmons said that the resolution did not take the Justiceship away from Mr. Hardy. It merely left him powerless to try borough cases. Continuing he said: "I asked Mr. Hardy to resign, but he refused to do so. I think it would have been better had he resigned.

Mr. Needham thought that the committee had not had time to look into the matter, and that it ought to be thoroughly investigated before any definite action be taken. He said a man may be unfortunate in business, and yet be free from any intention to defraud people.

Mr. Buckle—"I thought it rather hasty to bring the resolution up in that form. I voted to refer the petition to the committee because I thought that they would thoroughly investigate the matter before taking any action."

Mr. Hageman—"I do not think that the Council are in a position to remove Mr. Hardy. If he has been unfortunate in business that is no reason why we should remove him from office. Good responsible men have signed the petition asking for his removal. They may have had reasons for so doing, but it is not shown in the petition. They merely ask for his removal. In common justice we have no power to act in the matter. It was a disgraceful act to bring such a resolution before an intelligent body of men as this. I am sorry to do such a thing. Mr. Hardy makes a good justice and magistrate, and the law does not give us the power to remove him. We have no right to do it. It would be infamous."

Mr. Emmons—"I have investigated the matter and find that we have a legal right to do it. I simply brought it before the Council. I have nothing more to say."

Mr. Buckle—"I think the committee should have taken more time to look in the matter."

Mr. Hageman—"The committee has no power to act. We simply referred the petition to them. We did not give them any power to act. If we pass that resolution to-night it would leave a terrible blot on Mr. Hardy's character."

Mayor Pine—"I do not think that the committee has had any meeting since the petition was referred to them. I think it would have been well for the committee to to have held a meeting before bringing the matter before the Council."

Borough Counsel Read was called upon for his opinion. He said: "No man is guilty until proven guilty. The council has the right to elect a man to the office and to remove him. Council could not remove him even if charges were preferred against him. If he has done anything of a criminal nature he should be impeached as a Justice of the Peace. Every man is entitled to a fair and impartial trial before an unprejudiced jury."

Mr. Sebring thought it would be well for the committee to investigate the matter and report at the next meeting.

Mr. Hageman said that the committee were not given power to report. That the petition was merely referred to it.

Mr. Needham thought the committee should make some report.

A vote was taken which resulted as follows:

Ayes—Mr. Emmons. Nays—Messrs. Buckle, Hageman, Needham and Sebring.

The resolution was declared lost.

Mr. Sebring offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps be empowered to purchase 500 feet of new hose, the price not to exceed 80 cents per foot.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Emmons offered a resolution that the petition from Willow avenue be given the privilege of withdrawing their petition in reference to macadamizing that thoroughfare.

In support of his resolution Mr. Emmons said that he did not think that the petitioners had been justly treated, and that they did not think as other and they therefore desired to withdraw their petition.

Mr. Hageman—"When Mr. Emmons gets up in the Council and makes a statement that the petitioners from Willow avenue did not get justice I think he is overstepping the bound of propriety. The committee have decided to macadamize Grove street, on the leading thoroughfares of the borough first. the petitioners form Willow avenue think that they have not been justly treated. There is no reason why they should not receive justice. I think Mr. Emmons should have toned down his remarks a little."

Mr. Emmons—"The Willow avenue petition was the first one in and I think it should have been the first one considered. The petitioners were not justly treated."

Mr. Buckle—"I don't like these personal reflections. It has become a common thing at every meeting."

Mr. Hageman—(Sarcastically)—"Oh! the gentleman is afraid that the petitioners will not get justice from this wicked council."

Mr. Needham said that the petitioners had a right to withdraw the petition if they wish to.

Mr. Emmons stated that Mr. McGee had asked him to withdraw the petition.

Mr. Buckle—"It looks to me as though Mr. Emmons felt hurt because the petition was withdrawn. I would like to know if Mr. McGee and asked him to let him (Mr. Emmons) with draw it."

Mr. Emmons—"Mr. McGee asked me to withdraw it. I did not say this per se that. (Addressing Mr. Buckle) — "the idea of you saying that before this Council."

The vote was taken and the motion to withdraw was lost.

A warrant for $75 was ordered drawn in favor of Geo. Fire, Water and Lamps Committee to pay the interest on two bonds which will be due July 1st.

On motion the newly elected officers of Warren Engine Company were confirmed.

The Council then adjourned.

ONE OF THE HORRIBLE EXAMPLES.

A Still Benighted Brotherhood Tooting the Old Chestnut.

One of the best "protected" industries is silk manufacture. Within a brief period a number of Paterson silk manufactories have failed, and now the silk operatives are compelled to go on strike against large reductions in their wages, ranging from 10 to 30 per cent., although they are among the poorest paid skilled workmen in the State.—Clinton Democrat.

Our Democratic friends catch at every little circumstance which may be distorted to unlatend, to shows the principle of the Republican party, to protect our home industries. If the strops are bad, the weather unfavorable, or "is grippe" rages, it is all the fault of the Republican party. The talented Senator Carpenter, who edits the Democrat, of course knows better, but that sort of stuff which appears above, evidently goes better with his readers than the truth.

The growth of Paterson is the most extraordinary of any inland city in the State. Why? Because of its extensive silk industries. Why has it got such extensive silk industries? Because the industry was started, fostered and promoted under the encouragement of the Republican principle of Protection, and better silks than those which before Protection cost as high as $6 per yard from abroad, now cost less than $2 per yard made at home because of Protection. Not only that. The best laborers have come to Paterson to become so profitable that many have engaged in it—too many it appears for the volume of business. The resulting competition—home competition—has forced down prices until there is no longer any profit at the wages paid. The remedy for the manufacturers must either stop manufacturing altogether or reduce the wages. Some trying to hold out are ruined, and fail. The market is glutted. But how would Democratic Free Trade help matters? Would not flooding our markets with foreign goods produced by pauper labor only glut the market all the more? How could it be otherwise?

The stereotyped argument of our Democratic friends is that by Free Trade we get access to the markets of the world, and business would be booming. Unfortunately for their argument the records show that each decade in this country when the Democratic ideas of Free Trade prevailed general ruin has followed, and pauper wages resulted.

The supposition is not that we would have any better chances in reaching the markets of the world than we have now, does it follow that while paying double and treble the wages we could afford to sell at the same prices as other nations which paid less wages. There is no reason why they should not receive justice. I think Mr. Emmons should have toned down his remarks a little."

Mr. Emmons—"The Willow avenue petition was the first one in and I think it should have been the first one considered. The petitioners were not justly treated."

Mr. Buckle—"I don't like these personal reflections. It has become a common thing at every meeting."

Angry (?) at The News' Criticisms of His Poem.

To the Editor of The News:—I sent you a poem last week and asked you to publish it in your paper. You declined, and returned it to me with the crushing reply that I was no poet, and that you "could turn out better poetry out of a sausage machine." Now, I want to be candid, and I propose to show up your attempt to throttle budding genius. Publish this card and the following poem in your advertising column and charge me your full advertising rates.

THE POEM.

I stood upon the ocean's sandy beach,
And with a reed I wrote upon the sand these

"Agnes, I love thee!"
The waves came and the waves rolled upon the strand,
And blotted out their impression,
Cruel waves, treacherous sand, fragile reed!
So changeable is love to them.
But from the highest mountain peak I'll pluck
the tallest cedar,
And, climbing to the crater of Vesuvius, with it
I will write
Upon the high and burnished heavens these tender words:
"Rogers Bros. are holding the biggest low price sale of shoes ever held in Plainfield.
They are now selling ladies' kid button, opera (hose clampers) would almost take your breath away."
And I will be to see my dog-gone wave
wash that out.

Don't want such bargain. Cut this out and bring it to us, it is worth 25 cents to you. For every purchase of $3 worth at one time. If you will bring this ad. we will allow you 25 cents for you a reduction of 25 cents. If you want $15 worth of shoes or repairing or both secure two of these ad's and we will allow you $2.50 for them. This will hold good until July 1st.

Great fortunes will be made in the south in the last years of this century. The tide is at its flood. In the cotton states recently within a period of two weeks new manufacturing enterprises were started that employ a capital of $4,000,000.

Some economists are hard to please. They have written about the amount of mortgages on American real estate being so great that it was impossible to ascertain the sum total, and now that among the census questions a man must answer whether he is mortgaged they say such inquiries are an unwarrantable interference with private business.

It is notable that at almost every national convention at which a large body of men gather the members are shocked and saddened by the death of some of their number. It is rare that a presidential convention meets that one or more members do not die, either during its sessions or immediately following, the death resulting in some way from excitement or exposure attendant on the meeting. This is true even of national medical conventions. This year Rev. James Lamb, a delegate to the Presbyterian general assembly, died suddenly even before he reached the meeting, on his way thither.

Halstead on the African Explorer.

In writing of Stanley and his elephant gun in The Cosmopolitan, Mr. Halstead shows that he has settled down and fully warmed up to his new work on the eastern coast, and that he is training his own elephant gun, in first class trim, on men and things. Here is a characteristic passage:

"In the midst of the extraordinary honors heaped on Stanley Africanus, and the universal estimation of his hardihood and his heroism, it should be remembered that he is something more than a man of the highest courage and the boldest initiative. He is of missionary spirit and has a solemn sense of the sacred gravity of his mission. He uses the elephant gun on the savages who hover for his blood, on the borders of the strange rivers of the dark land, and he orders criminals to execution with the command, 'Take him to God!' but he has faith that he has been afforded divine protection in opening the most benighted of the earth's continents to the light of Christianity.

The Secret of Keeping Young.

It is her good nature that keeps Patti young, says Howard in The Boston Globe. It is her even temper, her determination to take things calmly and restfully, her cultivated cheeriness and merry ways in the most trying situations that enable her voice to bubble forth and ring like a bird's, still, though Patti, bless her! was born in '43. She looks, acts and feels like a girl still, and earns nearly half a million a year. Howard says:

"It is because she looks at everything from a cheery point of view; it is because she has a passion of fondness, rolling from her heart the burdens of sorrow and of trouble as waters roll from rocks covered with moss, that she is a complete and conclusive illustration of what a cheery disposition natural, and a happy-go-lucky manner cultivated, will bring about.

She is a text, she is a beacon ray, she is a watch fire on the hill to all women and to all men.

The Worthy Poor.

A newspaper correspondent has been investigating the worthy poor of Boston with some results that would be surprising to the gentle dames and heavy philanthropists of that charitable city. Boston cares for its worthy poor. There the worthy poor live in clover.

The investigations of Mr. Bates are of themselves a commentary on the custom of indiscriminate almsgiving. In one instance an old couple had lived alone and childless many years. That was their story. They had been helped by two benevolent societies, and were on the list as "most pious and worthy paupers." But they had a daughter, and she opened an excellent living. Being out of a place once, she came home to the old folk, and insisted that they should buy her a piano. In a weak moment of filial affection they consented. The other girls in the tenement house became jealous, and told the whole story on these honest old paupers.

Another case was that of a poor girl who had been bedridden five years. Good people had visited her and prayed with her and given her both tracts and money. Her only prayer was that she might see the dear outdoor world once more before she died. One day one of her kindest benefactresses was riding in a street car, when who should enter it, dressed in the latest fashion, but the dear, bedridden girl who had called out so much sympathy. The bedridden girl was a sham and a fraud, and had been paying it fine on benevolent Boston for five years.

The most laughable case, however, was that of two spinster sisters, "decayed gentlewomen." They, too, had been helped by charity to eke out a precarious existence. The city had aided them, they were on the lists of benevolent societies, and some relatives also contributed to the support of these decayed ladies. What was the surprise, therefore, of a lawyer of their acquaintance to receive a visit from one of the sisters, who came to ask how they could with their little savings and pickings and stealings, amounting to $18,000, in a way that the will could not be broken. All of which goes to show that there may be such a thing as being too charitable.

SILVER HAS THE FLOOR.

The Question Debated by Both Senate and House.

THE BILL THAT WILL BE PASSED.

It Is Said That the Republican Caucus Measure Will Go to the President in Its Present Form—Silver Dollar Bland Coinage Is Dead—Speeches of Alleged Ill Omen.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—The belief is becoming more and more pronounced among the members of the house that the silver bill adopted by the Republican caucus and now being debated in the house will become a law in its present form with the possible exception that the section providing for the purchase of $4,500,000 of bullion per month will be changed so that it will provide for the purchase of 4,500,000 ounces. The feature of the bill that will be the source of much controversy, it is believed, is that providing that the holder of a bullion certificate may demand its redemption in either coin or bullion, with the discretion given to the secretary of the treasury to refuse to redeem in bullion. There is a constantly growing belief that the bill will pass the house intact, but that the bullion feature will be struck out in the senate. This will necessitate a conference between the two houses, and there is a probability that the conferees will allow the bullion feature to remain in the bill. The bullion feature is advocated by Secretary Windom, who, of course, represents the views of President Harrison, and the senate will be almost obliged to agree to it if the bill is to receive the executive signature.

Debate in the House.

The debate on the silver bill was continued in the house. Mr. Laird (Minn.) favored the republican caucus bill. Agricultural depression, he thought, would be relieved by its passage. Mr. Walker (Mass.) opposed the bill. He said that any man or party that put the country on a silver basis would be sunk in eternal infamy. Mr. Blount (Ga.) contended that the demonetization of silver had cast a blighting curse upon everybody but the capitalist. The present contraction of the currency was due to the demonetization in 1873. The only way to relieve the interests of the country was to increase the circulation. He said the treasury bill was a Wall street measure. Speaking of the pending bill, and advocated a free coinage measure.

Mr. Bland Protests.

Mr. Bland (Mo.) protested against the denial of the right of the minority to offer amendments. He, as a member of the committee on coinage, weights and measures, had asked whether he would be allowed to offer a free coinage substitute. The chairman had replied that that would be arranged, and Mr. Bland charged that there had been a neglect in carrying out the promise of the committee. The gag law had been placed upon the minority for the purpose of passing a bill through the house which would demonetize silver. The bill was a Wall street scheme and a gold bug scheme to change the ratio between gold and silver. He especially criticised the redemption clause, arguing that it would prevent any possible expansion of the currency. It held out a temptation to the secretary of the treasury to redeem millions by speculation in Wall street. The government needed either issue fiat money or give unlimited use to gold and silver.

Ex-President Cleveland's Attitude.

Mr. Dorsey (Neb.) said that every one admitted the insufficiency of the circulating medium, and it could easily be shown that the greatest prosperity ever experienced by our people was when they had the largest amount of circulation per capita. If Secretary Windom had purchased and coined the maximum of four millions per month there would have been no need of this discussion. He had never yet heard mentioned the administration of President Harrison. To that section of the substitute which provided for bullion redemption he emphatically objected. Mr. McRae (Ark.) appealed to gentlemen on the other side who believed in free coinage to restore silver to its proper place. Referring to the attitude of ex-President Cleveland on the silver question he said that Mr. Cleveland was not in accord with the sentiment of a large majority of his party.

Senator Plumb Speaks.

In the senate Mr. Plumb (Kan.) spoke of the silver bill in connection with the pending appropriation bill. The senate had been appealed to by the senator from New York (Mr. Hiscock) against the bill in the sacred name of protection. Silver was an American product—an annual product larger than many others which were to be protected by duties of 200 or 300 per cent. under the coming tariff bill. He would like to ask the senator from New York, who was so anxious about foreign commerce, what he intended to do with the tariff bill, which would prevent the United States having any foreign exchange. He hoped that he might interpret the senator's remarks on that point as a hopeful augury of the action of the senator in putting his knife into the bill now before the finance committee; a bill which would raise the rates of nearly everything used by the mass of the people.

Mr. Hiscock explained that the point of his argument was that if imports were diminished it did not follow as a matter of course that the export trade would be diminished. If the United States could place in the markets of the world what it had to sell, and could compete with other products, the nations would buy it; and just to the extent that the United States did not take foreign products in exchange for what it exported it would be balance of trade in favor of the United States be increased, and gold would come in to pay these balances.

The bill was laid aside, and the senate passed the bill to authorize Maricopa county, Ariz., to issue bonds in aid of railroad construction.

Senator Blair's Pension Bill.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—Mr. Blair has introduced in the senate a general pension bill. It provides a service pension for those who served sixty days in the war of the rebellion or any Indian war prior to 1886 of one cent for each day of service monthly, not to be more than $12 or less than $6 per month in addition to any other pension granted. No service pension is to be granted where the annual income at the time of making application is more than $1,200. The bill also provides a disability pension of $6 to $12 a month, according to the degree of disability. The service pension is to be paid a widow, minor children or dependent father or mother, without regard to the cause of death. The rate for minor children is to increase by $4 instead of $2 a month, and the pension of a minor child who is an idiot or disabled is to continue through life.

WEST POINT WARFARE.

Cadets Give a Wonderful Exhibition of Horsemanship.

WEST POINT, N. Y., June 7.—Examinations at the Military academy are nearly over and to-night will see the end. The drill set down for Friday by the programme was the school of the soldier mounted, in which two platoons of the first class, under command of Capt. Dorst, Fourth cavalry, gave an excellent exhibition of proficiency in horsemanship. The drill was scheduled for Saturday, and owing to its limited capacity was very exclusive, only the nearest friends of army officers witnessing it. The drill was of one hour duration, and most thrilling and exciting in character. The cadets, clad in grey riding suits, mounted and dismounted, vaulting and running horses with and without saddles, shot at imaginary foes with the revolver in one hand and cut at thrust the heads from a kneeling enemy with the other, jumped hurdles four feet high, fought imaginary hand-to-hand battles with sabers over the possession of a trophy won, and finally as a coup d'etat the entire platoon dismounted, and as if by magic, each threw on its side the animal he had been riding.

The exhibition of skill was frequently greeted with outbursts of applause, and when the twenty young warriors dismounted for the last time as platoons, and marched forth to their barracks, they had just cause to feel that they merited the applause that followed them.

The 105 young candidates for admission to the Academy will not commence to arrive until Saturday of next week—June 14, 16 and 17 being the dates set.

Few of the spectators who listen to the sweet music of the band on evening parade know that six of the men furnishing the music are prisoners, who whitewash the guard house walls during the day, and marched up from the prison a half hour preceding parade, compelled to fall in line and play, then are returned to their prison home again. There are the men to whom, for an advance of pay on June 1, refused to fall in line for review, purchased a keg of lager and taking up position on the rear part of the hill, cheered lustily and long whenever the band struck up an air. They will be tried by a general court martial as soon as graduation is over with.

A dispatch from Washington the detachment of artillery here will be disbanded on June 30, all the men composing it, about 100 in number, being discharged. An order has been in force some time that married men cannot be re-enlisted in the army. About half the present artillery detachment members are married and live in Camptown and Logtown. The new order is causing those married soldiers much uneasiness. They receive about $25 per month, their clothing, food and house rent free.

FISHERMEN ARE ENRAGED.

They Threaten to Fire Upon Frenchmen at the Newfoundland Coast.

HALIFAX, N. S., June 7.—Among the passengers by the steamer Caspian, from St. Johns, N. F., was Rev. Father Gutlen. In his interview he said that the fishermen at Sandy Point, St. George's bay, are very much excited over the manner in which they have been treated by the French. The day before the Caspian sailed the schooner Rover, while fishing off St. George's, was hailed by a boat from a French man-of-war and ordered to take in her nets. Capt. Graham refused to obey, and the French men deliberately pulled the fishing gear from the water. The Rev. Father Howley interviewed the commander of the French vessel and got him to refrain from further action until the arrival of the St. Johns delegates, who are now on the other side trying to effect a settlement of the question.

A number of fishermen held a meeting at St. George's at which resolutions were passed to the effect that the French cause inside the shore limits and floated their nets they would be fired upon.

Magistrate Dyer, of St. George's bay, has telegraphed Premier Whitney that the French armed force had landed at Sandy Point as reported, but that a French naval officer, armed with a sword and accompanied by one man, landed on the public wharf and read a notice to the people to remove certain nets. The prefect apostolic of St. George's bay has telegraphed the colonial secretary that the French had acted within their rights in reading the notice.

An Aged Mountaineer Murdered.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., June 7.—The authorities of Duchess county have been notified of a murder that was committed in the town of Unionville on Tuesday afternoon last, when Washington Oliver, an aged mountaineer, was shot by his son-in-law, Arthur Pendegrass. Oliver lay in the road in an unconscious condition until Wednesday afternoon when he died. Pendegrass had not been living with his wife and she had made her home with her father, taking her two children with her. It is presumed that Pendegrass and Oliver quarreled about the possession of the children. Pendegrass had previously threatened to take the old man's life. Pendegrass has not yet been apprehended.

Eleven Firemen Injured.

PHILADELPHIA, June 7.—A fire broke out in the engine room of the Pennsylvania Gas Light company yesterday afternoon. It was probably started by a spark from a pipe. Twelve barrels of gasoline exploded and seriously burned eleven firemen about the face, hands and body. They are: William McConnell, William Hetrick, John Hillman, John Warner, Thomas Brogan, Thomas Smith, James Sullivan, Thomas Graham, David Patterson, Robert Burns, Joseph McQuare.

To Keep Liquor Out of Africa.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—Mr. Pickler, of North Dakota, has introduced in the house a bill to prohibit the exportation of intoxicating liquors to Africa and the islands of the Pacific ocean. The bill makes it unlawful for a vessel to leave the United States for any of the ports of Africa and the islands of the Pacific with any spirituous liquors on board.

English Bonelle in Jersey.

NEWARK, N. J., June 7.—It is said that an English syndicate has closed a deal here by which they get possession of three of the largest trunk and bag factories in the country. The firms indicated are T. B. Peddle & Co., William O. Headly & Son and Edward Simon & Brothers. The price paid was $1,450,000.

Ex-King Milan Is Co-Respondent.

PARIS, June 7.—The Siecle says that M. Christe, formerly prime minister of Servia, has retained counsel in connection with the case of Milan, the ex-king of Servia, is named as the co-respondent in the case.

Pullman's World's Fair Offer.

NEW YORK, June 7.—The World's Chicago special says that George M. Pullman has offered to take $5,000,000 World's fair bonds if he will be allowed to furnish and/or near the city of Pullman for the fair.

FIVE MEN WERE KILLED.

A BROKEN WHEEL'S DEADLY WORK

Railroad Officials Injured in a Wreck. Their Private Car Hurled from the Track—Eight Passengers Hurt on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

ROCKFORD, Ill., June 7.—An accident resulting in the death of one engineer and four section men occurred two miles west of here on the Chicago and Northwestern railway shortly before noon. The names of the victims are as follows:

A List of the Dead.

Anderson, Emil, of Winnebago.
Blaisdell, Edward W., of Freeport.
Gustafson, John, of Peckatonica.
John, August, of Peckatonica.
Nilsson, John, of Peckatonica.

Section Men Crushed.

The passenger train, which was on its way from Freeport to Chicago, jumped the rail on account of a broken wheel and tumbled down a six foot embankment in the midst of a gang of section men who had stepped to one side to allow the train to pass. The engine, tender and baggage coach were smashed to fragments and five dead bodies were taken from the wreck.

Several Others Hurt.

Engineer Blaisdell had been engineer on this division of the road for over thirty-five years. William Seeker, of Freeport, the fireman, was badly bruised and had the right leg cut, but he will live. Two other section men were hurt, but only slightly. The passengers and the rest of the trainmen escaped with slight bruises.

Officials in a Wreck.

WHEELING, W. Va., June 7.—No explanation has yet been found for the accident on the Ohio River railroad by which half a dozen officials of the Baltimore and Ohio and the Ohio River companies were so seriously hurt. The sufferers were taken to the McClure hotel. No deaths will follow.

A List of the Injured.

A. H. Johnson, engineer of maintenance of way of the Baltimore and Ohio company, and John Mock, superintendent of bridges on the Ohio river road, are in the most serious condition. Mr. Mock sustained scalp wounds of a grave nature, and in addition is badly hurt about the body and limbs. Maj. Johnson was badly injured about the head, and his right thigh is broken. The private car West Virginia, which left the track, is badly wrecked.

Eight Passengers Injured.

CINCINNATI, June 7.—An accident occurred on the Louisville and Nashville road at English Station, fifty-three miles from here, last night, caused by the sleeper of a passenger train jumping the track. Eight passengers were injured, but none seriously.

The following were injured: Charles Brent, contracting agent; Mr. and Mrs. John Johnson, of Memphis; Brent Arnold, general passenger agent; Col. H. C. Hodges, Mrs. Hodges, colored porter, and a brakeman. The latter rolled down an embankment fifty feet, and was badly smashed. Brent Arnold suffered the most serious injury about the head and face.

NAVAL CADETS GRADUATED.

Admiral Kimberly Presents the Diplomas at Annapolis Academy.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., June 7.—The graduation day exercises took place at the Naval academy Friday. The cadets were marched to the front of the chapel, where they stacked arms. They then marched into the chapel, where Hon. William A. Worth, son of Illinois, of the board of visitors, addressed them. The cadets then came out of the chapel and resumed their arms and were marched to the band stand, where the diplomas of graduation were given to cadets by Admiral Kimberly in the absence of Secretary Tracy.

After the delivery of the diplomas three cheers were given for Admiral Kimberly and three cheers for those left behind. The following is the list of graduates who received their diplomas and were detached from the academy. The list shows the order of merit in which they graduated and received their diplomas: Thomas F. Ruhm, of Pennsylvania; Lawrence Spear, of Pennsylvania; George W. Williams, of South Carolina; A. W. Catlin, of Minnesota; J. C. Latimer, of West Virginia; Charles T. Volgenson, of California; Lay H. Everhart, of Alabama; William A. Snow, of Massachusetts; Franklin B. Sullivan, of Iowa; Claude Bailey, of Arkansas; Wendall C. Neville, of Virginia; Lawrence H. Moses, of New York; John Havens Dayton, at large; Lucius Aliyn Bostwick, of Massachusetts; Charles Otis Bond, of Iowa; Cyrus Lagg Radford, of Kentucky; Thomas Conrad Treadwell, of Massachusetts; William J. Moffat, of South Carolina; Charles Boutelle Bailey, of California; John Rufus Edie, at large. Engineer division—Urban T. Holmes, of Arkansas; C. B. Price, of Mississippi, and Dr. E. Meanuke, of Mississippi. The June ball of the naval cadets was held in the armory last night. It surpassed all former efforts. The hall room was handsomely decorated. Around the walls bayonets, cutlasses, swords and muskets were artistically arranged. The band stand was a perfect miniature fort. Eight brass cannon peeped from the green sodding.

LABOR VERSUS CAPITAL.

Another Big Strike Ordered at Punxsutawney, Pa.—Labor Notes.

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa., June 7.—The officers of the United Mine Workers of America are consolidating and making another effort to inaugurate a general strike in the Third district (comprising about 8,000 miners) for the Columbus scale of wages. Circulars have been sent out to all miners in the Third district to cease work at once and remain away from the mines until five cents per ton advance in the price of mining is granted and other labor is advanced in proportion. The large rival coal companies, together with the smaller ones in the district, have formed a gigantic combination to defeat the miners.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., June 7.—There seems to be little change in the situation in the Rochester factory strike. It is said that some new hands were put on this morning. Some reports give the number of hands at work in the shop at about 200. The strikers say there are only small boys and girls at work, and only forty of them.

READING, Pa., June 7.—The Brandon Rolling mill, Brandon, has advanced puddlers' wages to $4 per ton. The advance affects several hundred men. Puddlers' wages in the Schuylkill valley range from $3.90 to $4 per ton.

Depew Honored at Chicago.

CHICAGO, June 7.—The banquet tendered last evening by the citizens of Chicago to Chauncey M. Depew in the grand banquet hall of the Auditorium was the finest ever given in the city. The doubt about his indisposition preventing the distinguished guest being present was not at rest shortly after grace had been said by Mr. Depew entering the hall and taking his seat. One hundred and twenty-five prominent gentlemen discussed an elaborate menu of twelve courses on table ornamented with tastefully dressed flowers. The following toasts were responded to in their order: "We, the People," Justice J. M. Harlan; "Columbia," Franklin MacVeagh; "Site," Franklin H. Head; "America," Emil G. Hirsh, and "Posterity," James S. Norton.

Sergeant-at-Arms Canaday's Successor.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—A Republican senatorial caucus has been summoned for Tuesday evening at 7:30, when the question of a successor to Sergeant-at-Arms Canaday will be settled. Col. Canaday's resignation takes effect on the 1st prox. The fight for the position at present seems to be confined to but two candidates—Col. Ingersoll, Valentine, of Nebraska, and Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms Charles B. Reade, of Maine.

He Gave the Scheme Away.

BOSTON, June 7.—"Jocko" Kelly, serving a twenty-five years' sentence in the state prison as an habitual criminal, was discovered a few days ago by a teamster secreted in a large canvas padded cask used for carrying shoe scrapings. The cask had just been loaded upon a truck when the driver, who was being assisted by a convict, became suspicious of the contents, whereupon Kelly's fellow convict gave the scheme away.

COL. STONE'S LETTER.

He Is Willing That New Primaries Be Ordered.

PITTSBURG, June 7.—Col. W. A. Stone, whose nomination to congress to succeed Col. Thomas M. Bayne has created such indignation, last evening issued this address to the Republican voters of the Twenty-third district:

I was nominated by the Republican congressional convention, on June 5, after Col. Bayne had been withdrawn and had declined. I had not been a candidate prior to the convention, and there was no delegation elected or my interest. The intention of Col. Bayne to refuse the nomination was unknown to me prior to an early hour Monday morning. The position I took in the convention as to the authority of that convention to make a nomination, I believe now that the convention had full power to nominate me.

I recognize, however, that there are many good Republicans who hold a contrary opinion and who claim that the action of the convention was irregular. It is claimed that I was afraid to come before the people for fear of defeat at the primaries, and that I sought the nomination in this manner. There is no truth in these allegations. I am perfectly willing to come before the people for a nomination in the ordinary way, and, if I am defeated, to support the candidate most cheerfully. I am perfectly willing that the county committee order new primaries. I will go before the people at those primaries and abide by the result.

Col. Stone wrote the foregoing letter before the expected consultation with Recorder W. H. Graham, Health Officer Dr. Bradley and other Allegheny City politicians. It will be noticed that nowhere does Col. Stone declare, as has been merely subsidiary to the Republican county committee a matter which was already within its province.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF.

Fresh Tips from the Wires Carefully Culled.

Governor Hill has signed the law exempting Journalistic from jury duty and the law making the New York sheriff's a salaried office.

The supreme court, general term, has affirmed the conviction in the court of oyer and terminer of ex-Sheriff James A. Flack, of New York, and his son, William L. Flack, of conspiracy in the procurement of the bogus divorce of Mrs. Mary E. Flack.

At Philadelphia refined sugars were advanced sixty cents a barrel. The daily output of the three refineries situated in Philadelphia is 10,000 barrels, and this latest advance puts $6,000 of additional profits into the pockets of the refiners. Within ten days prices have been advanced $2 per barrel.

Brothers' extensive saw works in Newark, N. J., have been sold to an American syndicate, of which Disston Brothers, of Philadelphia, and members of the firm of Henry Disston & Co., are at the head. The price paid was $100,000, one-half of the amount being in stock.

Vesdersburg, Ind., was damaged by fire to the extent of $100,000.

The seal pirates in Behring sea have adopted the tactics of the customs revenue officers, which is even now being put into successful operation. They have established a rendezvous at Sand Point island, one of the Aleutian group of islands. The schooners, when they have collected 100 sealskins, put in there, leave their cargo and their crew in charge of a swift schooner has been chartered to cruise about Sand Point and take the skins as the schooners come in. The vessel is so fast that it can outsail any government steamer now in commission.

Declined to Endorse the State Law.

FORT SCOTT, Kan., June 7.—Judge J. S. West, of the United States district court, Friday rendered a decision on an "original package" case, in which he declined to endorse the state prohibitory law. This being in line with the recent action of the supreme court. The decision was occasioned by a writ of habeas corpus in the case of Harry Harris, arrested under the state law for selling intoxicating liquor in original packages. Judge West released the prisoner, holding that in view of the supreme court decision he was being unconstitutionally deprived of his liberty.

Workingmen on a Picnic.

PITTSBURG, June 7.—The day's session of the Amalgamated association was occupied in continued discussion of the boiler's scale question, principally that of Pittsburg. The annual picnic of the Amalgamated association at Rock Point today is the largest ever held by that association. So far as possible the mills in this vicinity have closed down to give the workmen an opportunity to attend. The regular sessions of the convention will resume on Monday.

Drenched—a Blazing Mine.

ASHLAND, Pa., June 7.—The fire in the Big Mine colliery has destroyed the shafts which have been driven since the fire was discovered and water has been turned on the burning coal. The officials have hopes of getting the fire under control in a short time.

Mrs. Lippincott Found.

PHILADELPHIA, June 7.—Mrs. Julia G. Lippincott, whose financial operations at Atlantic City and subsequent flight created such a stir several months ago, has been found in Baltimore. She is living with her sister in a suburb. She has been writing to her husband at Medford for money, but he has not answered. He was one of the heaviest victims of her forgeries, which amounted to over $60,000. A warrant is out for her arrest.

The Circular Was Withdrawn.

SAVANNAH, Ga., June 7.—The differences between the Central railroad managers and the engineers, growing out of the issue of a circular containing questions as to the engineers' records and exacting a temperance pledge, has been settled amicably, the circular being withdrawn and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers agreeing to aid the company in its efforts to keep incompetent and intruxtworthy men out of its service.

A Husband's Double Crime.

CHICAGO, June 7.—John Lally, aged 38 years and living at 320 Washtenaw avenue, shot his wife and then sent a bullet through his own head. Both bullets which struck Mrs. Lally entered her right cheek and came out behind the ear. Lally was undoubtedly insane. A family quarrel is said to have led to the shooting. The physicians are of the opinion that both will recover.

The Negro Problem Discussed.

LAKE MOHONK, N. Y., June 7.—At the negro conference a series of resolutions was presented embodying the results reached after the various discussions of the conference. The resolutions urge education as the key-note of the situation, education non-sectional and industrial, uplifting the home and family, developing true manhood and womanhood.

THE CURIOSITY SHOP.

A Collection of Fugitive Facts and Out-of-the-Ordinary Information.

"Is the polite lifting of the hat as a form of salutation a sign of our own gentility or a sign of ancestral slavery?" asks an Englishman writer. It seems that a learned German, in an interesting essay, has been talking the latter view. He derives it from the old custom of a vassal uncovering and making his sworn head before the free man, in order to exhibit the outward and visible sign of his self-abasement.

The honours, whether of a slave or a monk, belongs to that series of partial mutilations which indicated that the man was the servant of a lord who held the powers of life and death over him. The crown of the man, whether divine or human, had escaped a symbolical sacrifice instead of the actual and total sacrifice to which he had a right. Hence, we never raise our hats in compliment without bearing unconscious witness to our prehistoric and barbaric ancestors. It belongs to the same order of sacrifice, says Dr. Buchwald, that its revolver also has a title to the use of it as flood. Hence he concludes that when we encounter a man who uncovers to us a fellow man we virtually tell him that he has the right of a cannibal god or chief over us, and may eat us if he pleases.

Some of Mr. Gladstone's Opinions.

The opinions of the world's famous men are always interesting. Here are a few accredited to the "Grand Old Man":

Lord Beaconsfield was the most interesting political character of this century, not excepting Mr. Pitt.

The novels of Lord Lytton was one of the most high minded and most honorable men in public life.

Lord Macaulay was remarkable for the conscientious discharge of his duty towards the crown and towards his colleagues.

There was one Homer, and he wrote all the Oiled and all the Illiad.

Sir Walter Scott's best two novels are "Kenilworth" and "The Bride of Lammermoor."

The marriages in George Eliot's novels are outrages on sentiment.

The three handsomest men of their time were the late Duke of Hamilton, Sidney Herbert and Cardinal Manning; the three most naturally eloquent speakers of their day the Duke of Argyll, the late Lord Elgin and Bishop Wilberforce.

Historic Women Who Bleached Their Hair.

History mentions numerous women who have endeavored, with greater or less success, to change the color of their hair. Mary Queen of Scots had naturally magnificently glossy black hair, but after the historic voyage from Calais overseas to Scotland and her reception by the sandy haired Scotch, she sought to give an auburn hue to her tresses—possibly, says the Argonaut, from an aesthetic desire to be in harmony with her environment. Unhappy Marie Antoinette discovered a Frenchman who had compounded a powder having the quality of giving to the hair that rich chestnut brown characteristic of the madonnas painted by many of the old masters. At one time in the heyday of the Roman empire, the wealthiest and most fashionable of the patrician dames ate certain herbs and took a complicated course of medical baths, with the object of lightening the shade of their abundant patrician hair. A similar attempt is recorded of Arabian beauties of the time of the Caliph Omar.

The Button a Badge of Honor.

In China the highest grade of literary distinction is marked by a gold button and the next grade by a silver button. In Europe a button on the front of the cap formerly represented a mark of civil honor. Thus Shakespeare makes Gulldenstern in "Hamlet" say:

On fortune's cap we are not the very button.

Meaning not the most highly favored. Again, George Gascoigne, in his "Woodmanship," makes a similar allusion to the courtier in favor of one of his gallants:

His boost buttoned with gold,
His cuselle cape bedecked all with gold,
His bonnet set with bullion.

Henceforward, then, let none be guilty of underrating the button, reflecting that, like a good husband, buttons are always valued the more when found wanting.

The Mourning of Nations.

Black, which expresses "privation of light," represents Anglican and English mourning, while in direct contrast is the white mourning color of China, expressive of hope. Other hues symbolizing grief for the departed are:

Scarlet—Occasionally worn by French kings.

Yellow—The seer and yellow leaf, Egypt and Burmah. In Brittany widows' caps among the peasants are yellow.

Purple and Violet—To express royalty. Mauritania and cardinals of Rome and France. Violet color mourning for Turkey.

Grey Blue—Bokhara mourning. The significance of this selection is not known.

Pale Brown—The withered leaves. Persia.

Grayish Brown—Earth. Ethiopia and Abyssinia.

Annual Rings and Age of a Tree.

According to Professor Hartig, a count of the annual rings of a tree when cut three or four feet from the ground may not give the true number of years. When trees are crowded in a forest, and have developed feeble crowns, the greatest annual increment is just below the crown, and it diminishes regularly downwards. Hence the leaf area is not sufficient to afford food material to provide for a sheet of cambium all over the stem, the growth stops before nearing the bottom, and the rings which is found twenty feet up the trunk may fall altogether before it reaches the ground. In such trees the number of rings lacking at three feet high for certain years and the total number of rings would be less than the number of years in the tree's life.

Where Watches Are Made.

The Horological Review says that the great modern centers of watchmaking are Coventry and Prescot in England; Geneva, Chaux de Fonds, near Geneva, Switzerland, and Elgin and Waltham, America. The superiority of the Swiss watches made by hand arises from the fact that in Swiss mountain villages families are taught and pursue the trade for generations, and thus acquire a delicacy of touch and accuracy in their work. Their apprentices are also required to serve ten years before they can be called master workmen.

The Castle of Chillon.

The castle of Chillon, which has been immortalized by the pen of Byron, is built upon a rock about one hundred feet out in the Lake Geneva and near Vevay. The floor around the pillar to which the famous prisoner was chained is much worn. The ring in this pillar is still to be seen, according to the story of a recent traveler.

SCIENCE AND PROGRESS.

POPULAR SCIENTIFIC RECREATION AND USEFUL KNOWLEDGE.

A Simple Process for Converting a Knife Blade Into a Permanent Magnet, Illustrated and Described—A Phenomenon Which Is Not Wholly Understood.

Take a pair of iron tongs and a knife, and, holding them as shown in the engraving, rub the knife blade briskly with the part of the magnet, taking care to rub only in one direction—towards the point of the knife. When the point is reached the tongs must be lifted back towards the handle and the motion repeated. The knife should be occasionally turned over, so that the friction may be applied to both sides.

MAGNETIZING A KNIFE BLADE.

In about a minute the knife blade will be found to be magnetic, and capable of supporting a needle or steel pen, and the magnetism is quite permanent. The poles of the blade corresponds to the north pole of the magnet. Popular Science News, which is authority for this foregoing directions, says the cause of this phenomenon is not quite clear, and is worthy of further investigation.

A New Smoke Consuming Apparatus.

An English exchange calls attention to a recently invented and patented apparatus for the consumption of smoke in ordinary furnaces. It consists of an arrangement of brickwork channels placed underneath the boiler. Near the first bridge there is a ventilating door, which can be opened or closed at will. The apparatus is connected with a second bridge, or air chamber, where the air is heated to over 400 degs. in passing. The hot air causes complete combustion. It is contended that three advantages are gained by the invention. In the first place the fuel generates more steam, and in the second there is a great saving of fuel. The gases which ordinarily pass up the chimney into the atmosphere are ignited and consumed, so that less fuel has to be used. The third, and by no means the least, advantage gained by the use of the apparatus is the reduction of the smoke nuisance to a minimum.

Ironing by Electricity.

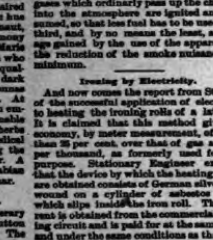
And now comes the report from St. Paul of the successful application of electricity to heating the ironing rolls of a laundry. It is claimed that the method gives an economy, by meter measurement, of more than 25 per cent. over that of gas at $1.32 per thousand, as formerly used for this purpose. Stationary Engineer explains that the device by which the heating effects are obtained consists of German silver wire wound on a cylinder of asbestos paper which slips inside the iron roll. The current is obtained from the commercial lighting circuit and is paid for at the same rates and under the same conditions as that used for lighting, the current passing through a meter.

Is Electricity Manufactured?

The question whether or not electricity is manufactured is now being tried in certain courts. It is claimed that the producers in numerous states are liable for taxation. Benjamin Franklin held that electricity was not manufactured, but was taken from one body to be delivered to another, and that practically nothing was lost in the transaction. Hitherto, says Industrial World, our scientific men have held this to be true in a broad sense.

A Great Golden Vessel Four Centuries Old.

The temple of Buddha in Ceylon contains one of the most famous of the world's collections of treasures, and unique among the many rare things found there is the curious utensil shown in the cut—the great golden watering pot used by the priests, and which plays an important part in the sacred rites.



A JAR WORTH $80,000.

The Philadelphia Record says that the vessel is known to be over four centuries old, and it is one of the most valuable jars in the world, being worth much more in the open market than even the celebrated peach blow vase of which so much was said a few years ago. The material and the gems in the "Kendiya" are appraised at $80,000.

ALL AROUND THE HOUSE.

Hemstitching, Drawn Work and Satin Stitch Embroidery on Linen.

Fine sheets, table cloths and table napkins are now beautifully, many having still more elaborate ornament in the shape of an insertion of drawn work, the very simplest form of which is the improved way of pulling a straight edge. Beyond this is often worked a flowing design in white embroidery, principally satin stitch, and which is very pretty and to be a good deal raised above the background.

One of the handsome patterns for this embroidery resembles a thick piece of lace laid upon the linen. Such work is not very difficult to manage, and amply repays any trouble that may be bestowed upon it. A lace design is first of all traced upon the linen with a blue pencil in the usual manner. The outlines are followed with over-seat stitches, worked as delicately as possible; the fillings are made with lace stitches, the various bars being put in exactly as in lacemaking; in short, the work is executed just like point lace, except that the lace stitches are taken through the linen foundation, instead of being worked upon a background which is afterwards cut away.

Wrinkles in Polishing Glass.

A good material to use in cleaning glass, says an excellent authority on household matters, is fuller's earth. This must be reduced to a very fine powder, entirely freed from any rough or hard bits which might damage the polished surface of the glass. The earth is put into the vessel to be washed; warm water is poured upon it. After it has been well shaken, it is emptied out, cold water being put in to take its place. This is a good thing to use for decanters and carafes, both of which are difficult to clean. Another good method for cleaning them is, after having filled them about two-thirds with warm (not hot) water, to put in several soaped pieces of brown or mottled paper, and shake the decanters well, then leave them for an hour or so. Empty out the soapy water, rinse several times with clean, cold water, and invert them in a rack to dry; when dry, polish the outsides with a leather. The great secret by which to keep glass clear and bright is to use plenty of cold water for rinsing, and always polish with a leather, not with a cloth. If the insides of the decanters are covered with crust from wine, a little muriatic acid should be added to the water before it is left several hours standing in the decanters. For cleaning long necked decanters, a long handled bottle brush must be kept.

Floral Decorations.

Each year floral decoration becomes more and more of a success. As a consequence triumphs of the professional decorator's skill recently noted, is an arrangement for the dinner table of a number of slender glass vases of graduated heights filled with marl ous lilies, grasses and ornamental foliage. These are interspersed among the tall vases delicate bush branches and sprays. Trailing sprays of the same flowers and foliage are laid upon the cloth.

A WEDDING BELL.

Another one of the daintiest and most poetic of wedding decorations—the floral bell under which is performed the ceremony that "makes two hearts one." This bell is entirely covered with white roses and suspended by silken cords attached to a cluster of silver bells.

How to Clean Chenille Curtains.

Curtains taken down in the spring should be so cared for that they will be uninjured by moths, uncreased and spotless when wanted in the autumn. Talk will tell us that chenille draperies seem especially to invite the depredations of moths, but a little precaution will put these thieving depredators to flight. Chenille curtains should never be wiped off, nor should they be shaken vigorously. When taken down the curtains should be laid at full length over a clean sheet stretched upon the floor, then thoroughly brushed on both sides with a moderately stiff clothes brush. Now sponge both sides thoroughly with tepid water, to which has been added two tablespoonfuls of turpentine. Lay them carefully away on shelves or in long cedar boxes.

Veal Loaf.

To make veal loaf use three or four pounds of veal and a slice of fat pork, all chopped very fine. Add two eggs and four large crackers. Roll the crackers and mix the crumbs with the egg and meat; season with salt, pepper, spice, cloves, pepper and salt. Mold into an oblong loaf, place in the pan and bake for two hours. Pound two crackers and put into some water, with butter the size of an egg; boil, and pour over two or three times with this. When the loaf is cold cut into thin slices and serve. This is one of the nicest preparations of cold meat for luncheon that I know of.

Serving a Pineapple Ice.

The delicious water ice made from a ripe flavored pineapple should be served in a round mold on a low crystal platter, decorated with a wreath of whipped cream, flavored with pineapple juice and candied flowers, and with the tops and the curled end of the leaves set in the center of the cream. This is the tempting fashion in which The Hotel Guide would have it.

Chocolate Cream.

Beat up a pint of cream till it is quite stiff, then sweeten with about two ounces of sugar, and add three ounces of grated chocolate; continue to whisk it all very gently. At the last add half an ounce of clarified gelatine, mix it all together, put it in a mold and leave it to set.

Stuffed Eggs.

Boil a dozen very hard, shell and cut them in halves, remove the yolks very carefully, pound them and mix in some boiled chopped parsley, pepper, salt; refill the whites, cutting off the point of each and arrange on small squares of bread fried in butter.

PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE.

The Antiseptic Properties of Coffee—Deafness Caused by Using the Telephone.

From observations recently made as to the destructive power of coffee on various microbes, Dr. Luderitz has found, according to The Lancet, that the organisms all died in a longer or shorter period—e. g., in one series of experiments anthrax bacilli were destroyed in three hours, anthrax spores in four weeks, cholera bacilli in four hours, and tubercle tuberculosis erysipelas in one day. It was, however, remarkable that good coffee and bad coffee produced precisely similar effects. He believes that, as has been before more than suggested, the antiseptic effect of coffee does not depend on the caffeine it contains, but on the empyreumatic oils developed by roasting.

Deafness and the Telephone.

Dr. Francis Dowling, in an interesting paper read before the Academy of Medicine, Cincinnati, says that there is more deafness in America than in Europe, and this the doctor attributes to a more general use of scientific instruments, such as telephone and the one we are used to the exclusion of the other. He cited a number of cases where he had examined telephone operators, and he generally found the right ear the musical organ, as it was used at most entirely in telephonic communication. A remedy was to use both ears. Either have two audiphones or alternate the ears.

He also stated that between the ages of 10 and 40 at least one person in three is subject to a partial deafness. The great majority of cases of impaired hearing date from childhood and to diseases. Another prolific cause was colds and carelessness in bathing. At least one-fifth of the cases of impaired hearing are hereditary, and are largely owing to a too close consanguinity of the parents. Deafness is more prevalent among males than among females, owing to the fact that the male is more exposed to the vicissitudes of climate.

Advice to Prospective Fasters.

An English physician is credited with the following advice to those who would emulate Succi and Tanner: The great thing is to start fat. Some years ago a fat pig was buried in its sty for 180 days under thirty feet of earth with a ton of it on it. When dug out alive at the end of that time, reduced in weight from 160 pounds to 46 pounds, or no less than 75 per cent. The most remarkable facts connected with the loss of weight are that the fat is almost completely used up, no less than 98 per cent. being removed; the blood, 84 per cent.; muscles in general 42, the bones 17, while the nervous system loses barely 2 per cent. It is evident, therefore, that death occurs when the stock of available material is consumed, and that every other tissue gives up its components so as to save the nervous system as much as possible.

Cancer Cure.

The story is told that a young physician attached to an English hospital has invented and used, it is said with success, a machine which, in cases of cancer, will direct a current of electricity against a diseased cell strong enough to destroy it and at the same time will not injure a healthy cell. Those that are destroyed are said to turn into a hard substance that remains without causing the patient any inconvenience. The statement is one that many people would be glad to see verified.

Soon to Astonish the World.

Two new antipyretics will soon burst upon an astonished world, Popular Science News tells, so far as lengthiness of name is concerned, at any rate—acetylethylenphenylhydrazin and ethylenphenylhydrazinelacetic acid!

SOCIAL ETIQUETTE.

Some Interesting Suggestions About "Afternoon Tea."

To people of small or moderate means an "afternoon tea" offers a solution of a difficult problem. It is inexpensive, enjoyable, and is adaptable to above criticism. Concerning this pleasing form of hospitality Good Housekeeping has, among other useful suggestions, the following: When one feels one's house too small to comfortably accommodate the desired number, a good plan is for the hostess to send out her own visiting card, which is, by the way, the only correct invitation to such an affair as this, the card, in addition to the name, bearing the written or engraved words, "At Home" "Tuesday, June 10th," or "December."

Of course no reply is required to such informal invitations. The latter plan will do away with the danger of a crush, as people will not naturally all select the same day. More people, however, may be expected on the fourth afternoon, as in all things pertaining to precaution is characteristic with many. But the guest cannot blame her the fault of the hostess in the simple form of her entertainment remain perfect, as it will if she errs on the side of lavish spirit. Let her remember that to ask a friend to break one's bread is a compliment, and to entertain according to one's means is always in good taste.

The lady who presides over the tea urn has a very dainty office to perform, but if she has a correct understanding of her duties she will not find her place a sinecure. The hostess cannot perform her task as such and preside at the tea table, but she will, if there be no daughter of the house, select some guest under her roof or an intimate friend to act for her. It is the duty of this person to see that each cup of tea when it leaves the urn is as perfect as it is possible for her to make it, and one of the first requisites of this is heat. The English complain that it is impossible to get a cup of hot tea in America, and yet this difficulty is an easy one to overcome. But of the method of preparing this piece de resistance we will speak later. The water boiling, the tea "drawn," a "cosy" should be pulled over the teapot to keep in the steam, with which would escape much of the aroma. Before pouring, a little boiling water should be left for a few moments in the cup. With these precautions our transatlantic friends will find no fault, though there may be some trouble in the command I once heard made that their throats, like a ship's bottom, are "coppered."

The guest will find the way to the tea table, and make her wishes known without waiting to be asked. Here let me say what would hardly appear needful but for many inquiries I have proved it so. No special introduction to the lady presiding is required. It is not only proper but obligatory that the guest show breeding as well as kindliness by making herself, at an effort to enter into conversation with her. The fact of meeting under the roof of a mutual friend is sufficient introduction. A witty and observing person should fill this place, that she may aid in setting the ball of conversation rolling among those who gathers about her. In the drawing room even quite young children will prove useful in passing biscuits, tea and plates. The help of a servant will be needed most in quietly replenishing and removing dishes.

THE PLAINFIELDERS WIN A FINE GAME OF BASE BALL.

The Annex Club of New York Vanquished by the Crescents Saturday.—The Large Annex Rooters Become Greatly Enthused.

The finest and most brilliant exhibition of ball by the national game, ever displayed in this city, was shown in Saturday's contest, it was the second meeting of the two clubs. In the first, the Annex had been successful and they hoped to prove their superiority by another victory. The Crescents were willing to offer their former defeat, and were ready to reverse the former verdict.

Both clubs did its utmost. Through all the innings, save one, not a run was made. In the fourth, by close bunching of hits, the Crescents scored three runs, and the victory. It was Lee's fortunate day. Opportunities came to him, and once masterly did he make advantage of them. Runyon made three fine catches in right, and the only error chargeable to the Crescents, was his failure to hold a fly—an error, which, in fact, was more due to the blinding bombs than to himself.

The game closed with a remarkable one-handed catch by Martin. The appeal has been a reversal of the former decision.

The Evening Thousand's" placed their faith on the Annex, and have lost both money and conviction.

The game by score is as follows:

Rejected by the Synod.

The Judicial Committee submitted a long report to the General Synod of the Reformed Church which is now in session at Asbury Park, recommending a portion of which recommended an amendment to the constitution of the church allowing members of consistories to resign without giving notice to the church. The portion of the report was rejected by an overwhelming majority. The remainder of the report was laid over. The Synod reconvenes this afternoon.

A Thief Escaped.

A little colored boy ran up to Policeman Hester Saturday night and informed the officer that a fighter was on Richmond avenue. Mr. Hatton started for the "battle field," but when he arrived there he found that the fellow had made his escape. A large crowd had congregated. It was afterward ascertained that the fellow had not been fighting, but that he had stolen a pair of shoes from a store on the above named thoroughfare.

Cricket at Trenton.

The St. George Cricket team went to Trenton Saturday and played a game with the Trenton club. The game was very exciting but the Plainfield boys were beaten by the score of 128 to 69. The Trenton team is considered a first class team and has been organized for a number of years. St. George's club has only been organized about two months and this probably accounts for its defeat in Saturday's game.

Base Ball Notes.

Mr. Pierson of Liberty street, at the conclusion of Saturday's ball game, presented each of the Crescent players with a pretty button hole bouquet.

The Sylvans of Harlem are booked to play a game of base ball with the Crescents of this city next Saturday afternoon. The team is said to be one of the best semi-professional teams in New York.

Arrested in the Borough.

Children's Day at the Plainfield Churches.

Eighty children, who had been under able leadership for some time past practicing sacred music for Children's Day, filled the front of Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church Sunday, and entranced one of the largest congregations that ever filled the edifice, by their sweet songs and carols. The pastor, the Rev. W. R. Richards, preached an appropriate sermon. The floral decorations were very beautiful.

At the Methodist Episcopal church, the Rev. Chas. B. Wright, pastor, preached the sermon, couched in language the smallest child present could comprehend. The text was from Luke—9:52. A special service of song was also rendered. Mr. James Jackson and Rev. Dr. Hurlbut assisted the pastor.

The following persons formed the choir: Soprano—Mrs. H. G. Bunn, Miss B. E. Jackson, Miss Minnie Sharp, Miss Tillie Sperry, Mrs. D. E. Davis. Contralto—Mrs. N. Y. Hull, Miss Catline. Tenors—Mr. Rogers, Mr. J. Thompson, Mr. J. Duckworth. Bass—Mr. F. S. Runyon, Mr. N. Y. Hull, Mr. W. McGee. Mr. D. Davis, organist.

At the Trinity Reformed church, the Rev. Cornelius Schenck, pastor, Children's Day was observed by a special service in the evening. The pulpit was banked with potted plants which gave the church a very cheerful appearance. The programme, interspersed with singing by the Sunday-school scholars and congregation, was as follows:

Four Christian Festals.....Josie Runyon
Easter.....Cora Lake
Thanksgiving.....Charles Dalliber
Children's Day.....Annie Slater
Christmas.....Bertie Thew
What do the Flowers Think?.....Lucy Corbin

The children in their recitations showed careful training, and the congregation listened so quietly and attentively that the smallest lisp was heard. Their voice could be heard throughout the edifice. After the recitations were concluded, the Rev. Alexander S. Van Dyck of Amoy, China, delivered an interesting address to the young children, (which was also listened to attentively by the older persons of the congregation) on the ways and habits of the Chinese boys and girls, and their parents. He exhibited a curious lot of idols, clothing, opium pipe, etc., which had been given him by the converts. He also exhibited a Chinese women's shoe. Its size was suggestive of corns that sufferers shuddered.

Great credit is due the various committees, to Mrs. Runyon, to the superintendent Mr. C. Anthony, to Mr. Horace Martin the musical accompanist, and to the pastor Mr. Schenck, and to Mr. Van Dyck, for the success of the service. The congregation that filled every seat in the church.

Yesterday was the first Children's Day held in the beautiful new First Presbyterian church. It cannot be remembered many years by the children, as well as the adults, for a more beautiful service it would be difficult to conceive. One could not but notice the exquisite harmony of everything. The flowers were very tasteful. The children dressed very handsomely in order with zeal into the spirit of the day. Then there was a specially arranged printed programme, and the exercises including remarks by the pastor, Rev. Dr. Ketcham, scriptural reading led by the superintendent, Mr. Ogden, and responses by the congregation, baptism of children, solo and quartette singing by the recollect choir, and singing and recitations by the Sunday school children. The service began at 10:30 a. m. and ended at noon. The church service urged to have the interior with the floral decorations to be retained, and it was thought that they would do so.

The choir was composed of Miss Blanche Fellows, soprano; Miss Lily Kent, alto; Mr. Horace Van Arsdale, tenor; Mr. Robert Gordon, bass; Mr. Ira C. Elmstein, organist. Appropriate services were also held in the Park avenue Baptist and Congregational churches.

UNION COUNTY COURTS.

A Batch of Prisoners Arraigned and Sentenced.

Saturday was Judgment Day in Union County Court at Elizabeth, when a number of prisoners were sentenced for various offenses.

The first arraigned was Martin Curtis, a colored man who pleaded guilty to a charge of assault and battery on a railroad conductor. Judge McCormick fined him five dollars.

Lawrence Haley was arraigned, charged with stealing coal from the Central Railroad Company. He was remanded to the county jail for ninety days.

James Kinchler was convicted of stealing lead pipe and was sentenced to the county jail for three months.

Peter Downey was sentenced to pay a fine of five dollars and costs for wife beating.

Thomas West was sentenced to the county jail for three months for grand larceny.

James Jackson was sentenced to the county jail for three months for indecent exposure.

Freeman and John Merrill were fined $10 each for assault and battery.

William Branch, a colored man, who was convicted of stealing 200 chickens from farmer's of Union Township, was sentenced to two years in State Prison.

John Cowing was next arraigned on a charge of assaulting Policeman McCue of Plainfield. Mr. James G. Connolly spoke in behalf of Cowing, and showed that he had never before been accused of wrong doing, and that this offense was committed while drunk. Cowing had been in jail eight weeks, and the time was extended for one month.

Albert Jones was arraigned for stealing coal. He was remanded to jail.

The Choral Society.

The Choral Society has issued its usual circular to the public calling for subscriptions for the coming season, which however are not payable until October 1st. The object in asking for pledges at this early date is simply that the officers may know how much income they may depend on, and to make their plans accordingly. The society pays no dividends, is not a money-making institution, but on the contrary runs every dollar at its disposal in a business-like and economical manner for the benefit of its subscribing members. It is therefore hardly necessary to state that the larger the subscription the more patrons of the society get for their money. That the responses to the circular will be prompt and liberal may be confidently predicted, especially as it is rumored that it is the intention of the management not only to sustain the excellence of last season's performances, but to go a step further if the subscriptions warrant it. Judging from the criticisms we have seen of similar concerts given in the larger cities, we do not hesitate to say that the concerts of our own society will not be surpassed in excellence when all the elements necessary to make up a perfect whole are given by other and more pretentious organizations. The Plainfield Choral Society is justly entitled to the support it receives from those of our citizens who appreciate a high class of music. It is quite possible that the only fault that will be found will be with the limited capacity of Music Hall as the management is obliged per force, to limit the number of subscribers so as not to exceed the seating capacity of the hall, and it has been decided to dispense with the preparatory concerts of the closing concert of last season, when every seat was taken and many were unable to obtain admission to announce that subscriptions will be accepted in the order they are received, and it is not among the impossibilities that the list will be filled before the sending in their names will sooner or later find the subscription list filled. Names of subscribers should be sent to Mr. H. O. Newman, Treasurer.

They Cannot Have a Divorce.

"Billy" Rice, the minstrel, and his wife, with charges and counter-charges of infidelity, have been engaging the courts in the pursuit of divorce. A referee first found husband and wife equally guilty and recommended that Rice's complaint be dismissed. Plaintiff, a counsel moved to reopen the case, but Judge Ingraham, Saturday, handed down a decision confirming the decision and confirming the referee's report in the New York court.

"Billy" Rice is the well-known minstrel who has often amused many Plainfield audiences.

Saturday's Races.

Several races occurred on the track of the Gentlemen's Driving Park Saturday after noon. The first was between Mr. O. F. Wartig's "Frank B," and Mr. A. C. Valle's "Frank B." The latter horse won both heats. Time—2.36 and 2.38. Mr. Owen Monks drove "Frank B."

The second race was between Mr. Charles Brown's "Unknown" and Mr. Bob. Quinn's "Unknown." "Unknown" won both heats. Time—2.40 and 2.46.

There were other exhibitions of speed.

Only One Candidate for Free Scholarship.

At the Mercer County examination, held Saturday, at Trenton N. J., under the new State law, giving a free scholarship in the State College at New Brunswick to one pupil from each Assembly District in New Jersey, only one candidate presented himself, although the county is entitled to three scholarships. County Superintendent Wilbur is authorized to award the last of the bequest. The solitary candidate is Harry A. Hunt.

German Societies Meet.

The German Singing Societies of New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Newark and Baltimore met in Newark yesterday to settle the programme for the Tonekunst of next year's National festival. Two years ago Lawyer Carl Lentz, of Newark, was elected. Immediately a protest went up from some of his townsmen and the dispute has waxed warm ever since.

The contesting delegates and the Societies they represented wanted Mr. Lentz to resign. He refused unless apologies should be made. The other side would not hear of this. Indeed, they wanted the resignation in such a manner as to make Mr. Lentz ineligible for re-election.

The whole bustle was fought over yesterday. The delegates from the outside cities intimated pretty plainly that if the Newarkers failed to agree the festival might be held in some other city. Ultimately a new election was ordered unconditionally. The leave Mr. Lentz a candidate and it is victory for him. Nominations will be made to-morrow and the election will be held the following Sunday. Delegates from this city were in attendance.

Removing a Democrat Elected by Fraud.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., June 9th.—Great excitement and general rejoicing prevailed here to-day, when it was learned that Justice Scudder, of the Middlesex county court, had rendered an "ouster" in the case of Robert Conger vs. Patrick Convery, the "ouster" being against Patrick Convery, county clerk.

Mr. Conger, the Republican candidate for the office, was defeated at the last election, and commenced the suit charging that the present incumbent, Patrick Convery, had been elected by fraudulent votes. Senator Adrain, Mr. Convery's counsel will appeal from the decision and have the case carried to the higher courts.

"The president of Vassar College has given an order, permitting the graduate of the Plainfield High school to enter that college without further examination. Our Trained Cooks.

The time is fast vanishing when Americans can be reproached with being the poorest cooks in the world, and with ruining magnificent material for food by not knowing how to prepare it. Already our cooking schools thaughout the country begin to be heard from in a practical way. No more is it considered the proper thing to cook by the light of intuition alone. The recipe, a pinch of salt, a piece of butter, some water and flour enough to thicken will not suit the requirements of modern tastes. Cooking has been reduced to an exact science.

So it seems, indeed, when one reads the list of questions which women must answer before they can receive a diploma from the cooking school of the Woman's exchange in Philadelphia. Here are some of them:

What is the difference between a stove and a range? Describe them.

A stove or range not working satisfactorily, what would you do in case you had no one to call upon?

What do you consider the best fuels for cooking? How should a fire be "fixed" to keep over night? Name gas and coal oil stoves and tell how to use them.

What vegetable is more capable of sustaining life, with but few or no other kinds of food?

Tell what you know about flour and how many qualities to be determined.

Give the best method of making white bread, home bread.

What constitutes the perfect loaf?

What is yeast?

Can you effect ferments be used in making bread? If so, describe them.

In what temperature should the sponge be kept, and why should it be set to rise at night?

If liable to sour, what will you do to prevent it?

How can you tell when bread is ready for baking?

How may you determine the difference between bran and false butter?

What is cheese?

How may you determine the freshness of eggs without breaking them?

How does nutritive quality of eggs compared to that of beef?

What is the most wholesome way of cooking eggs?

How may you determine a fresh fish?

What is the best method of freshening salt fish?

Give proper method of boiling, opening and preparing a lobster.

How would you select a chicken, turkey, duck? How tell the difference between old and young fowls?

Give proper method of cleaning and trussing poultry and game.

Name all the vegetable acids and tell in what vegetables they may be found.

What color of fruit to scour? Can this sourness be removed?

What is yeast? How does it thicken milk?

What happens to vegetables soaked in salt water?

Of what use are acids as aliments?

How can mayonnaise be "brought back?"

How do you wash jelly bags?

What is the principle of cleansing?

Give an original recipe.

Rainfall in the New Northwest.

Can the climate of western Minnesota, the Dakotas and Washington be depended on to yield a sufficient supply of rain for agriculture? It is a question fairness are known to exist, and are seriously asking. Hitherto the belief has been that it was, and the splendid crops of wheat raised there a number of years in succession seemed to prove it. Now, however, drouths seem following one another thick and fast. It is said there is now no trace of hundreds of small lakes that were marked on early maps of Dakota and Minnesota. Doubtless many of these lakes existed in the splendid imagination of the gifted land agent, and nowhere else.

But some of them must have been there. It is within the certain knowledge of residents of the northwest that lakes have dried up, and the ground they occupied has been plowed for wheat fields. In one or two instances this fate has overtaken lakes as much as six miles long. In the future will the Dakotas and the adjoining region be added to the area that requires irrigation to make it produce crops? The answer concerns the development of the whole new northwest, and the fate of several millions of people.

Meantime it is said the people of Aberdeen, S. D., have held a union meeting, irrespective of denomination, and joined heartily in praying for rain. The Chicago Tribune, in commenting on this, recommends all the inhabitants there to continue to pray for rain and at the same time to dig a few artesian wells.

Mr. F. J. Fowler, of Bridgeport, Conn., announces that he has discovered a new property in steam. It is such a property that it can be made to double instantly the boiler pressure without the application of more heat, he says. It is this property that under certain conditions has caused the mysterious boiler explosions of times past and present. Mr. Fowler has shown how this dangerous quality can be removed from steam.

The New York Tribune has made a discovery that the sweet girls of Vassar and Smith colleges are free traders. But that is easily offset by the views of the married women of the country, who go in powerfully for protection, of course.

The goat extracts nutriment from tomato cans, and a German chemist has discovered a way of extracting from cotton seed meal a sugar said to be fifteen times sweeter than cane sugar.

Don't let it be electrocuted. Have some mercy on the English language.

KIDNAPER COWLES SHOT

His Brother-in-Law Fatally Wounds Him.

DEADLY AFFRAY IN A CARRIAGE.

Young Cowles Attempted to Kill His Wife, but Came to Grief at the Hands of Her Plucky Brother-in-Law Child the Bone of Contention.

MONTREAL, June 9.—Eugene H. Cowles, son of Edwin Cowles, the late proprietor of The Cleveland Leader, is lying in the General hospital here probably fatally shot. The shooting is the end of the sensational abduction by Cowles of his daughter, Florence, from his wife, a daughter of E. B. Hale, the Cleveland banker, a week ago last Tuesday. Detectives were employed and Cowles was tracked to Buffalo, from there to Niagara Falls, thence to St. Catharines, Ont., and there to Toronto, where Mrs. Cowles, Judge Ingersoll, her lawyer, and C. C. Hale, her brother, arrived just in time on Thursday to miss him.

Cowles arrived here on Friday morning with his daughter and put up at the Windsor hotel. The pursuing party arrived Sunday morning and immediately employed Detective Grose, of the Canadian secret service. He located Cowles, but the daughter had disappeared.

Mr. Hale, Mrs. Cowles and Judge Ingersoll met Cowles at the Windsor and asked for the child. Cowles refused to tell where she was, but asked them to take a drive. They all entered a carriage together, while Detective Grose continued his search.

A Bullet Through His Brain.

Driving down St. Catharine street, Cowles became very excited and angry at his wife and brother-in-law, and suddenly pulled out a revolver to shoot Mrs. Cowles, but Hale was too quick for him. Saying that he would be murdering arm with one hand, with the other he pulled his own pistol and fired at Cowles, sending a bullet through his neck. Hale ordered the driver to go to a hospital, where Cowles' wound was pronounced very dangerous, if not fatal. He was unconscious all day.

Hale Locked Up.

Hale went from the hospital to the central police station, where he recited the circumstances of the shooting and was locked up on a charge of attempting to kill Cowles. Hale claimed self defense. Mrs. Cowles was also placed under arrest, but was afterward released on bail given by Lawyer McGibbon and Detective Grose. The detective had in the meantime found the child in a convent. The nuns refused to give her up, but a writ of habeas corpus will be sued out, and Mrs. Cowles will attempt to secure her. Mrs. Cowles refused to talk. Her father has been telegraphed for, and the case will come up today in the police court.

The News in Cleveland.

CLEVELAND, O., June 9.—The news of the shooting of Eugene Cowles in Montreal has created a profound sensation here. For Eugene Cowles himself there is little sympathy owing to his shameful misconduct. His wife, and possible widow, is a most estimable lady, daughter of E. B. Hale, a prominent banker of the highest business and social standing.

The History of the Trouble.

Eugene Cowles and Alice M. Hale were married about ten years ago. They have had but one child, Florence, about 8 years of age, who has been the innocent cause of the tragedy. Soon after the marriage young Cowles became dissipated and began to neglect his wife and associate with other women.

He formed an intimacy with one Clara Lleneschloss, of Bloomfield, N. J., some four years ago, and in the fall of 1886 she accompanied him to Cleveland, where they remained until the next spring. They then came to Cleveland, where Cowles rented a house for her on Arlington street. Since then they have traveled about together as man and wife.

He Wanted to See the Child.

In October, 1889, Mrs. Cowles went to live with her father, taking with her her little child, Florence. Subsequently there was a reconciliation on the husband's promise to reform, but he soon relapsed into his old evil ways, and his wife was again forced to seek refuge with her father, taking her child with her as before. Later, when she had given up all hope of reclaiming her husband, she instituted proceedings for divorce.

Cowles, who had not seen his wife for some time, came to Cleveland on Monday last and went to his mother's house. From there he sent word to his wife that he would like to see his child, and Florence was permitted to go to him. He said he was going to Buffalo and wanted the little one to go with him to the depot.

The Child Abducted.

Mrs. Chase, sister of Mrs. Cowles, became suspicious and went with them. When they arrived at the depot she found that he had bought two tickets for Buffalo and was determined to take the child with him on the train. Mrs. Chase tried to prevent him from doing so, fighting with all her strength to drag the terrified child from the grasp of her excited father.

A crowd gathered, but not understanding the situation did not at once attempt to interfere. When Mrs. Chase explained that Cowles was abducting the child several men attempted to take her from him. Cowles then, drawing a revolver, yelled, "Stand back! I'll shoot the first person that stops me!" Holding the crowd at bay he dragged the child on the train just as it was starting.

The Pursuit of the Kidnaper.

Mrs. Chase hurried home and gave the alarm. Mrs. Cowles ran to her father for help. Mr. Hale secured the services of Judge Ingersoll, and an order for the child was placed in the hands of Sheriff Sawyer, who left immediately for Buffalo, expecting that Cowles would try to get the child into Canada by that point.

He did not succeed in intercepting them, and they reached Montreal safely. Editor Cowles did not accuse Eugene, who was the eldest son, one of the trustees of his will, in which he directed that the payment of one-half of Eugene's share of the income be made to the latter's wife. It would appear from this that the elder Cowles was aware of his son's character and disposition, and did all he could to protect the young man's wife.

To Educate Miners.

BUTTLER, Penn., June 9.—Mr. W. R. Beaumont, member of parliament for the Tyneside division of Northumberland, has, in memory of his wife, given £250,000 for the purpose of founding institutes at York and Newcastle for the education of miners. The princely owner ascribes his wealth to the hard and often ill paid labor of the mining classes. Mr. Beaumont has represented the Tyneside from 1886 as a Gladstone Liberal.

A CONGRESSIONAL FORECAST.

What the Senate and House May Do This Week.

WASHINGTON, June 9.—The Republican members of the senate will hold a caucus Tuesday evening to make choice of a successor to Sergeant-at-Arms Canaday, whose resignation takes effect on the 1st of next month. There are several candidates in the field, the chief of them being ex-Representative Valentine, of Nebraska; Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms Chapman, of Maine, and Reed, of Minnesota, is tentatively in the race. It is not impossible that when the Republican senators get together they will consider the possibility of making other changes in the executive staff of the senate.

The passage by the house of the cannon silver bill will doubtless operate to cut short the silver debate in the senate. A Republican caucus may be held on the same side of the Capitol early this week for the purpose of determining whether or not the senate will indorse the action of the house on this question. The general belief is that the Republican senators will not be able to agree upon a measure and that the senate will pass a bill differing from the house bill, especially in the bullion redemption feature, and that the whole matter will then be settled in conference between the two houses.

Senator Vest promises that he will bring up soon a new subject for debate, the discussion of which may occupy several days. The special committee (of which he is chairman) which spent many months in the investigation of the inspection of beef and beef products has reported a bill, and during the past week the committee on agriculture reported a substitute for it. Mr. Vest has given notice that some afternoon during the coming week he will call up these bills and urge their consideration to a conclusion. The river and harbor appropriation bill may be reported to the senate during the week. The committee on commerce has made such progress with it that it is likely its consideration in the senate may be concluded by the middle of the week.

The senate finance committee had hoped to have the tariff bill ready to report before the end of this week, but the indications now are that the bill will not be ready to return to the senate before the beginning or middle of next week. The Republican members of the committee have turned over to the Democrats several of the schedules, and all of the more important ones but the bill will be passed upon before the end of the week. There is a prospect of a compositively dull week in the house. On Monday, beginning at 4 o'clock, eulogies to the memory of the late Samuel J. Randall will be delivered. Eulogies on the late Representatives Wilber and Nutting, of New York, will be delivered Thursday.

TO COLORED VOTERS.

A Circular Which Advises Them to Divide Their Party Fealty.

WASHINGTON, June 9.—The officers of the Washington Tariff Reform club and colored bureau of information have issued an address to the colored voters of the United States, and especially to those south of Mason and Dixon's line, in which a division of their votes among all the political parties is asked. The circular says: "If it were once needed to smash forts on the battle fields, now we are needed at the ballot box to protect the high tariff monopoly, and when we cease to give aid to this extraordinarily high tariff and thus thousands of white Republican officeholders we will be abandoned again and relegated to'a political shade of quietude."

The circular says that all the love the Republican leaders have for the colored man is to receive his vote. It declares that the negro was forced simply as a war measure. Two colored regiments organized in Massachusetts lay for a year without being recognized as a part of the Union army. Force of circumstances drove the country to it; "so you can see," continues the circular, "that you freed the northern Republicans, if any freeing was done."

The circular says, further, that only, why not politically, it is asked. It is declared that the southern problem will not be solved by the passage of national election laws. Nor will the establishment of the next Calfornia delegation, and the succession to Senator Standford's seat, is being now mapped out in Washington, and that what Mr. Buckley has to say will be received with a great deal of consideration.

Mr. Depew Has Recovered.

NEW YORK, June 9.—Hon. Chauncey M. Depew said last evening that he had entirely recovered from the illness which annoyed him in Chicago. He speaks highly of the reception in that city, and says the fair will do more for the city than fifty years of ordinary progress would. Referring to the rumored sale of the stock yards he said he understood an offer by an English syndicate had been entertained. The management of the yards would, however, remain unchanged.

Got Away with $17,000.

BUFFALO, June 9.—Suit has been brought by the firm of Ramsdell & Co. against Lewis H. White, their former bookkeeper, for embezzlement. In the complaint the firm state that White, between March 1 and October of 1888, got away with $17,000 of the firm's money. He tried to conceal his thefts by false entries, but an investigation resulted in the discovery of the shortage. White's present whereabouts is unknown.

Paralyzed by Lightning.

LOCKPORT, N. Y., June 9.—During the storm which prevailed at Hosmer, a village near here, Joseph Bacon and his family, who were sitting in a room of their house, were all paralyzed in their limbs and arms from electricity in the air. The victims did not recover until the storm had passed off, beyond a severe fright they received no injury.

Over 1,500 Immigrants Landed.

NEW YORK, June 9.—The steamer City of Chicago, from Liverpool, landed 674 immigrants at the barge office Sunday. The steamer La Bretagne, from Havre, landed 534; the P. Caland, from Rotterdam, 247, and the Taormina, from Hamburg, 139.

FOUND A WATERY GRAVE

Terrible Accident to a Sunday Fishing Party.

SEVEN MEN WERE DROWNED.

One by One They Relaxed Their Hold Upon the Overturned Boat and Sank Beneath the Waves of Boston Harbor. But One Man Was Saved.

BOSTON, June 9.—A sailboat with eight young men on board was capsized in the waters of Dorchester, Monday, and seven of the eight lost their lives before aid could reach them. The names of those drowned are:

The Names of the Drowned.

James Husband, aged 18.
Albert Lombard, aged 23.
Edgar Maloney, aged 22.
Lawrence McTiernan, who leaves a widow and an 11-months-old child.
John Sullivan, aged 23.
John P. Troy, aged 18.
Joseph Tufts, aged 21.

The Boat Was Overturned.

The only survivor of the accident is Walter Quinlan. He was found unconscious, but clinging to the boat. All were residents of South Boston and all unmarried except McTiernan, who leaves a widow and an 11-months-old child.

The party set sail at 2 a. m., intending to make a voyage about the bay and put in at Squantum for dinner. At 3:45 the boat was about a mile off Thompson's Island. A heavy squall caused the sail to jibe; the tiller became jammed and the boat quickly upset.

The Boat Sank and Rose.

With the exception of Lombard every member of the party could swim, and all managed to regain the boat, but the boat, only twenty feet in length and shallow, soon filled with water under the weight of the eight men. As the seven swimmers released their holds, but as the boat slowly came to the surface all took hold again. This was repeated several times, but Lombard was unable to swim to the shore for help, but he had not gone a half mile when his companions saw him throw up both hands and disappear beneath the waters.

But One Was Alive.

At last a watchman on a South Boston pier sighted the upturned boat and reported it to Jacob Edward Clark, two brothers, one of whom had saved several men from drowning. They put off from shore, but when they reached the upturned boat there was only one man clinging to it and he half frozen, wholly exhausted and unconscious. The others had one by one been overcome. Quinlan was taken to the shore, resuscitated and from him was obtained the story of the accident.

A Desperate Struggle for Life.

Quinlan says that one of his companions, he does not know who, clung to his leg, but he himself was too weak to even reach a hand to him, and he soon dropped off. Two besides himself clung to the boat, but just how long they fought the chill waves Quinlan cannot tell, but it was fully an hour. Just before the Clarks reached the overturned boat Quinlan's two companions relaxed their hold and dropped into the sea. The sole survivor was apparently dead when the Clark brothers reached him, but by the time they reached their home signs of life were visible in the half drowned youth. Two of the bodies have been recovered.

DARING MAIL ROBBERS.

A Northern Pacific Train "Held Up" by Four Highwaymen.

BISMARCK, N. Dak., June 9.—The most daring train robbery ever committed in the northwest occurred near New Salem, twenty miles from Mandan, at midnight, where the east bound Northern Pacific passenger train was "held up" by four highwaymen. When the train arrived at New Salem two men jumped on the front platform of the baggage car, and after the train got under way they climbed over the tender into the engine and covered the engineer and fireman with their revolvers. They brandished the cocked weapons and threatened the terrified engineer and fireman with instant death if they did not stop at a certain point down the line, where the robbers were joined by two confederates.

Express Messenger Angevine, noting that the train came to an abrupt stop on a lonely prairie, suspected something was wrong. He opened the grest from treasure box of the express company, which contained many thousands of dollars, and stowed the contents safely away in the big safe, which could not be opened except by several hours hard work at the lock. He then left the car by the rear door, locking it after him, and hastened back to New Salem, where he gave the alarm.

After the train had been stopped the mail, express and baggage cars were uncoupled, and the robbers compelled the engineer to pull these cars away from the passenger coaches. When the detached cars had been stopped again the engineer and fireman were forced to break open the door of the express car. Then with a coal pick the robbers succeeded in opening an iron box, but found it entirely empty.

They were so enraged at this discovery that one of them struck the fireman a stunning blow on the head with the butt end of a revolver, felling him like an ox to the floor of the car. The robbers then turned their attention to the mail car, from which they took seven valuable pouches of registered mail matter, besides a large quantity of loose registers. They then made their escape, having delayed the train an hour. None of the passengers were molested and until the train got back to New Salem they did not know what had happened. A posse of men with rifles shortly very heavily armed, left on a special train for the scene of the robbery. Chief Inspector Rathbone, of the postoffice department, has offered a reward of $1,000 for each conviction and sentence in United States courts.

A BIG STEAMER'S PERIL.

The City of Rome Crashes Into a Rock.

HER STEM WAS BADLY BATTERED.

The Passengers Made a Wild Rush for the Deck, but Were Reassured by the Officer's Officers—It Was a Close Call for the Steam Greyhound.

LONDON, June 9.—The steamship City of Rome, from New York, arrived at Queenstown at 10 o'clock Sunday morning in a damaged condition, and reported having met with a narrow escape from shaking off Roche's Point. While proceeding slowly in a fog the steamer struck a rock, which lown and the passengers, alarmed by the shock and the crash, made a wild rush for the decks. They were met by the officers of the ship, who succeeded in allaying their fears by stilling their own, inasmuch as they were not then aware of the extent of the damage.

She Was Badly Damaged.

Throughout was given to reverse and back, while the engineer promptly obeyed, and the vessel was removed from her perilous position. Examination of the damage was made and it was found that the stem of the ship was broken and her bulwarks gone, but the full extent of the damage sustained will not be known until the vessel is dry docked. Several ladies among the passengers were made ill by fright, but all things considered, the passengers behaved well. The steamer halted only an hour at Queenstown and at 11 o'clock started for Liverpool at half speed.

Praised by the Passengers.

The passengers united in passing a resolution praising the conduct of the officers and crew of the ship in their trying post. They generously commended the coolness of the captain in sailing at greatly reduced speed at the time of the mishap, though the vessel was many hours overdue and endeavoring to prevent the lowering of her record.

Cardinal Manning's Silver Jubilee.

LONDON, June 9.—Cardinal Manning celebrated his silver jubilee, the twenty-fifth anniversary of his elevation to the dignity of a prince in the Roman Catholic Church, Sunday, he having been appointed Archbishop of Westminster on the death of Cardinal Wiseman in 1865. A large number of prominent diplomats and other persons were present in the cathedral to do honor of the occasion, and the Earl of Ripon presented the venerable cardinal with an illuminated address of congratulation, to which Cardinal Manning made a feeling response. In the course of his remarks he announced that a large sum of money had been subscribed and paid over in honor of the occasion toward the debt of the cathedral.

Emperor William and Labor.

BERLIN, June 9.—Emperor William is devoting himself assiduously to studying the labor question. His friendly attitude toward the working people has already caused a division in the German Conservative party in the Reichstag. The party, which had formerly been united in opposition to Bismarck and the throne, is now divided, many members showing a tendency to approve the action of the Emperor and to support his policy. Even in Russia the czar's assault is considering a bill to compel employers to support employes injured in the course of their duty and to require each employer to pension the widow and children of any employe losing his life while at work.

The Lion and Bear Are Friendly.

BERLIN, June 9.—The Berlin Krenz Zeitung learns, upon what it regards as indisputable authority, that Sir R. D. Morier, British ambassador to Russia, is the bearer of secret dispatches from the czar's government to London. It is also stated that the relations between England and Russia are of the friendliest character and declares that the czar spent three evenings last week in company with Morier at the British embassy, upon which occasion private and confidential dispatches which the latter is to convey to London were formulated.

President Carnot Censured.

PARIS, June 9.—The French Radicals are heavily criticising the action of President Carnot for pardoning the Duke of Orleans, on the ground that the penitentiary rules were violated in his release. Their regulations ordain that a prisoner cannot be pardoned until he has served half of his time, and then only on petitioning the head of the state.

MASSACRED BY INDIANS.

Two Men Killed and Two Seriously Injured by Cheyennes.

MILES CITY, June 9.—The following particulars of the recent attempted massacre by Northern Cheyennes are brought here by Frank Ferguson, a settler on the border of the Tongue River reservation. One night not long ago about twenty Indians stole 2,000 or 4,000 pounds of beef from James S. Ferguson's ranch. Early they were discovered while departing with the booty and were pursued by Ferguson and forty of his men. The meat was recovered. A few days afterward Ferguson and six of his men were returning to the ranch at night from a trip when they were ambushed along the road by Indians. Ferguson was shot through the heart, dying instantly. One of his men was shot in the groin and died the next day. Two others received serious wounds.

The Indians have since been thoroughly armed and the settlers have become so alarmed that many of them have abandoned their farms and ran away. It is learned from Fort Keogh that the two companies at the Tongue River agency and Scabbat are considered sufficient to cope with the Indians, and no more troops will be ordered out for the present.

"Held Up" by Bandits.

LAREDO, TEX., June 9.—The stage running between here and Guerrero, Mexico, was held up by Mexican bandits twenty miles down the Rio Grande. One passenger was robbed of $100. The other, Mr. Beaver J. Prigen, of Victoria, escaped into the bush and made his way to Guerrero. There were only two passengers aboard.

Cashier O'Hare's Strange Freak.

SUSPENSION BRIDGE, N. Y., June 9.—James O'Hare, cashier of the Erie railroad freight office, and whose sudden disappearance gave rise to the report that he was short in his accounts, has returned here and showed the affairs of his office to be all right. No reason is given for his mysterious disappearance.

TO PREVENT ACCIDENTS.

Successful Tests of a New Railroad Electric Danger Signal.

WASHINGTON, June 9.—Very satisfactory tests of a new railroad electric danger signal have just been made on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad near Washington. The device consists of an electric circuit formed by a brush contact underneath the engine, with an iron rod laid between the rails. With suitable batteries and telegraphic apparatus the engineers of trains coming from the same or opposite directions, within a mile or a mile and a half of each other, are notified of the proximity of their trains with unerring certainty by the ringing of an electric bell, and then as soon as this dangerous proximity is noted telephonic communication through the rail and rod can at once be established and the engineers after stopping their trains may talk with each other.

The tests made in the presence of a number of newspaper correspondents and electrical experts and others were highly satisfactory, and will undoubtedly result in the adoption by the Baltimore and Ohio road of a cheap and certain extra precaution against collision of all kinds, which, in spite of extraordinary care, are likely to happen, and do sometimes happen, on all railroads.

Ran on a Sunken Rock.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 9.—The whaling bark Lancer, which left this port in November, is reported to have been lost on the Japan sea. The bark belonged in New Bedford and was commanded by Capt. Cleveland. She was bound for the Okhotsk sea, but after passing south in April last, and while following a school of whales ran upon a sunken rock. The vessel was badly sprung and made water freely. By the assistance of the pumps she was kept afloat until she reached Vladivostock, where it was discovered that her injuries were too great to be repaired. She was sold and broken up. The captain and crew shipped on other whalers in port at the time.

She Could Not Drown.

CAPE MAY, N. J., June 9.—Dr. Robert Meade Smith, of Reading, Beach avenue, discovered a strange young woman upon his veranda in an unconscious state, with her clothing soaking wet. Three physicians labored all night before restoring her to consciousness. She explained that she was Miss Catrin J. Law, of 2,127 Summer street, Philadelphia; that she had tried to drown herself in the surf, but could not keep under the water, and had dragged herself to the nearest house from a lonely spot far up the beach. She is but 20 years old. Grief over the death of a sister had driven the charm of life away. She was sent to Philadelphia to her friends.

Riddled with Buckshot.

BELVIDERE, N. J., June 9.—The suicide of Abram S. Rice, of Hainesburg, near Knowlton Iron, in the remote part of Warren county. He had been ill several months with dropsy. Saturday the census enumerator called on him and questioned him closely about his disease. The enumerator left him very despondent. A half hour afterward Rice went to his room, took his gun from the wall, rested the butt on the floor, leaned his left breast against the muzzle and pushed the trigger with the ramrod. His heart was riddled with buckshot.

A NEWARK SENSATION.

The Trouble Between John D. Peddie and Rev. W. W. Boyd.

NEWARK, N. J., June 9.—A local paper recently stated that John D. Peddie, the millionaire trunk manufacturer, was of illegitimate birth. Mr. Peddie not only began a libel suit, but made an investigation which disclosed the fact that the originators of the story was Rev. W. W. Boyd, of the Peddie Memorial church. Rev. Mr. Boyd admitted that he told the story to a reporter, but says the reporter promised not to have it published until a later date. The editor of the paper, however, disregarded the reporter's request and published it. Rev. Mr. Boyd now says that while the publication was premature, the statement is true, and he will stick to it. Mr. Peddie will doubtless sue the minister for libel as well as the paper.

The matter has caused a great social sensation. It is the sequel of another and lesser scandal which has been a matter of gossip for some time—namely, the refusal of the trustees of the church to recognize Mr. John Peddie in the church's affairs. The late ex-Mayor and ex-Congressman Thomas B. Peddie founded the church with an endowment of $250,000. When the church was dedicated recently the keys of the church were presented to the trustees by an adopted daughter of the late Mr. Peddie. There was some surprise that John Peddie was ignored and a family quarrel was hinted at. The publication of the statement above referred to then followed.

Mr. Peddie's friends assert that Rev. Mr. Boyd is angry at Mr. Peddie for failing to carry out certain supposed intentions of the latter in regard to the minister's salary and other incidentals, and that his resentment has led him into making a libelous statement.

The pastor's friends, on the other hand, declare that he is a man who would not say such a thing unless he had proof of its truth. Mr. Peddie threatens to drive the minister from the pulpit, and there are likely to be sensational developments.

Rev. Dr. Moffat Dead.

PRINCETON, N. J., June 9.—Rev. Dr. James Clements Moffat, emeritus professor of church history of the Princeton Theological seminary, died Sunday afternoon in his eighty-third year. He was born in Scotland, came to this country in 1832 and graduated from Princeton in the class of 1835. After a postgraduate course of two years at Yale he was a tutor at Princeton, professor in Lafayette college, Miami university and the Cincinnati Theological seminary. In 1851 he was made professor of church history at Princeton and held the chair until two years ago. He edited The Princetonian in 1870, has been a frequent contributor to The Princeton Review and has written a number of books and poems.

Delegate Caine's Beautiful Residence at Salt Lake—Mr. Springer's Springfield House—Senator Pugh's Washington Mansion—McMillin's Tennessee Home.

[Copyright by American Press Association.]

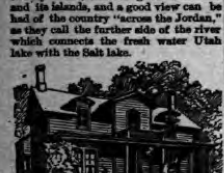
The residence of Mr. John T. Caine, the Mormon delegate to congress, has the distinction of being the finest modern house erected in Salt Lake City. The Latter Day Saints had only been located in Utah five years when Mr. Caine crossed the plains and joined them. Nine years later, in 1871, he started as a pioneer in the improvement of the dwellings of the city, which were then nothing better than adobe huts. He went to what is now known as the East Bench, an elevated piece of tableland almost in the center of the city, but then quite a distance out.

THE RESIDENCE OF DELEGATE CAINE.

There he erected the handsome structure in which he now lives, and topped it with the first mansard roof seen in Utah. The basement, which is entirely above ground, is of rock, surmounted by a white stone water line. The upper portion is of adobe covered with plastered stucco—the advantage of the adobe being that it makes a house wonderfully cool in summer and warm in winter. The roof looks as though it was mansarded with slate, but it is not. It is covered with shingles, each one of which was shaved and shaped by hand. They were made by a friend of Mr. Caine, and although they have been doing duty for nineteen years not one has had to be replaced and all are apparently as good as when new.

The extensive grounds in which the house stands are filled with flowering shrubs and peach trees, which were imported from the east, and it is a remarkable fact that the latter, although planted more than a quarter of a century ago, are still bearing fruit in quantity and quality as good as when they first matured. The average life of a peach tree in the east is not more than six or seven years.

Mr. Caine takes a great personal interest in his garden, and was one of the first to import into the territory the small fruits of the east, such as strawberries, gooseberries and raspberries. His house contains eleven rooms, and commands a view, on account of the extreme clearness of the atmosphere, of twenty-five miles in all directions. On the east are the Wasatch mountains, with Fort Douglass, a military station. On the west, at a distance of about twenty miles, lies the great Salt lake and its islands, and a good view can be had of the country across the Jordan," as they call the further side of the river which connects the fresh water Utah lake with the Salt lake.



WHERE REPRESENTATIVE SPRINGER LIVES.

Mr. Caine has a family of ten living children, six sons and four daughters, two of the latter being with him in Washington.

Just a half mile from the Illinois state house at Springfield, on a piece of rising ground overlooking the city, stands the pretty home of Representative William M. Springer. The approach to it is along Jefferson avenue, a fine street paved with wooden blocks and lined with handsome houses. Mr. Springer's residence stands about two hundred feet from the road, a carriage drive shaded by tall old trees leading up to the house. It is called "Oakwood" and stands in its own grounds some seven acres in extent. With the exception of the smooth lawns in front the whole of the grounds are in grove. There was a vegetable garden in the rear, but even that has been abandoned to give room for more trees. Consequently Mr. Springer has now a small forest of oaks, elms, hickory, ash and walnuts.

Some of them are very large, having been of good size when Mr. Springer took the place, twenty-five years ago. Gravelled walks and pathways wind in and out among the trees, sometimes circling a miniature grotto, but generally with no particular destination. Hosts of birds have made their homes in this grove for years and they are never disturbed.

The house is a pretty little frame country place with porch and gables. It faces south and a good view of the undulating country surrounding Springfield can be obtained from the veranda, which is Mr. Springer's favorite resting place. The west end of the porch is covered with a thick tangle of vines which form an agreeable shade from the rays of the setting sun. Everybody who knows Mr. Springer will understand why, although the vegetable garden was abandoned and overgrown with trees, a flower garden is not only allowed to flourish but is most carefully attended. For fifteen years Mr. Springer has been in congress, but during all that time it would be difficult even for himself to say when he appeared in the house of representatives without a flower of some kind in his buttonhole. He would scarcely be recognized without it. He is very fond of them, and flowering shrubs and vines cover the pillars and ornament the front of his porch. Three or four flower beds in the lawn in front also furnish him a variety from which to choose for his daily adornment.

His house is plainly but comfortably furnished. A large double parlor is on the right of the wide entrance hall and a reception room on the left. Mr. Springer's sleeping room overlooks his grove and has a good view of the famous Lincoln monument.

Senator James L. Pugh, of Alabama, lives in a house plain and unpretentious in its exterior and without any ornate decoration to distinguish it particularly from its neighbors. It is situated in a comparatively newly developed section of the city of Washington, and was built for him three years ago. His old home at Eufaula, Ala., has been occupied by tenants during the ten years Mr. Pugh has served in the senate, and what was a fine southern mansion, surrounded by a wide colonnade, is now almost in ruins. His R street house has no grounds connected with it. The severity of its front is relieved by a bay projection running through two of its three stories, and its only ornamentation is the colored glass in the upper parts of the windows. It is very comfortable inside and quite large enough for the accommodation of the senator and Mrs. Pugh and their occasional guests. Their children have all grown up and made homes of their own in Alabama. The reception room is on the right of the entrance hall, and separated from it by folding doors is the senator's library, where he spends most of his time. There is nothing gaudy about the furnishings of the interior, everything being handsome but plain.

At the end of Main street, in the little Tennessee town of Carthage, just as it begins to slope down towards the Cumberland river, is a long wooden fence. Inside the fence are a number of maple trees and great tall rose bushes, almost trees in themselves. In the midst of this mass of foliage, but almost hidden from view, is the home of Representative Benton McMillin. A prettier home it would be hard to find. The grass plot in front is filled with flowering shrubs, and the rose bush seen in the picture rises above the two storied veranda and then droops down, covering the whole front of the place with a wealth of ruddy color. The house, which is of brick, stands on a knoll, and the Cumberland river flows by the lower slope of the grounds. At the north end of the house is a portico overgrown with clematis vines bearing giant flowers seven and eight inches across. This portico is continued around the rear and at the north end is a conservatory. Of fashioned tall double windows light the house and a wide hall on the lower and upper floors affords free circulation for the air. Trees so thoroughly surround the place that the sun has but little effect even in the hot days of summer. From the top of the upper windows of the river bluffs on the Cumberland is superb. In the middle of the river is an island which is owned by Mr. McMillin and his cousin. It is cultivated as a farm of 175 acres, and on the south side there is an original canebrake, somewhat of a rarity in these utilitarian days in Tennessee. The canes grow from eighteen to twenty feet high and so thickly that the daylight never pierces their hidden depths. They make good fishing poles, and Mr. McMillin and his friends furnish themselves with new rods from this inexhaustible supply each time they go fishing.

SENATOR PUGH'S WASHINGTON ABODE.

Transmission of sound by the vibration of glass is the primary feature of a telephone recently invented by an American. From a glass diaphragm extend a number of glass tubes of various sizes communicating with an ordinary wire. Very clear and distinct utterance has been found to result on trials over a line three miles long.

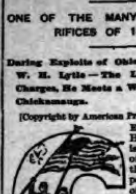
A French leader of fashion appeared in a startling costume recently at a Paris wedding. She wore a long redingote of peacock feathers, the glittering blue green plumage forming the entire garment from head to foot. The bonnet was made of a bird of paradise, and the white tulle veil was fastened with pearl pins.

POET, PATRIOT AND HERO

ONE OF THE MANY NOBLE SACRIFICES OF 1861-65.

During Exploits of Ohio's Soldier Poet, W. H. Lytle—The Leader of Many Charges, He Meets a Warrior's Fate at Chickamauga.

[Copyright by American Press Association.]



EN. William Haines Lytle, who is known to lovers of stirring and pathetic verse by his poem on the death of Antony, beginning

I am dying, Egypt, dying,
Ebbs the crimson life tide fast, had a soldier's fate; and, like his Roman hero, breathed out his life in the heat of battle ardor.

The soldier fiber was born in Gen. Lytle and displayed itself early. His grandfather and great-grandfather, of the same name, fought in the French and Indian wars, and at the age of 20 he joined the United States service, he was elected colonel of the Montgomery regiment (Tenth Ohio), named in honor of the brave Irish-American patriot who fell in the storming of Quebec. This was Ohio's Irish regiment, and the members facetiously christened it the "Bloody Tenth," the sobriquet meaning the second good in courage next to ourselves, for Lytle proved to be another Montgomery in impetuous zeal, and the Tenth never feared to follow where he led. Lytle's first brilliant fight was at the head of the Tenth, as colonel, in the engagement on Gauley river, West Virginia.

In September, 1861, the Confederates in the Kanawha region were strengthened by a new brigade under Gen. Floyd, and while this force was posted, about, around Carnifex Ferry on the Gauley, the Union commander (Rosecrans), set out from the Potomac to destroy it. He had three brigades, and when the advance guard overreached Col. Lytle led the column with his Montgomery boys. Pressing on boldly, a turn in the route of march brought him opposite to a fortified battery, which immediately opened with grape and canister. Lytle ordered the colors to be planted on the slope in front as a rallying point for his men. The color bearer was shot, getting up re-enforcements; the artillery fire was withering and was supported with musketry; two color bearers of the Tenth were shot down and every man fell.

There were three things to choose from in this emergency: retreat, annihilation, or a charge. Without orders he chose the latter and dashed ahead on horseback, calling his men to follow. He was almost instantly shot through the leg, the bullet wounding his horse mortally. Lytle disengaged himself from the dying animal, recrossed the breastworks after throwing his disabled rider in a frantic plunge. Lytle ordered his men to seek cover, which they did close to the battery, keeping up a spirited fire on the Confederate gunners. But re-enforcements were slow in coming up, and Col. Lytle ordered his sharpshooters, at night came on without a blow being struck to drive the wedge home. Floyd abandoned the field and escaped across Gauley river, which he lay beside.

Lytle's wound was such as to keep him out of the field for months, and it was over a year later, October, 1862, when he went into action again. It was at Perryville, Ky., during Bragg's invasion. Col. Lytle commanded a brigade in Rousseau's division of Buell's army, his own regiment serving under him and destined to emulate their leader's heroism in a most striking manner on this field. Rousseau's division held the right of McCook's corps, on the wooded banks of Chaplin river, where the Confederate divisions of Cheatham and Buckner were attempting to cross and debouch from the woods to reach him. The battle was a surprise to the Union side.

The troops were under orders to concentrate, and following out a natural impulse, pushed on to the stream in front, in search of water, and the Confederates stole unobserved through the thicket, falling upon the front and flank of four brigades, only two of which were within supporting distance of one another. Lytle was on the right of Rousseau's line, the Ninth and Tenth Ohio at the front as skirmishers. As fighting progressed the general instructions for the right brigade were to hold that position as long as possible and then retire. There were no troops on the right of it and the next brigade on the left was out of sight, owing to the dense undergrowth.

Lytle had five regiments and could not keep more than two of them in sight at one time. The Union artillery on this part of the line soon exhausted their ammunition and retired, and as the cartridges of the infantry were running low, Lytle sent word to his commander asking for re-enforcements. The answer was that the position must be held, and then re-enforcements could be spared from the left of the line, for the whole corps was fast yielding to a terrible disaster. Three brigade commanders had been killed and thousands of men had fallen.

The brave colonel then posted his regiments on the wooded ridges around him, and took his place with his own Montgomery regiment well to the front to await the crisis which he saw to be inevitable. Buckner's division of four brigades was pressing in from all quarters. Finally the receding volleys on the left told him that the adjoining brigade had fallen back. Then his own regiments one by one gave way, until the Tenth and its leader stood alone. He sent an aid back to call up a reserve regiment to the support of the advance line, but before assistance could come the enemy broke through on his right, and he saw that if he held the ground longer it must be with dead men only.

Hastily forming a body of skirmishers he ordered the regiment to fall back, while he and his handful boldly charged the advancing enemy to cover the retreat. It was a pitiable, forlorn hope that handful made, but it served its purpose and of the regimental organization, which gained a new position and fought on to the end. Lytle was struck down by a piece of shell, and when one of his men rushed up to carry him from the field he called out: "No! I am done for. Stand by your colors!"

The wound was in the head and was ghastly, though not dangerous. His followers who survived the charge reported back to his command that he was dead, and it was so announced in Washington. The Confederates, however, sweeping over the field, discovered him, and Gen. Bushrod Johnson, whose brigade was on his front, dispatched a surgeon to attend the gallant foeman and a hero's life was saved. The loss of his brigade in killed and wounded was 800, of which the Tenth Ohio lost 280, and what was left of the regiment surrendered. Darkness ended the battle before Union re-enforcements could be brought up effectively, and during the night the Confederates retreated. Lytle had carried out his orders and had saved the old command by a deed of daring unsurpassed.

The rank of brigadier general was bestowed on the gallant colonel, and after his exchange he took his place again in the Army of Ohio, known at the time and thereafter as the Army of the Cumberland. Gen. Rosecrans was in command, and in the latter part of September, 1863, crossed the Tennessee river and advanced into northern Georgia to engage the Confederates under Bragg. Gettysburg had been fought, and Lee's army, lying idle in Virginia, spared a force of 12,000 men, under Longstreet, to aid Bragg, and other re-enforcements came from Mississippi, the fall of Vicksburg having released them from service.

After much maneuvering and some preliminary fighting the opposing armies were ready for a desperate battle on the 20th of September, the right of Gen. Rosecrans facing east and covering Chattanooga, which Bragg sought to wrest from him. The Confederates numbered over 70,000, and the Federals less than 60,000. The Union left, commanded by Gen. Thomas, was assailed first and with great fury. It was the key and it covered the passage. Thomas called for aid from the right wing, where Rosecrans was in person. Gen. McCook's corps held the right and Sheridan's division of the corps held the extreme right, Gen. Lytle being at the head of a brigade and second in command to Sheridan.

The appeal from Thomas was answered by the detachment of Sheridan with one brigade toward the left. Rosecrans decided to shorten his line and contract his right wing. Gen. Lytle was placed under orders to follow Sheridan to the left as soon as certain changes had been made in the positions of troops near him. The fighting soon spread from Thomas' line toward the right and urgent calls were made for more men. The Confederates at all points outnumbered their opponents, and order after order passed along the Union line to make shift and hold on with what troops there were at command. One of these orders from Rosecrans was misconstrued and a whole division was moved out of line, leaving a wide gap without a Federal soldier in it in front of Longstreet's corps, which stood fresh and ready for the word of attack. The signal was given just when the fatal gap opened in the Union line. Sheridan had already passed by the division that was moved out of line and Lytle was under way, following with two brigades and supporting the right.

Longstreet had eight brigades, some of them the seasoned veterans of the Peninsula battles, of Fredericksburg, Antietam and Gettysburg, and he onslaught was terrific and the unguarded ends of the Union line on each side of the gap were crushed in a twinkling. It would be wrong to call the disaster to Rosecrans' men a rout; it was the coming of a tidal wave that bore everything on in its pathway. The Union generals were carried off their feet by a force none but a god could resist.

General Lytle reached the gap with his marching brigades at the moment when the nearest Union division was giving way and Longstreet's men were swinging around to envelop the exposed flank. The Confederate progress would soon cut the Union line completely in two, and place a barrier between the Union right wing and Thomas' hard pressed army. Looking around for troops with which to form a new line facing at right angles to the old, the brave Lytle, left to his own resources, saw that the Confederate attack had involved the whole front. There was nothing intact but his brigades. He formed them on the new front and, calling up his old Ohio Tenth, which, with decimated ranks, had become headquarter guard, sought to resist Longstreet's advance down the Union right.

It was simply sweeping the ocean with a broom. His formations were broken as fast as they were made, and planning his colors for one desperate effort he prepared to repeat the charge that had displayed at Gauley river and on Chaplin Hills. Telling his subordinate commanders what was expected of them, he called up his personal staff and placed himself at the head of the column, bleeding the while from three severe wounds received in this encounter. To his aids, who begged him to leave the field, he said:

"We can die but once. Now is our time. Let us charge!"

He then turned and went forward, meeting instantaneous death in the valley of bullets that greeted this bold advance.

But the day was lost. Thomas was not succored, and was in turn overwhelmed, and night found the Army of the Cumberland in full retreat. Lytle's last act of mastery during war in vain, except as an example of heroic devotion to duty.

PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS.

ESTABLISHED 1884. PLAINFIELD, N. J., "THE COLORADO OF THE EAST," TUESDAY, JUNE 10, 1890. PRICE TWO CENTS.

PLUCKY MRS. THATCHER

HER TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE IN A RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.

She Guided the Animal Into a Fence to Stop It.—Both Herself and Daughter Were Thrown Out.—She is Painfully Injured About the Head and Shoulders.—The Wagon Demolished.

At about seven o'clock last evening while Mrs. George Thatcher, the wife of the famous mineral man, accompanied by her little daughter Blanche were seated in a village cart driving down Central avenue on their way home, the horse which was attached to the cart became frightened and ran away. The frightened animal ran down Central avenue at a break-neck speed. Mrs. Thatcher held quietly to the reins, however, but she could not stop the animal and when near the corner of Sixth street and Central avenue she guided the horse into the fence. The force of the collision upset the village cart, but Mrs. Thatcher saw that this was intended she caught the little girl in her arms, both were thrown out but Mrs. Thatcher's quick movement saved her little daughter from serious injury. The mother, however, did not fare so well, she received painful injuries about the head and shoulders, and suffered from a severe nervous shock. The victims of the accident were taken to their homes at the corner of Central avenue and Seventh street, and Dr. Zorb was summoned. After making a careful examination he found that no bones were broken. He then dressed Mrs. Thatcher's wounds and she is reported as much improved to-day.

Meanwhile the horse ran down Madison avenue at a break-neck speed and into the yard at Sunday's livery stable, where it was caught. The cart was completely demolished and the horse was badly cut.

Dr. Thatcher was waiting on Front street at the time the horse ran into the stable yard. He saw the animal and thought it looked like his horse but quickly dismissed the thought as he was positive that the animal was at least a quarter of a mile distant when it would run away. He said that the horse was almost too close to the cart and kept striking its heels on the vehicle, that caused the accident.

Will Build a New Headquarters

The General Synod of the Reformed church in America re-convened at Asbury Park yesterday at 9:30. Rev. R. H. Matthews, of London, England, Secretary of the Evangelical Alliance of the Reformed churches, addressed the Synod in behalf of the work which he represents. Rev. Dr. G. H. Chamberlain, of Brazil, told of the permanency of the missionary movement in Brazil, and the consequent increased accessibility of the country, and the urgent need of additional missionary aid there. The Committee on Overtures recommended the appointment of a committee to provide for the erection of a building in New York city to serve as the headquarters of the church. The committee was instructed to have the building ready by the time the lease on the present headquarters at No. 26 Reade street expires.

Union County Courts.

Berry Benner, a young man, was on trial yesterday in the Union county court, at Elizabeth, charged with highway robbery, the complaint being made by Mr. Stevens, of the Soldiers' Home at Kearney. Brown accused Benner of knocking him down in a room and taking from him $95 all the savings he had. It was shown by witnesses that Benner and Brown were alone, and that no one else was in the room. The jury came before the time he declared he had been robbed. Lawyer Hoffman and Connolly, defended the prisoner. Benner was convicted by the jury. The case out three hours.

Thomas McDermott was tried for alleged theft of Maurice Byrne's shoe store on First street and was acquitted.

Assaulted by a Tramp.

A tramp called at Phil Rider's house at Bound Brook yesterday morning and demanded work. He was told that his help was not wanted. He then began to abuse Mr. Rider and was ordered out of the yard. The enraged tramp said he would be even with Mr. Rider. Mr. Rider's son appeared upon the scene and put the tramp to flight. The town is overrun with tramps. Mr. Rider formerly resided in this city.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following real estate transfer was recorded in the Union county clerk's office at Elizabeth:

Daniel S. Berry and wife, and Alexander Thorn and Mercy Thorn, of North Plainfield, to Richard V. Lindaberry, Elizabeth, and Levi Hatfield, Plainfield, for a large tract of land in Plainfield, bounded by Front street and Green brook. 12,000

Trouble in the Public School at Bound Brook.

The Bloomington public school at Bound Brook, N. J., was closed Friday for the season. This is the first time the school has closed so early for a number of years. Clerk Long says the trustees had not yet decided who would be the next teacher, but the Board he said was dissatisfied with the present incumbent.

Knights of Pythias Convince.

One hundred and fifty members of the Post Business, Knights of Pythias, of New Jersey, will attend the annual session of the Supreme Lodge of the Order. Crescent Division of this city will be represented.

To Oppose the Race Track Bill.

A number of citizens of Elizabeth are going to Trenton to-day to enter a protest with Governor Abbett against his signing the race track bill.

MEMORIAL DAY FIGHTERS.

McCann and Sheehan Fined for Disorderly Conduct.

On Memorial Day Charles McCann and John Sheehan, Jr., engaged in a fight on West Third street. The would-be pugilists, it is said, fought for nearly an hour. Captain Grant heard of the fracas, and, although nearly two hundred people witnessed it, he could obtain no information that would warrant him in making an arrest. By using a little strategy, however, he ascertained who the principals were and on Saturday arrested them. When they were arraigned before City Judge Codington, they pleaded not guilty to the charge and a hearing was set down for ten o'clock this morning. At that hour the little court room in the station house was filled with their friends who stood ready to swear that McCann and Sheehan were not fighting, but only indulging in a friendly wrestling match. Several witnesses testified that such were the facts of the case, but admitted that the affair had caused a large crowd to congregate. After the testimony had all been taken the principals were adjudged guilty of disorderly conduct and Judge Codington fined McCann ten dollars and Sheehan five. They paid their fines.

The police are determined to break up these fights which occur so frequently in that portion of the city and the quicker the disorderly characters learn the fact, the better it will be for themselves.

FROM OVER THE STATE.

CLIPPINGS FROM EXCHANGES.

W. C. Ward, of Montclair, N. J., left a team of horses standing in the street on Wednesday, with a prize winning dog, said to be worth $600, chained in the wagon. The dog sprang over the dashboard and hung against the heels of the horses. They took fright and ran. The dog was killed and the wagon badly damaged before the team was caught.

Many literary events are laid over for commencement performances. At Colaney near Bridgeton, N. J., a Mr. Johnson had an old-fashioned barn-moving on Wednesday, when one of the men playfully picked up a mouse and threw it at Mr. Johnson, who, in trying to dodge it let go his timbers, which fell on him, nearly killing him. Both arms, three ribs and his nose were broken.

Henry Melick, a rich old farmer of Harmony, N. J., known as the "Blue Man," died suddenly at his home yesterday, aged seventy years. When a young man he was almost drowned by falling into the Delaware river while fishing. He was resuscitated after hours of hard work. His skin ever afterwards had a dark-blue cast, his entire body suddenly undergoing this transformation. Physicians were unable to account for the phenomenon.

A two ago a year-old child of Louis Grome, of 643 Elizabeth avenue, Elizabeth, swallowed a pin which lodged somewhere in its throat. Bronchitis set in, and the child's life was despaired of. A couple of days ago it was attached with a violent fit of coughing and vomiting and the pin which was the cause of the trouble. It was a small safety pin which the child had swallowed open. The child is now perfectly well. Dr. E. B. Greer says it was one of the strangest cases he ever attended and that the child's escape from death is remarkable.

PERSONAL.

Mrs. S. R. Struthers of Madison avenue is sojourning in the Catskill mountains.

Policeman Eugene Laing has so far recovered from his recent illness as to be able to walk out.

Mrs. Ayers and family of Brooklyn have leased the Fralley residence on Park avenue for the Summer.

Mr. Frederick Knowland has returned to this city from a week's visit in Pennsylvania, where he went on a fishing excursion.

Mr. and Mrs. William Alberti formerly of this city but late of Brooklyn, are now located at Avon-by-the-Sea, Monmouth county, N. Y.

Mr. Steiner of Somerset street has during the last few weeks greatly beautified his residence and grounds by artistic improvements.

Ex-Postmaster Wm. L. Force and Mr. John Simpson, two noted fishermen of this city, are enjoying an outing at Lake Hopatcong. The poor fish!

Mr. George Brown of Avon has been a great suffer from asthma for some time past. Yesterday he left Plainfield for Denver, Col., for the benefit of his health.

The Hon. Enoch Kirkner and family including his sick daughter, Miss Carrie, sailed from Europe last Saturday and expect to arrive in Plainfield next week.

Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Fraser of Louisville, Ky., is visiting at the residence of Mrs. Fraser's parents, Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Demarest of Craig place, North Plainfield.

Mr. John Rowland, who was until recently assistant freight agent at the depot in this city, has accepted a position in the Central Railroad Company's main office at Jersey City.

Mr. John McLaughlin of Somerset street, North Plainfield, who formerly played ball with the Crescents of this city, has signed a contract to play left field for the Westfield base ball club.

Mr. Frederick Smith of Putnam avenue was seized with a hemorrhage in Rockfellow's grocery store Saturday afternoon. He was taken to his home in a carriage and his condition is now reported as much improved.

The Rev. Cornelius Schenck, the popular pastor of the Second Reformed church is the delegate from the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of this city, to the Ninth Annual International Convention to be held at St. Louis this week. He started Monday.

Mr. C. W. Hillman, who recently on account of business, moved with his family to Scotch Plains, has been appointed a delegate to the Plainfield Bicycle Club, of which he was a member, a large deer's head to ornament the exterior of the chimney of the big open fire-place in the gymnasium. It was presented at the business meeting to-night.

Dr. Jasie L. Hurlbut occupied the chair in the absence of President Jacob Kirkner, at a special meeting of the Board of Education, held in the Franklin School Building on West Fourth street, Saturday evening. Routine business, and some slight matters pertaining to Commencement Day exercises were passed upon, and the meeting then adjourned. Dr. Hurlbut starts soon for Lake Mohonk, and throughout the West, in pursuance of religious matters.

A very exciting experience was had by Miss Annie Mahon and Miss Eleanor Morrison at Asbury Park, N. J., a few days ago. They were walking in a field picking flowers when a bull, probably attracted by some red ribbon worn by the young lady's hats, entered the field to investigate. Seeing him, slowly advancing, bellowing and pawing the ground, so startled them that they ran with all haste possible, leaving the clusters of flowers they had gathered, scattered in the field, and arrived panting with excitement at a carriage containing a chaperone, awaiting them in a road close by. The bull followed at a trot across the field, and a little way after the race ceased, and with a little way after the rapidly disappearing carriage down the road. Their friend in the carriage was almost prostrated by the shock as she is more afraid of a cow or bull than of a wild beast. After the danger was over the young ladies rather enjoyed their experience, but bemoaned the loss of their flowers.

THE SOLDIERS' MONUMENT.

A Novel Design at Last Completed and Accepted.

Messrs. Mason W. Tyler, chairman; N. W. Runyon, secretary; S. A. Gums, Rowland Cox, J. W. Murray, Charles McCutchen, Alexander Gilbert, R. S. Oliver, E. B. Clark, J. R. Stewart, L. V. P. Randolph, G. W. Moore, Leonard W. Bernell, J. Evarts Tracey, Gen. Negley, Gen. Eli Long, Wm. H. Williams and Henry A. McGee, the members of the Soldiers' Monument Committee, who have been considering designs, plans and estimates for the building of a soldiers' monument in memory of those who fought and fell in the late war, have at last accepted a design that, it is thought will fill the desired want. It will be a granite shaft 38 1-2 feet high surmounted by a bronze eagle, of heroic size, with outspread wings looking as though guarding the three figures of Liberty, a soldier in full uniform, and Victory, upon pedestals beneath. It is proposed to erect it on Crescent Square. The design was drawn by Mr. Edward Forbes, of war-fame, under the supervision of Gen'l James Negley.

"P. St. C." Business Meeting.

The regular business meeting of the Plainfield Bicycle club was held in the Club House on Sycamore street last evening. President Townsend Rushmore in the chair. Regular routine business was transacted and two resignations received.

One was from Mr. C. W. Hillman a well-known and well-liked member of the club. He expressed his sorrow at parting from the "boys," but business compelled him to make his home in Chicago. He left as a memento a mounted deer's head.

This token of regard from Mr. Hillman was received with thanks, and an order given the jolly secretary G. C. Martin, Jr., to draw up a flowery acceptance of the resignation with record of the entire club and to put a heavy black border around it and mail it to Mr. Hillman.

The meeting then adjourned.

Base Ball Notes.

The Young New Yorks of this city defeated the Young Americas of Dunellen in a game of base ball Saturday, by of score of 17 to 5.

The Young Crescents of this city will play a game of ball with a Scotch Plains nine on Saturday afternoon next.

The young White Caps defeated a Dunellen nine Saturday afternoon by a score of 19 to 1.

The Crescents have cancled their date with the Sylvans of Harlem and have substituted the Hackett Carhart team of New York. The latter team has played several games with the New York Phylcal League.

McAdoo of the Railways has been signed by the Crescents to play right field.

Gregg will pitch again for the Crescents next Saturday.

A Cure for Diphtheria.

The following remedy is said to be the best known, at least it is worth trying, for physicians seem powerless to cope with the disease successfully. At the first indication of diphtheria in the throat of a child make the room close; then take a tin cup and pour into it a quantity of tar and turpentine, equal parts. Then hold the cup over the fire so as to fill the room with the fumes. The little patient, inhaling the fumes will cough up and spit out all the membranous matter, and the diphtheria will pass off. The fumes of tar and turpentine loosen the matter in the throat, and thus effect the relief that has baffled the skill of physicians.—Scientific American.

A Feathered Monstrosity.

A hen kept by a resident of North Plainfield recently hatched out among a large brood, a little white chicken, which is a curiosity. The upper half of the bill is rolled back in a tight ball between the eyes. The lower half is perfect and well formed. The body is gone. Its wings are mearingly one piece.

The oddest part of the matter is, that it is unusually strong and lively. On account of its formation it cannot feed itself, but greedily swallows small crumbs dropped in its mouth. It is now about four days old.

The Bi. Boys Mean to Stop the Stealing of Bicycles.

In advertising a reward for the arrest and conviction of the thief who stole a safety bicycle, belonging to Dr. Kirchoff, from the front of the club house, the Bicycle Club "means business." Every man, woman and child who rides a bicycle is interested in having the offender brought to book. The fact that the name of the maker and the number of the machine are on each wheel should make detection easy.

AN INDIGNANT CORRESPONDENT.

Angry (!) at The News' Criticisms of His Poem.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—I sent you a poem last week and asked you to publish it in your paper. You declined, and refused to let me go with the crushing reply that I was no poet, and that you "could turn out better poetry out of a sausage machine." Now, I won't be crushed, and I propose to show up your attempt to throttle budding genius. Further, I will ask you to put following poem in your advertising column and charge me your full advertising rates.

Yours, ROGERS,
and his brother.

THE POEM.

I stood upon the ocean's sandy beach,
And with a rood I wrote upon the sand these words:
"Agnes, I love thee!"
But the winds came and the waves rolled
And blotted out the fair impression.
"Even thus," I murmured sadly, fragile reed!
No longer will I trust to thee.
But from the bleak mountain peak I'll pluck
the tallest pine,
And, dipped in the crater of Vesuvius, with it
I will write
Upon the high and burnished heavens these words:
"Agnes, I love thee!"

Abe Buzzard, the famous robber, now roosting in the Pennsylvania penitentiary, has petitioned for a pardon. While he is about it he ought to petition the legislature to change his name. What can be expected of a man with a name like that?

We have now the school book trust. Nearly all the principal school book publishers except the Harpers have formed a union which they say is in the interests of the public. This may be true, still the new syndicate will bear watching. School books are not now dear in price, considering what works of art many of them have become. The maps are produced with great care and accuracy, while the best book artists in the country, those who do the pictorial work for the leading magazines, design the illustrations for school readers. For all this publishers ought to get a paying price. The new trust control 75 per cent. of the school book trade. We will trust their word, for a while at least, that the new school book syndicate will make prices as reasonable as possible. If they do not there will be ways of making it so hot for them that they will wish they had never heard of a school book.

Heaven and the Hohenzollerns.

Von Moltke said not long since that a general European war was inevitable, and might break out at any time. Very significant was this utterance of his that the time had come by when wars were made by cabinets, and that the war, when it did come, would be brought on by the people themselves, and not by the governments. Peoples can no longer be kept down and made to do the bidding of rulers, like so many dumb animals. They are restless and demandful. The pawns have become kings.

On the one hand is the aged Von Moltke, prophet like, reading the signs of the times. On the other hand is the young emperor of Germany, unbattered as yet in wars or diplomacy, self willed and headstrong, full of the old superstition that kings can do everything. And William at Koenigsberg quoted these words from his grandfather: "I proclaim before the world my kingship by the grace of God. This kingship by the grace of God expresses that we Hohenzollern accept our crown only from heaven, and are responsible to heaven alone for the performance of our duties."

But William will find, if he lives a few years longer, that it is the people he is responsible to, and that directly and solemnly. Unless he administers the government to suit them they will rise in their strength and, sweep him and all kingdets from the earth, and heaven itself will sit still and smile, and not put forth a hand to save his little crown.

Ill Gotten Gains.

Any time in the past thirty-five years, when a stranger sight seeing in New York wished to visit the worst possible den of depravity in America, he went to Harry Hill's "all night place," and flattered himself ever after that he had done something delightfully wicked. And so he had, as far as simple wickedness was concerned, for Harry Hill's place was the headquarters of toughs and sports of the first water.

Personally Harry Hill was honest, and took good care of men's money when they came to his place on a spree. They intrusted their wealth to him, and it is his boast that they always got it back again. But bloody encounters not a few have taken place in his saloon. It was a concert and dance house and saloon. Among the placards posted on the walls were these: "Take a little wine for thy stomach's sake," "As we journey through life let us live by the way."

Harry Hill always boasted that no man was ever robbed in his saloon. For all that it was as rough a place as could be, and yet from 1854 till 1884 it flourished triumphantly and flauntingly, in open violation of almost every law of morality, written or unwritten. How could it thus flourish? That was the mystery.

Harry Hill amassed a fortune, and had the name of possessing great wealth. Hill's own explanation of his prosperity is very simple. He says he bought "police protection" throughout, paid police captains and roundsmen handsomely for letting him alone.

Then he says their charges got too stiff. He went to the headquarters and charged a police captain and detective with levying blackmail on him. From that hour he was a doomed man. The rest of his life has been a fight with the police. He got the ill will of the force. They hunted him out of his old place. A large business house now stands upon the spot. Hill opened another resort. It was raided over and again till the old fellow was broken down in spirit and in purse. He says he is "dead broke." He is 65 years old, and has neither money, reputation nor friends. He remarks mournfully:

"I am disgusted with myself and everybody. The world in general makes me tired."

AGAINST ALIEN OWNERS.

A Bill to Check a Prospective Evil.

LAND OWNERS MUST BE CITIZENS

The Enormous Acreage in the West Owned by Foreign Capitalists—Senator Cockrell Speaks on the Silver Bill in the Senate—The Most Transportation Measure.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—In the senate Mr. Cockrell spoke on the silver bill. He opposed the bill because it made the coinage of silver a discretionary matter with the secretary. Silver bullion was to be treated as a mere commodity and was to be given none of the equivalence of money or currency.

The War Against Silver.

Why, he asked, continue that legal discrimination and that relentless war against silver? The action of congress upon the silver question, he said, would affect not only the people of the United States directly, but would affect indirectly the people of all nations the ages to come. It should be decided without political or partisan prejudice. He denied that the free and unlimited coinage of silver bullion and the issue of certificates for silver bullion would be derogation of any obligation to the creditors of the nation. Gold and silver should be put on a perfect equality as coin and bullion. In season and out of season those who favored the unlimited coinage of silver were taunted with trying to flood the country with seventy-two cent pieces and the Latin Union. The national sentiment inscribed on the silver dollar, "In God We Trust," was sneered at, derided as meaning "In God we trust for the other seventy-eight cents to make it one dollar."

The Duty of Congress.

He believed it to be the duty of congress, regardless of possible action of other nations, to retrace its steps, correct the false impressions and apprehensions of European nations caused by unfounded representations, and restore silver to a perfect equality with gold both as coin and bullion. At the close of Mr. Cockrell's speech the house silver bill was laid before the senate. Mr. Teller moved that the bill be printed and laid on the table, without reference to the finance committee. It was so ordered.

The Most Transportation Bill.

Mr. Vest, in pursuance of the notice given by him last Saturday, asked the senate to take up for consideration the bill reported from the select committee on the sale and transportation of meat products "to prohibit monopoly in the transportation of cattle to foreign countries," and stated as a reason why action should be taken immediately that the tariff bill (so he had been informed by a member of the finance committee) would be before the senate within a week.

After a discussion concerning the length of time consumed in debate over the silver bill, Mr. Vest's bill was called up and a discussion of its provisions was carried on between Mr. Vest in defense of them and Mr. Hoar, and Mr. Hale in attack upon them.

Provisions of the Bill.

The bill provides that no clearance shall be granted to any vessels plying as a common carrier from the United States to a foreign country, the owners, agents or officers of which shall refuse to receive in the order they may be offered (said vessel having storage room for them) any cattle for transportation to a foreign country, the cattle being in sound condition, suitable for transportation, and the shipper tendering the reasonable freight charges therefor, or with the making any contract or agreement creating a monopoly of the capacity of said vessel for carrying cattle in violation of the law governing and regulating the duties and obligations of common carriers of cattle to the public and providing unjust discrimination between shippers.

Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution providing for the election of postmasters by the people.

In the House.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—In the house the silver bill passed Saturday was amended so as to read as follows: "Directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes." Among the bills passed was one incorporating the King Theological hall. A bill was introduced by Mr. McRae, of Arkansas, for the free coinage of silver, an increase in the issue of treasury notes, the retirement of national bank notes and for the repeal of all laws for the sale of bonds and for the accumulation of a gold reserve.

A Bill Against Alien Land Owners.

The bill introduced by Mr. Oates, of Alabama, to prohibit aliens from acquiring title to or owning lands within the United States has been reported back to the house indorsed by a favorable report from the committee on the judiciary. Mr. Oates made the report. In it he states that the power of the government to totally exclude aliens from owning lands within its jurisdiction, as has been done in the case of the Chinese, no one questions, and that this sovereign power certainly includes the less one of defining what property rights they may exercise after they are admitted and during the continuance of their alien condition.

American Landlordism Threatened.

"Your committee have ascertained, with reasonable certainty," it is stated, "that certain noblemen of Europe—principally Englishmen—have acquired, and now own in the aggregate, about 21,000,000 acres of land within the United States. This alien non-resident ownership will, in the course of time, lead to the evil of landlordism incompatible with the best interests and free institutions of the United States. The foundation of such a system is being laid broadly in the western states and territories. A considerable number of the immigrants annually arriving in this country are to become tenants and herdsmen on the vast possessions of these foreign lords under contracts made and entered into before they sail for our shores."

Aliens Who Become Citizens.

The report also refers to the large purchases by European capitalists of railroad and land bonds. The committee recommend an amendment to the bill allowing aliens who come to this country with the intention of becoming citizens to buy land at once and to acquire an inchoate title thereto, which could upon into a perfect title except when the alien perfects his citizenship; and in case of his death his heirs, being citizens, may inherit his lands. The bill also contains a provision that all lands now owned or hereafter acquired by aliens who fail for ten years to become citizens of the United States shall be subject to be denounced and forfeited to the YOUNG COWLES REPENTS.

He Gives Up the Child and Is Sorry for Everybody.

MONTREAL, June 10.—Eugene H. Cowles, who was shot Sunday, when seen in the General hospital was too ill to make any extended statement, but he talked freely of the case. He affirmed that what he had done in regard to his daughter was done legally under advice of the best legal talent in the United States and Canada. He said that he and his wife were in the way of having an amicable settlement, and he regretted that the difference in question was sorry and hurtful. He expressed the warmest interest in his family and only resented outside interference. He was very sorry for what had been done and felt keenly for him in his painful position. When well enough he said he would show that he has been the victim of wrongs and that he has been hardly dealt with.

Cowles then called for Superintendent Kirkpatrick, of the Montreal General hospital, and stated that he was willing to surrender his daughter, Florence, to his wife. He affixed his signature to the following document:

To the Directors, of the Sacred Heart Convent:

Please deliver to my wife, Alice Cowles, our daughter, Florence Cowles, without delay, and consider this an annullement of my order respecting the child. EUGENE H. COWLES.

Judge Tait was shown the above document. He considered that it settled the abduction case, but adjourned it for one day. Mrs. Cowles received the news with much satisfaction.

Cowles' condition is quite serious, more especially as he is suffering from consumption. "If I die," he said to a reporter, "and I am afraid I will, it will go hard with poor Flo. But I have already resigned from prison in charge of two officers, and is stopping with his friends at the Windsor. General satisfaction is expressed at this unexpected turn of affairs in the case.

Bank Wrecker Fell Sentenced.

NEW YORK, June 10.—Bank Wrecker George H. Fell is in Sing Sing. He was stripped yesterday of the honorable garb of a civilian and made to don the striped suit of a felon. The sentence of the court is that he shall continue in prison for seven years and six months at hard labor. If he proves to be a better prisoner than he was a citizen commutation for good conduct will lessen his term of imprisonment to about five years. Such is the punishment of the king pin of that remarkable gang of conspirators whose "check kiting" style of financiering set this city and country agog by wrecking the Sixth National, Lenox Hill and Equitable banks.

G. H. FELL.

That Vandalism at Harvard.

BOSTON, June 10.—There is a strong impression among the Harvard students that the sudden change of front in the matter of investigating the recent vandalism at the college is due to the fact that the unpleasant discovery has been made that the culprits are found to be among the most prominent students and of the best families. The feeling is therefore, that on the eve of commencement, as an exposure would only make a bad matter worse, the guilty ones will be quietly expelled from college, and will go quietly leave Cambridge. The police find themselves in a position where they can do nothing if the college authorities, whose private property was disfigured, make no complaint.

Chicago's Big Beer Combine.

CHICAGO, June 10.—The subscriptions in this city to the bonds and stocks of the City of Chicago Brewing and Malting company, limited, closed at noon. They are as follows: First National bank, $1,165,000; Illinois Trust and Savings bank, $2,350,000; Merchants' Loan and Trust, $6,550,000; total, $17,012,050. This includes $3,980,000 subscribed at E. S. Dwer & Co.'s and $5,000,000 by Charles Hesterin's. The combination of breweries and malt houses was made with a view of selling to an English syndicate, but when the value of the properties became known Chicagoans came to the front, and two-thirds of the bonds have been taken here.

Hackney Horses for America.

LONDON, June 10.—The National line steamer Denmark, which has sailed for New York, has on board a valuable consignment of hackney horses for Dr. Webb, of New York, brother-in-law of the Messrs. Vanderbilt. There are also on board six French coaching horses for one of the Messrs. Vanderbilt. Dr. Webb's lot comprises the famous mare Lady Alice, winner of the champion cup at Islington show; another winner of the champion cup at the Jubilee show, and Dagmar, White Socks, and Pomfret's famous stallion, all of which have been awarded Brookfield stud of Mr. Burdett-Coutts.

$1,000 for Manslaughter.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., June 10.—Michael Hussey and Melville Hendrickson, held for the murder of George Kissengen during the railroad riot at Sayerville on the night of May 6, 1889, retracted their plea of not guilty and plead non vult of technical manslaughter. On the recommendation of the public prosecutor they were fined $1,000 each.

Baseball Players in Trouble.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., June 10.—The members of the Rochester cricket and Athletic clubs, who were arrested by the Irondequoit authorities and taken before Judge Coy to answer to charges of baseball playing in or playing ball on Sunday at Windsor Beach, were held in $100 bail each to await the action of the grand jury.

A Guest Burned to Death.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., June 10.—The Trembath hotel was burned last night. One guest, Mr. Trembath, manager, was burned to death. Mrs. Trembath, the landlady, and her stepdaughter, Miss Annie Wilson, were seriously burned and otherwise injured. The loss on building and furniture is about $15,000.

A Big Mortgage Recorded.

READING, Pa., June 10.—A mortgage for $2,000,000 by the Reading and Chesapeake Coal and Railway company to the Farmers' Loan and Trust company of New York, as trustees, has been recorded here. The Reading and Chesapeaks is a new railroad projected to run from this city to Havre de Grace, Md.

How the Accident Occurred.

One of the trains had eight palace horse cars loaded with thoroughbred horses en route from Latonia to Kansas City.

Among the animals killed were Riley, Robespierre and Huntress. Riley's owner, Ed. Corrigan, had refused $50,000 for him. The accident was caused by an error in train orders. The second section of train No. 1 had orders to run two hours and five minutes late, and the order delivered to No. 36 by the operator at Montgomery read two hours and fifty minutes late.

The Famous Horses Killed.

The horse Riley has had a brilliant career and was regarded as one of the finest 3-year-olds in the country. He was by Longfellow out of Geneva by War Dance, and in addition to many western events, which he apparently had at his mercy, was richly engaged in the east. Huntress and Robespierre, both from the Chicago stables, were valuable animals.

The mare had just placed to her credit the "jack pot" stakes and was in splendid shape. She was 5 years old and was by Springbok out of Edith. Robespierre, a 3-year old, gave good promise.

Two Men Were Killed.

ST. LOUIS, June 10.—Another accident occurred at 5 o'clock, when a work train and the through freight train on the St. Louis, Kansas City & Northern railway, collided at Busch, a station on the line north of Old Monroe. Fireman Thayer, of Fort Madison, Ia., and Fireman Nelson, of Keokuk, Ia., were killed, and Engineers Fitzpatrick and Carter badly injured. Conductor Lemmons, of the freight, escaped with a sprained back. This accident, like that on the Wabash, was also caused by a telegraph operator giving wrong orders.

Possible Trouble with Venezuela.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—A joint resolution passed by congress empowered the president to practically declare war on the government of Venezuela, in direct contradiction to the recommendation adopted by the Pan-American conference that all the governments represented adopt a uniform treaty of arbitration. The treaty has not yet been ratified, but only one government has entered an objection to it. It is alleged by John B. Henderson on the part of the United States, by N. Balet Peraza on the part of Venezuela and by five others. The joint resolution referred to empowered the president to take such measures as in his judgment may be necessary to obtain prompt settlement of the Venezuelan claims. It is said that in case the Venezuelan government fails to at once pay over the indemnity demanded the United States may send a warship to Venezuela to enforce the collection. Two of the articles of the proposed treaty provides that, except in cases where the independence of a government is imperiled, all controversies shall be submitted to arbitration.

A British Kick on the Tariff Bill.

LONDON, June 10.—In the house of commons last night Mr. C. E. Howard Vincent, member for Sheffield, referring to the act of the American house of representatives increasing the duties on cutlery, tin plate and other articles of British export, inquired concerning the bad effect which the approval of the senate would have upon Sheffield, Belfast and other places in the British empire. He also asked if the government still maintains that the free import system precluded its instruction of Sir Julian Pauncefote, British minister at Washington, to represent to the American government the injury which the pending legislation would do to the industry of a friendly power, which last year gave a free market to $95,000,000 worth of competing American goods.

A Country Idyl.

"Have you dug your grass?" asked the city
Of the starving farmer man,
For he thought he would not crush the crush
Beneath his social ban.
"Have you mow your crop when you dug your grass?
Did the weevils hurt your yeast?
And did the canker worm destroy
Your young cucumber trees?

"I have, good sir, the comic air,
From the town I fain would flee,
And lose myself in rural dreams
Beside the babbling brook.
I would pinch the turnip from its vine,
Thro' the parsnip meadow path,
And rest beneath the grateful shade
Of the heeding cabbage bush.

"Oh, I fain would be a simple swain
And drive my yoke of cows,
And rest at noon beneath the shade
Of the cabbage bought for
Oh, I'd hast the woods for the coconut bush
The whole of the heaving day,
Or stay at home with the turtle box
To dig the hills for hay.

"And if at noonday I grow faint
With my labor's strain and rush,
I would quit the milkweed's luscious milk
With mushroom's luscious mush.
I would pluck the pineapple from the pine
But why tell C. E. Howard Vincent,
But the farmer fell with a sickening thud—
The farmer man was dead!

Hesitating Prima Donna—I hardly know what to say. If it were soaps or complexion powder I should accept the offer in a moment, but—but I am not quite sure whether corn salve is equally—er proper. Suppose we say $10,000?—Chicago Tribune.

He Could Sleep Beside It.

"Is he fond of work?" was the inquiry that Binks made of Banks concerning a young man who had applied for employment.

"Fond of it? I should say so. I never saw a man who could take such good care of work as he does. One piece of work will last him for a week."—Washington Post.

BROOKLYN'S BIG BLAZE.

Flames Rampant in the City's Very Center.

FOURTEEN ENGINES AT WORK.

Hyde & Behman's Theatre, Famous as the Temporary Morgue at the Time of the Brooklyn Theatre Horror, Is In Ashes—Other Buildings Were Afire.

BROOKLYN, June 10.—Hyde & Behman's theatre, the big variety house in Adams street near Myrtle avenue, was found to be on fire at 1 o'clock this morning, and in less than ten minutes the flames had burst through the roof and shot up fifty feet into the air. This happened before an engine could reach the scene at all, and when the steamers that answered three rapidly repeated alarms arrived, all hope of saving the theatre had to be abandoned. The only work really done on the fire was by two firemen who broke through the Adams street door and rescued the janitor and his family, consisting of his wife and three children.

Fourteen Engines at Work.

The fourteen engines then on hand turned their streams at once upon the adjoining buildings, the most important of which was the new Arbuckle building recently erected on the site of Dieter's hotel at a cost of over $250,000. The rear wing of this building was ablaze at 1:15 a. m., and Chief Maclay had little hope of saving much of the main structure. The building contains the offices of the Kings County Trust company, the Western Union Telegraph company, the International Title company and of over 100 lawyers. The property of these various firms is worth over $100,000.

The Park Theatre Ablaze.

The old Park theatre, now being torn down, is separated from Hyde & Behman's by an open lot, on which the Germania Savings bank is preparing to erect a big building. At 1:30 the walls of the burning building fell in with a frightful crash. The Park theatre was then ablaze as were also the Germania Savings bank, the Arbuckle building and The Citizen's building.

The Brooklyn Theatre Horror Recalled.

The theatre building was a brick structure standing on the west side of Adams street, between Fulton street and Myrtle avenue. It was three stories high and for a time was used as a market. Then it was deserted and at the time of the Brooklyn theatre fire, Dec. 5, 1876, it was vacant. When it was discovered that there had been a frightful loss of life in the theatre the building was at once seized upon and turned into a temporary morgue.

It Was a Temporary Morgue.

In the old market, big and bare, except for the stalls where the sands had been, there were placed 200 identification fully 150 burned bodies. For days it was the center of a painful interest to those whose friends had been in the theatre. The sights these days are not likely to be forgotten by those who went out of morbid curiosity took to the spot. Shortly afterward Hyde & Behman took possession of the property and transformed it into a variety theatre, and such it has been ever since.

The Fire Under Control.

LATER.—The fire is under control and is confined to the Arbuckle and Germania buildings and Hyde & Behman's theatre. The loss will probably exceed $500,000. The Park theatre, adjoining the Arbuckle building, was somewhat damaged.

A Connecticut Town Searched.

COLCHESTER, Conn., June 10.—The whole business portion of this town has been burned. The fire started at 8:30 a. m. in a shed near the Worthington brick block.

The Losses.

The following is the most accurate estimate of losses that can now be made: Worthington's block, $13,000; Bingham's block, $8,000; J. N. Adams, $7,500; Kellogg's block and stables, $8,500; Baker's building, $6,000, and contents of same $6,000; Pierce's building, $2,500; C. F. Metzger, photograph gallery, $125; R. S. Jones, barn, $300; A. S. Lutz, clothing, $800; Otis Tarbell & Co., dry goods, $6,000; George O. Jackson, harness, $3,400; Emil Cossacks, barber, $200; the Colchester club, $400; William Wagoner, barber, $800; J. Alsop, $1,000; Colchester library, $4,000; savings bank, $1,100; Rathbone's stables, $700; Mrs. E. L. Kenyon, milliner, $2,000; William H. Otis, grocery store, $1,000; Chinese laundry, $500; F. A. Smith, grocery, $2,000; Peter Schill, $2,500. All the losers save York and Baker, were insured for about two-thirds value. In his fire was checked at the store of R. C. Jones, beyond which dwellings extend a long distance southward. The Colchester Advertiser was burned out. It is believed the fire started in a closet on the second floor of the Worthington block. The territory burned over is the same that was swept by fire in 1887.

An Original Package Decision.

MASON CITY, Iowa, June 10.—Judge John C. Sherwin has made a sweeping decision in the original package injunction cases which have been pending for the past week, which is by far the severest blow at prohibition the state has yet received. In his decision the judge finds that the defendants as agents of importers could occupy the building for the purposes of selling the beer in original packages to all persons except minors and habitual drunkards, and that such use would not constitute a nuisance, though the beer was drunk on the premises by the purchaser, and that the beer, although shipped by the cases, were sales in original packages. He granted a temporary injunction restraining defendants from selling to minors and those in habit of being intoxicated.

Boys Cause a Man's Death.

READING, Pa., June 10.—Boys started an empty car used to haul material a mile up the Newcomb Mountain railway. An engine with a car coupled behind started at the foot of the grade but when they saw the runaway car coming they turned the switch to avoid a collision. One of the Italian jumped and was crushed to death. Those who remained on the car escaped injury.

Four Children Drowned.

ROCK ISLAND, Ills., June 10.—Maggie Beiker aged 9, Lola, Alfred and Charlie Seib, aged respectively 9, 7 and 3 years, were drowned at Rapid City. They were boating and running against a snag the boat was capsized and the children thrown into the water. All the bodies, except that of Charlie Seib, have been recovered.

The Hubbard Statue Unveiled.

DILLON FOR TIPPERARY.

He Tries in Vain to Induce Parliament to Discuss Irish Outrages.

LONDON, June 10.—In the house of commons Mr. Dillon moved to adjourn in order to call attention to the danger to the public peace arising from the violent and unconstitutional action of the magistrates and police of Cashel and Tipperary. He challenged Mr. Balfour to give the reasons why the Tipperary meeting was proclaimed. He avowed his intention to address all the proclaimed meetings he possibly could. If the forces against them were too strong he would advise the people to disperse and avoid bloodshed. He denounced the police for attacking a peaceful meeting, even if it had been proclaimed, without giving due warning to enable those present to escape. Mr. Balfour said that an adequate force had been sent to Tipperary to preserve order. If anything serious happened the blame would rest upon those who defied the proclamation. Mr. Gilhooley moved the adjournment of the house. Mr. Dillon's motion. He contended that the charges had not been answered. The motion was negatived—281 to 220. The house then formally entered into committee on the land purchase bill, but immediately reported progress.

PHILADELPHIA, June 10.—At the session of the grand lodge Clifford P. A series of resolutions were unanimously adopted declaring the rite clandestine and notifying and requiring all brethren Free and Accepted Masons in the jurisdiction of the grand lodge of Pennsylvania to severe their connection with and renounce their allegiance to said rite within ninety days from June 4, 1890.

NEW YORK, June 10.—Several persons who had refused to answer the census questions were arraigned before Commissioner Shields yesterday. In a few cases the prisoners were held for further investigation. Another batch of recalcitrants will be arraigned today.

He says he will fight for the Police Gazette champion belt next summer, no matter whether John L. Sullivan retains it or not.

Beautiful Ecuador Women.

The females of Ecuador are proverbial for beauty, those among the aristocracy being said to have the fairest complexions of any in South America, while all possess large, soft and expressive dark eyes, the blackest and most abundant hair, the whitest teeth, well rounded figures, and small hands and feet. Like all women in the tropics, they mature early and fade quickly, but perhaps their average span of forty years includes more heart happiness than comes to women of colder climes in three score years and ten, for these are harrassed by no "carking cares" or high ambitions.

Indolence, religious superstition and faithfulness unto death are their most prominent characteristics; their passionate natures are completely satisfied in the love of home, husband and children, and for them the whole universe lies within the limits of vision. What higher praise could be bestowed upon the women of any country? To be sure, they are notoriously untidy in dress and habits, but the mantа or pasculon, like the manteel of chivalry, covers a multitude of sins. As the poncho, for men, is the universal and most useful garment for the middle and lower classes, answering for a cloak by day, a coverlid by night, an umbrella when it rains and a basket when there is anything to carry, the female mantа is worn by all classes and is equally indispensable, since it hides unkempt hair and all defects of toilet.—Cor. Washington Star.

To Disinfect a Room.

The best means to disinfect a room which has been occupied by a person suffering from any infectious disease is to burn sulphur in the room. To do this take a dish pan and place a flat plate in the bottom of it, and on this plate set a kettle containing the proper amount of sulphur mixture—equal quantities of sulphur and charcoal. Fill the pan with water so that it will come half way up on the kettle. Then turn alcohol or kerosene on the mixture, ignite, and get out of the room as speedily as possible. Alcohol is much the best to use, and two or three ounces will be sufficient in an ordinary room. Kerosene and sulphur fumes are not sufficient to kill all. In the dry state, the product is simply oxide of sulphur, but when water is added we have sulphurous acid, which is powerful enough to kill all the germs as well as the germs.—Hall's Journal of Health.

"Lodgings" in London.

To speak of the lodging house mode of life as a remedy for liking London may excite surprise, and I confess that initiation into the mystery of how to deal with the head of the house to secure admission in this manner of existence. Experience is required to enable one to know one's own rights in the matter of coals, gas, water, but this experience once obtained, where, outside of one's own house, can one enjoy such comfort and quietude, at a relatively moderate expense, as in a London lodging house? Your grand hotel is splendid, its drawing rooms many and magnificent, its table d'hote repasts Sardanapalian in their profuseness and excellence; your family boarding house is gay and full of pleasant or unpleasant company, but always company; yet is there in any of these tarrying places the slightest resemblance of "Dear Home?"

That intangible quality often pervades the humblest London lodging. Here you are you; an entity, an individual, even a personage—not a mere unit in a conglomerated mass of humanity clustering in a 200 bedded caravansery. If you have been studied in cooking; your hot water is brought to your door in the morning at the hour you name; your letters are handed to you on a salver as soon as they arrive. Your idiosyncracies have weight, as they do at home, but not generally elsewhere in the world.—Olive Logan.

Lord Fauntleroy's Mother.

While the son is so frail, Mrs. Burnett is the picture of health. She is rather below the medium height, of a strong, robust build. Her face is full and large, so to speak, with firm and originality marked all through it. The lines about the mouth are a singular combination of nobility and determination, and with the light of imagination in her blue eyes make a look of sagacity and courage. She has a very high coloring, that looks rosier still under the wide brim of the black felt hat she wears with a drooping black feather. Her dress is well, almost natty, in tight fitting cloth gown, dark green in color, the coat to match, with a row of brass buttons down the front. Her movements are large and free. Her only weakness is her shoes. They have high, slender French heels on them, and the graceful gravity, besides winning fame in the world of letters. She has a fine head for business, and is very good at calculating royalties.—Atlantic City Cor. Philadelphia Press.

Receptacles for Milk.

Milk should be kept for family use in glass vessels only. Glass pitchers and glass jars can be washed with cold soda solution, prepared as above stated, and the vessels should be filled with clean water, and if necessary should be cleansed after the soda washing with a wet rag and pumice stone and then rinsed. Earthen vessels are apt to give a bad flavor to milk, and tin ones sometimes get rusty.—Good Housekeeping.

Look Out for This Man.

Don't marry the young man who leaves his mother to find her way home as best she can on a dark night, while, without a thought or word of apology to her, he looks after you. You will find, if you wait, the novelty has worn off, he will leave you to go alone as best you can, while he seeks his selfish enjoyment at the club.—Exchange.

Rather Sober Reminders.

A pretty and somewhat romantic little New York widow of 32, who has the appearance of 25 and the freshness of a spring kitten, wears a bracelet made of the six silver coins that closed the sightless eyes of Lincoln's assassin. The engravers embrace the initial letters of the late New York gentlemen.—Exchange.

"A woman once deposited $950 with me," said a receiving teller, "saying that she was very anxious to make it $1,000. Next day she puzzled me by drawing $50 and immediately redepositing it. The mystery was explained when she came in a week or two later to draw the whole sum and was asked in a hatter when we would not give her $1,000."

WOMAN'S HARDER PART.

HER DAILY LIFE CONTRASTED WITH THAT OF HER HUSBAND.

She Never Has Time to Break Down—She Has to Labor from Ten to Sixteen Hours a Day, While the Father Works Eight Hours, or Less—Her Cheerless Life.

It seems to be accepted as a fact that woman in contrast with man is far the weaker. The reasons for it are not quite clear, and perhaps to frequent repetition it owes its greatest force. In the matter of brute strength, certainly to women must be given second place, but when it comes to endurance, which is scarcely separable from strength, in many situations in life she would most assuredly show herself able to bear far heavier burdens than man. Probably nowhere else is this truth as apparent as in the sickroom. There man and woman meet on an equal footing, neither having any advantage. And it is there that she proves that instead of being the weaker she is infinitely the stronger and more enduring.

Let a wife be taken ill, and for twenty-four hours the husband is untiring in his devotion, and very likely he scarcely leaves her bedside. The second day finds him still at his post, but he is beginning to weaken; even the loss of one night's sleep has nearly "done him up." By the third day he is comparatively a wreck, and ready to yield his place as nurse to any one who will fill it.

Not so, however, with the wife when he is ill. Day after day and night after night she hangs over him, never for a moment thinking of intrusting him to the care of another. If she sleeps, it is in her chair by his bedside while he does. She scarcely lies down, and perhaps for weeks and weeks only removes her clothes for a change of linen. And yet she never seems to tire; and, as a matter of fact, many frail women seem actually to gain strength when exposed to the sick room. Where is the world may accept that woman is the weaker, but no physician who has been long in practice will be convinced that such is the case.

MAN AND WIFE COMPARED.

Man compares with woman as does cast iron with steel. He is strong, and yet is comparatively easily shattered, whereas you can bend her, you can put her to tests which would, figuratively speaking, pulverize him, and yet you cannot "break her up." Take her outside of the sick room. She is—at least many married women are—up first in the morning. She builds the fire and gets breakfast ready. Before the table can be "cleared off" her children must be scrubbed, combed, etc., for school. With them out of the house, unless there is a baby in the family—and there almost always is one in the home of every poor, overworked woman—she has a breathing spell. But it cannot be long, for there are the dishes to wash, the kitchen to "tidy," the chamber work to do, and when these and other customary duties are performed it is time to get dinner, that ought to be off the table and "things put away" by 2 or half past 2, and then she has reached her first opportunity to rest.

But she cannot lie down, though she may think she does, for she generally sews until supper time and returns to her sewing after supper. If she has no clothes to make or mend, she is not likely to lay aside her needle until bedtime comes. But this is the routine work of only about one day in the week. Very likely Monday is washing day, and on Tuesday there is the ironing to do. Wednesday is one of the cooking days with almost all women. Thursday is the day we have partially defined, and is called the easy day. Friday the broom must be called into special service, and a general sweeping takes place. Saturday is one of the hardest days in the week, while Sunday—the day of rest for man and beast—finds the wife and mother still on duty, for the greater part of it at least.

WE STYLE WOMEN WEAK.

We have given but a bare idea of the common experiences of about three-fourths of all our women; with them it is work, work, day in and day out, with scarcely a moment which they can call their own; in fact, they work about fifteen hours a day. Husbands, on the other hand, consider even ten hours at bench, at the counter or desk too long for them, and really only feel equal to eight hours a day. Night finds them tired and worn, and the evenings must be spent in recuperating. On half time on Sundays, and Sundays there being absolutely no rest for them to do, they, somehow or other, manage to "pull themselves together" by Monday, so as to step up their work again. The many holidays in the year help them out considerably; so they are enabled to bear the strain.

And we style woman weak, while man is our ideal of strength. Could anything be more absurd? Let the average woman undergo places with her husband, and she would be a widow in a few years. Yet not only in health does woman show her superiority over man in the way of strength and endurance, but in the same in disease. Attacks which man is likely to succumb to are less likely to prove fatal in woman. Perhaps in consumption, as well as any other malady, is the fact apparent. It is safe to say that, take a man and a woman in the early stage of lung disease, and if neglect be of the same severity as the other the woman will outlast the man by many months, and possibly by years.

One case which the writer recalls well illustrates this fact. It was that of a woman who became consumptive nearly twenty years ago. From that time on she had small but frequent hemorrhages. They would last for hours, and her life would soon regain her usual strength. Ten years ago she went with friends to Europe and traveled from place to place for a year. After she returned she failed, and slowly. She often said she was fighting death, and she certainly seemed to be. If ever will power supported a person, it did her. She became scarcely more than a skeleton; she could eat but little and had long been a stranger to a good night's rest. And still she lived on until about three years ago, when the little lung left her broke down, and death, which she had resisted so long, at last conquered. Using a common expression, though not one that is used enough to kill half a dozen men.—Boston Herald.

A Clever Game.

A clever game is called "cross examination." You choose a name from history, romance, politics or art, according as as many letters as you have players. Each player being allotted his letter must now choose another character, the name beginning with his letter. The cross examiner, who has previously been sent out of the room, now returns, and commences at the head of the room the cross examination. He is allowed twenty questions to each player, and must guess from information thus gained the name of the first character thus chosen.—Harper's Bazar.

LIFE DOES NOT COUNT BY YEARS.

Life does not count by years—
The common span that measures the solid sum
Of our existence. Smiles and tears,
And hopes and fears, unbidden come,
To mean a day more than a fleeting hour—
Where pleasure waits there is no call for tears—
To others, writhing 'neath affliction's power,
A single day is lengthened into years.

Life does not count by years—
The pointed brow 'fa youthful look may hold,
If'en while the heart, stung by the cold world's sneers,
Lies in the tortured bosom sore and old.
In this great world of mingled good and ill
Philosophy's clear page reveals the truth
That, view life's stormy problem as we will,
'Tis our surroundings that make age or youth.
—New York Weekly.

DRESSING WELL ON $350 A YEAR.

A Clever Woman Artist Tells How She Manages to Appear in Good Clothes.

I am a woman artist, and with economy make a good living. During the winter season I make money, as I cannot fill my orders as fast as received, but in summer I only work about half the time. I believe in good living, and it costs me $12 per week to pay for my board and washing. Now, with your permission, I want to tell how I manage, as among my friends I have the reputation of being a very well dressed woman, and yet I never spend more than $350 a year on my wardrobe. One woman says: "I can't provide evening gowns." I do. In fact, I try to have clothes fit to wear to any place that I might want to go to, as it must make one very unhappy to have to stay at home because "she has nothing to wear."

I take good care of my clothes, and never buy anything in the extreme fashion, as plain colors wear longer and look better. I never buy early in the season, but late, when good materials can be bought for prices that I can afford. I never buy ready made garments. I never buy but two hats a year—one for winter, one for summer, and always "fix up" last year's hats for everyday wear. I wear black or dark colored dresses every day, and look them over when exposed to the sunlight, and sponge when needed. I make all my dress skirts and every day waists, sewing an hour or two in the evening when I have it to do. The following is a list of how what I have spent, and how, in the last twelve months:

Spring gown of cloth	$12
Spring wrap	7
Umbrella	1
Hats for the year	2
Gloves for the year	2
Boots and low shoes for the year	10
Two dark flannel gowns to paint in	10
Two wash dresses	8
Winter cloth gown and coat	20
Fur cape	12
White evening gown	10
Black cashmere gown	6
Silk gown	40
Underwear, hosiery, etc	30
Fixing over last year's gowns	10
Collars, aprons, ribbons, etc	20
Total	$207

You see I have something left over for next year if I decide to buy any expensive garment. I allow myself $250 a year for clothes, and by keeping them in order and by using my judgment I always have to make a good appearance. I never buy because the stuff is pretty; it must look as if it would wear "like iron" to tempt me. The year I have no old clothes do, except shoes and gloves, and put all my money into a seal coat. Next month I intend to have a new linen gown, and when made it will not cost me more than $20, but I fear it would cost some women $50. The secret of dressing well on little lies in the buying, and in being willing to sew some for one's self. What onepays for the making of a dress will often buy another, and it is every woman's privilege to sew and her duty to know how to sew well.—Cor. New York Evening Sun.

A Railway Toilet.

In the morning try to have three-quarters of an hour for the toilet, and this may be secured by either rising before the other women or lying until they are through. Slip on a loose wrapper and under-clothes, and flannel wrapper over all, carrying the dress and underskirts across the arm, and the satchel in the other hand. Spread the satchel wide, and take out the sponge in its oil silk bag, the soap and tooth brush in their traveling boxes, and unroll the bag that holds the hair brooms, brushes and comb, hairpins and and pins. Brush the dress and skirts well, and hang them on the hooks, out of the way.

Brush the hair smartly to remove the dust, and arrange it compactly for the day, putting away in its place each toilet article as it is finished with. Lay the freshened towels on the floor, and one's own larger ones near at hand. From the wicker covered cologne bottle pour a generous quantity into the bowl, and, kneeling, bathe, using all clothes out of the way, stand on the towels and take a sponge bath from head to foot. The cologne absolutely cleanses away all dust, and the delightful feeling resulting from such a bath will make all the difference between a pleasant and an unpleasant day. Then carefully and completely, and, after laying everything away in the satchel, do not fail to wipe off the wash stand and lay the wet towels out of the way, so that no one's sensitive eye may find the place orderly and clean.—Harper's Bazar.

Versatility in Old Time Actresses.

We had to make up our minds very much more quickly, in the matter of costumes, when I was with Mrs. F. B. Conway's company in Brooklyn. We changed the bill three times a week, except when stars came along with their repertoires. Plans didn't carry their own costumes with them, and the parts would be given us on Thursday to be perfect in and play them on the following Monday. I had a remarkable line of business then, playing old women and responsible." It simply meant doing anything useful, and I did it, from dodging and dancing an Irish jig in knee breeches to corking my face and playing the King of Abyssinia in Brougham's burlesque of "Much Ado About a Merchant of Venice," imitating an "Italian" in a big nigger shoes. And when the chambermaid was ill I studied and played her part; in fact, I would have gone on for anything, from Hamlet to Little Lord Swaddlekins. —Annie Yeamans.

Danger In Benzine.

Benzine is extensively used for cleaning furniture, and housewives should make note of the terrible accident from its use reported from Fredericton, N. B. Benzine is to be used at all—and it is probably impossible to rule it out altogether—the windows should be opened until it has all evaporated, and care be taken to have no fire about. The vapors are sometimes inhaled in the kitchen range, a considerable distance away from the parlor where the benzine is being used. It is the invisible vapor which causes the mischief usually, for people who are careful enough with the fluid itself sometimes forget that when exposed it gives off vapors that spread all through the house and may be explosive. —Philadelphia Ledger.

ENTERTAINMENT AND INSTRUCTION FOR BRIGHT BOYS AND GIRLS.

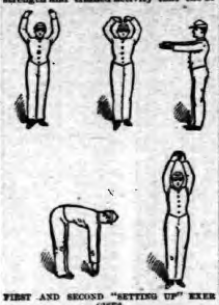
Four Simple Motions to Which the West Point Cadet Owes a Certain Pleasing Grace of Carriage and Look of Unusual Suppleness and Strength of Body.

There is a certain amount of grace in the young fellows who are receiving their education at West Point—an easy carriage, a suppleness of body, a pleasing development of the chest and a manly squareness of the shoulders—an appearance of athletic strength and trained activity that the ordinary stripling does not possess. It might be supposed that all this was due to an elaborately equipped gymnasium; but Lieut. William H. Wassell has recently affirmed that the physical excellence of the cadet is not due to his gymnasium practice. Lieut. Wassell describes in The Chicago Inter-Ocean four simple exercises, hardly more evident than ordinary calisthenics, on which he says the cadet is built.

These "setting up" exercises, as they are called, are excellently taught at the mill they positively shattered, accomplish splendid results. All exercise to be beneficial must be regular. Fifteen minutes devoted to physical development regularly every day, is better than three hours of exercise taken once a week.

The drawings illustrating these four "setting up" exercises are detailed sufficiently to need very little explanation. In the first (drawing at right of top row) the arms are raised horizontally, the palms of the hands downward, the little fingers touching side by side. Then the arms are raised above the head, the elbows bent until the tips of the fingers, turned out to nail, touch the head. The arms are then straightened out and let fall downward, and to the rear, the object being to bring the shoulder blades together.

In the second the arms are raised vertically above the head, the thumbs locking, right thumb in front. Then the arms are lowered until the finger tips touch the ground, care being taken to keep the knee stiff and firm.



FIRST AND SECOND "SETTING UP" EXERCISES.

THIRD AND FOURTH SETTING UP EXERCISES.

In the third the hands are clapped first in front of the body and then behind it, the object being to throw out the chest and develop its weak points.

In the fourth the arms are raised horizontally at the sides, palms of the hands up. With the shoulders as an axis the hands are then made to describe a small circle upward and to the rear.

All these may seem very easy and of doubtful results, but if practiced carefully and conscientiously they cannot fail to assist in the development of a growing boy.

A Polite Kitty.

Little Miss Rose is a person who finds it easy to interpret most things according to her own advantage, says Youth's Companion. One day she was holding the kitten and asking her little playmate various questions, to none of which had she thought to obtained an answer.

"Who gives you milk, kitty?" inquired Rose. Kitty struggled a little to get down, but made no reply.

"Do you love me, kitty?"

No answer.

"Who is the nicest little girl in the world?"

"Mew!" cried kitty making a desperate effort to escape.

"There! isn't she polite?" asked Rose, triumphantly. "She said 'You!'"

A Boy's Composition on Girls.

Girls are very stuck up and dignified in their ways and don't behave themselves. They think more of dress than anything. They like to play with dolls and rags. They cry if they see a cow in the far distance, and are afraid of a mouse. They stay at home all the time and go to church on Sunday. They are always making fun of boy's hands, and they say how "dirty." They can't play marbles. I pity them, poor things, they make fun of boys and then turn round and love them. I don't believe they ever killed a cat or anything. They look out every night for a star, and it is the most lovely! There is one thing I have not told, and that is they always know their lessons better than boys.—Industrial School Gem.

The Saucer Garden.

Did you ever attempt to make a garden in the confined space of an ordinary saucer? Well, perhaps you have, and failed to try it. This is how it may be done. Place your saucer in a sunny window; put in it a piece of sponge or some white cotton, then sprinkle over that about a teaspoonful of whole flaxseed, and fill up the saucer with water. All the care this garden will need is to fill itself occasionally. After a few days you will find your seeds sprouting; and before very long you will have a flourishing green spot in your room.

CLIPPINGS FROM EXCHANGES.

Burglars on Monday night tried to crack the safe in Philip Schauble's hotel, opposite the Elizabethport station on the Central Railroad. The thieves effected an entrance by crawling through the fanlight of the front door and then robbed the safe drawer of $211. They went at it to work on the safe, which contained considerable money. They were probably scared away while at work.

Vice Chancellor Van Fleet yesterday dismissed an order to be made committing John Farrell, a member of the New York League football team, to jail for contempt in violating an injunction issued by the court restraining him from injuring property belonging to his wife. Farrell is already in jail, having been committed by a police justice for malicious mischief.

DRESS REFORM.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH WELL FILLED DESPITE THE WEATHER.

Mrs. C. Holbrook Smith's Lecture to the Ladies, Pronounced Very Interesting and Instructive.—A Bi-Divided Skirt Gains Converts Throughout the Country.

The lecture on Artistic dress by Mrs. C. Holbrook Smith on Friday afternoon was a treat long to be remembered and drew together a very fine audience, which filled the Congregational church. It was perhaps fortunate that the afternoon was threatening, or the church would not have accommodated those who had expected to attend. Mrs. Smith is a very pleasing speaker and as she is well-known in White Cross, temperance, and philanthropic circles, the ladies hope to have her again upon some subject which has commanded her study in the past years.

Her views of our dependence upon physical health and vigor, and how the higher circles of society are permitting themselves to become blind slaves to such passing caprices of fashion, not thinking of the needs of our country.

An artist who would paint such forms upon canvas as we see them upon the streets, with waists and shoulders forming a triangle, would be laughed to scorn. Nature delights in curves, and we compress and deform until all grace and health are completely destroyed, the brain weakened and our children defrauded of their freedom and bloom by our unthinking folly. Healthful dressing demands equal weight upon all parts of the body, and our garments should depend from the shoulders, not from the hips. The first garment worn should be the union suit, the second the combination, third the divided skirt, and fourth the corset. All bands and ligatures that impede circulation should be abolished, corset steels and bodies boned done away with forever, that our lungs and diaphragm may work unrestricted and our brains not with force and vigor. The costumes shown were both artistic and sensible, made upon the princess gown form, fitted in at the waist, and then the material falling in graceful flowing lines to the feet. Each one had its own place. The dainty pink school-girl's dress was particularly admired, and the wearer could step from the school directly to the gymnasium, free to use every muscle at will. The business costume was made of brown, velvet and cashmere, complete with many pockets hidden in the points of belt and vest, under the velvet fronts.

The bicycle costume which was pronounced a most useful dress, the division being perfectly concealed under the plaits, and making it possible for a lady to mount her wheel and move with unrestricted freedom and grace. Many points called one of our own ladies to the audience to illustrate made with a division intended for a tricycle, which adapted itself perfectly on the wheel as well as in the drawing room. The lecture was so pleasing that it was decided to request Mrs. Smith to form a class in physical culture, which consists of a series of demonstration lectures upon correct methods, especially for schoolgirls and delicate ladies, and the six lessons will continue through this and next week, commencing at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, in the parlors of the Congregational church. All are invited to avail of many of these interested in improving their physical conditions. It is a privilege to listen to a lady so well fitted to impart the necessary instruction upon this vital subject, and it is hoped our thoughtful mothers will avail themselves of this course.

The class is to receive its second lesson tomorrow, at the same hour.

To Install Their Pastor.

On Friday evening next the Rev. Robert Clark will be installed as pastor of the Unitarian church in this city. The ceremonies will begin at 7:45 o'clock and will be held in Seminary Hall. The celebrated orator, the Rev. Edward Everett Hale, D. D., will preach the sermon on the occasion. The Rev. Robert Colyer and other prominent clergymen will be present and assist in the ceremonies. The public are invited.

To Aid the House.

Several Bands of Mercy of this city gave an entertainment in Reform Hall last evening. It consisted of music, singing, recitations, etc. No admission fee was charged, but the proceeds of an effort at a collection was taken up for the benefit of the Children's Home. The children of the Home took part in the entertainment.

DOINGS AT WASHINGTON

THE GREAT QUESTION OF "WHO WILL BE THE NEXT PRESIDENT?"

Prominent Men Named.—The Republican Platform About as Before.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 11 (Special)

The prominent men of both political parties are now so completely absorbed in the matters of the present moment that they have entirely overlooked the succession to the presidency. Of course the fellows that want to get there have it in mind morning, noon and night. It is pretty well understood that Mr. Harrison is not to be a candidate for a second presidential term, that he would not willingly succeed himself, if the Republican party are desirous of such a move on his part. Just how the people feel toward the occupant of the White House a man stationed here finds it hard to determine. At times he can see only part a reflected sentiment, as expressed by those coming to the city, and this is more or less based either for or against the present president. Those who had, or confidently expect to have, favors from the administration have their utterances tinctured with praise which comes from the gratitude of the heart rather than the sober judgment of the mind, and the people who failed to get what they were after, well it is hardly human that they should think well of the government. These are the two classes of visitors, then, that the newspaper man encounters in Washington, one enthusiastically glad and the other enthusiastically mad over the administration, but there is still another source of supply and this comes from the congressmen and other public officials, who are constantly feeling the peoples pulse, as a physician does that of his patient, keenly alive to any changes in its conditions, but dubious always about making an honest diagnosis of the symptoms, especially for pub'lication. It is this dread of publicity of views honestly held but dishonestly denied, in some instances, that makes it hazardous to quote a public man in his own name, unless you have parties of undoubted sincerity skillfully concealed where they can not only hear every word spoken, but with facilities to jot down a stenographic report of the whole interview. Public men have no more hesitancy about calling a newspaper man a liar than congressmen in their legislative intercourse with each other. The moment a difference of opinion is, though, to come back to the original question, which Harrison has made a pretty fair president and that, nothing to mar the future, his administration may be called a success. This, of course, is the foundation upon which the "boom" is to be started, but what will have more or less to do with his future political prospects. It is true judging by current expressions, he is a little too good for some people, and not good enough for others, but the most consistent opinion, as the boys say, is that "he'll pass." As it is the most unsafe thing with public men nowadays to seek a second term as a vindication or endorsement of their official career, and not to greatly any personal ambition or individual enjoyment who ever, why it may be declared that Mr. Harrison is in the "ring."

Who will be the other competitors is the most interesting question!

At least one head is prominently stuck up through the surrounding heads, and that heads up on the shoulders of the man who guides and rules the destinies of the House of Representatives at the present time. The friends of genial, brave, brilliant Tom Reed are naturally opposed to any avowal of his candidacy, but it will be found when the convention year rolls around that he is "in the heads of his friends," having meanwhile, human like, put in some pretty good work talking blower in his own support. Mr. Kinley at least from present appearances, will be in retirement, and a man as a rule, out of official life is as good as dead politically. The people don't go bunting around barnyards any more for Christmas. And as for the order statesman, men like Blaine, and Sherman what of them? While getting old in years they are still young in ambition, and neither has quite given up the expectancy of falling heir, through a Republican landslide, to the presidential chair. Allison has not been mentioned, nor a host of others, but the fact is the Republican party carries a full stock of the finest quality and can and work up a first-class candidate at a moments notice taking the material therefore from any section of the country it desires.

From present prospects the Senate finance committee will bring an essentially different tariff bill from that passed by the house. It will, of course, have protection for its basis, but it will be framed on lines of protection as a principle and will not be open to the accusation of too much favoritism toward chosen industries. In other words, protection to American industries will be its prevailing principle, but it will be moderated by the sliding scale requirements of manufacturers coupled with substantial justice to all other classes of consumers. The committee are going over the bill very carefully, and even though some congressmen want to get home they are not going to be hurried, and individual members say that they will take all the time necessary for a perfect consideration of the subject, even if it keeps Congress in session until cold weather.

The Senate committee on commerce have settled down to a regular examination of the river and harbor bill as passed by the house, and it will not be long before it is reported to the Senate, as the committee has, in fact, but inefficiently, kept up with the house in the investigation of its provisions. As the Senate must be held for the consideration of the bill the opportunity will be given to the friends of the river and harbor bill, but it was undoubtedly in serious jeopardy at one time. Its friends are now at work with the president to circumvent and defeat it at the last moment through the interposition of a veto.

Angry (!) at The News' Criticisms of His Poem.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—I sent you a poem last week and asked you to publish it in your paper. You declined, and yet printed it to me with the cooling reply that I was no poet, and that you "could turn out better poetry out of a sausage machine." Now, I won't be crushed, and I propose to show up your attempt to throttle budding genius. Publish this and read the following poem in your advertising column and charge me your full advertising rates.

THE POEM.

I stood upon the ocean's sandy beach.
And with a reed I wrote upon the sand these words:
"Agnes, I love thee!"
But the winds came and the waves rolled mountains high,
And blotted out the fair impression.
And waves, treacherous maid, fragile reed!
No longer will I trust to thee.
But from the highest mountain peak I'll pluck the tallest pine,
And, dipping in the crater of Vesuvius, with it I will write
Upon the high and burnished heavens these tender words:
"Rogers Bros. are holding the biggest low prices sale of shoes ever held in Plainfield. They are now offering boots and shoes so low that four shoppers would almost take your breath away."
And we defy you to see any dog-gone wave we want that out.

Don't miss this bargain. Cut this out and bring it to us, for it is worth 25 cents to you. For every purchase of $5 worth at one time, if you will bring this adv. to us we will allow you a reduction of 25 cents. If you want $15 worth of shoes or repairing or both secure five of these adv's and we will allow you $1.25 for them. This will hold good until July 1st. Remember, we carry a full line of the best shoes that can be had in all widths and styles at low prices, and do fine repairing. ROGERS BROS., successors to D. F. Randolph, 13 West Front street.

"Trust" is the word which capital has made its shibboleth. It is met on the part of labor by another word no less magical, and that is "federation."

If the farmers of all the agricultural organizations and temperance people of all shades of opinion bury their differences and cast their political fortunes together, and join hands together through thick and thin this fall, there will be music in the air. In Illinois the farmers have already made overtures to the Prohibitionists.

Reader, be thankful that you are not a senator. The United States senate committee has taken up the house tariff bill. They are going to labor on it through June. The claims of industries that are injured by it will have hearings through the month of leafy June. But the committee really think they will have the bill ready for submission to the senate by July. Then the senate will take its turn at it. Through July and August senatorial brains will fry over that tariff bill. All who have the slightest interest in a re-election will need to make great speeches about it. But when it is finally be passed or rejected? Go ask the winds.

Those Census Questions.

About this time the census enumerator is deep in his listings. He will be gently laying before his victims a programme including queries whether they are afflicted with chronic or hereditary diseases; whether they are crippled, idiotic or crazy; whether they own the house they live in, and if it is mortgaged. These questions would be valuable contributions to sociology and economic science if truthful answers could be obtained to them. But public opinion has decided that they are entirely private questions and that the government has no right to ask them. Therefore the general sentiment is against answering them. It is a truism that when public sentiment is opposed to a law it cannot be enforced. Therefore it is not at all likely that these census questions will be generally answered.

Superintendent of the Census Porter is aware of this, and has provided gracefully for the emergency. His way out of it does him the greatest credit. Superintendent Porter directs the enumerators in no case to attempt to procure enforced replies. Where they are not given voluntarily, the enumerator is simply to mark on the blanks at the proper place, "Refused to answer," and forward the list to Washington, leaving government to fight it out with the refractory, which of course it will not attempt to do.

Where there is refusal to answer it will, however, be reasonable to infer that the reply would have been affirmative. When it comes to that, though, there is probably not one person in a million who has not some chronic ailment. Everybody past the age of twenty has either dyspepsia, rheumatism, or liver trouble or weak eyesight. A bad temper is a chronic ailment of the worst order.

German and English Africa.

Emperor William holds a banquet on Queen Victoria's birthday, to show his good will to England, and Germany shows her teeth between a smile and a snarl, and exclaims: "Oh, Ja! Potztausend! but we good friends are." The British jingo shows his teeth in the same way and exclaims: "Blast your bloody eyes, what good friends we are!"

Meantime the situation in Africa grows more serious and complicated. Stanley, with all the power of sarcasm, of taunting and exhortation he is master of, is urging England not to sit by tamely and see every foot of land she has gained in Africa and sacrifice the interests of thousands of her best citizens in that continent. In alluding to the ever increasing demands of Germany, Stanley writes, indirectly, to the whole British nation:

Still their cry is, "Give! Give!" If you think they are better adapted than the English to civilize, let nothing hold you heartedly. Yield all, including Egypt; offer a word of protest shall you hear from me. Excessive amiability must be a characteristic of the nation that can endure, like other diseases, grows till it ends in chronic senility.

Meantime America looks on at this husband and bear fight with the utmost serenity. If the sentiment in favor of resisting the encroachments of Germany should become strong enough in England it might quickly drive the present Tory government from power and place the Liberals on top very suddenly. In case of a war between England and Germany the sentiment in the United States would be very much divided. Citizens of German and Irish descent would favor Germany, and for once the German and Irish Americans would find themselves on the same side of the question.

On the other hand, citizens of English descent and those whose families have been in this country long enough to forget that they ever had any other mother tongue than English, would undoubtedly sympathize with Great Britain. Which class would be the larger it is hard to say.

MR. TELLER ON SILVER.

He Answers Several Statements of Senator Sherman.

CIRCULATION VS. POPULATION.

The Colorado Senator Denies That the One Has Increased With the Other. He Wants the Honest Dollar Restored to Its Place—The Republican Platform.

WASHINGTON, June 11.—In the senate debate on the silver bill was resumed. Mr. Reagan questioned the use of retaining a hundred millions of gold in the treasury while there was a dearth of currency felt, especially in the rural districts. His opinion was that to reserve of fifty millions would be all sufficient, and he intended to offer an amendment carrying out that idea.

Not a Fiat Money Man.

Mr. Teller said that the senator had not put the figure high enough. It had cost $60,000,000, calculating the interest at 4 per cent. for eleven and one-half years. He went on to say that he was not a fiat money man. He believed that gold and silver were made (as Mr. Sherman had said the other day) by the Almighty for money; that they were intended to stay as they did according of either the one or the other could not be afforded. But if there could be only one money metal, then he asserted that the interests of the United States and the interests of the world demanded that it should be silver.

A Reply to Senator Sherman.

In reply to statements made in Mr. Sherman's recent speech, Mr. Teller said that there never was an hour previous to 1873 when the gold dollar was the unit of value in this country. The silver dollar was the unit of value up to the year 1873. Another point in Mr. Sherman's speech which Mr. Teller disputed and denied was that the increase of circulation had kept pace with the increase of population. As to the statement by Mr. Sherman and others that the supporters of the bill wanted a cheap dollar, Mr. Teller said that it was a species of demagogy to which he could not listen in the senate. They wanted the honest dollar restored—the dollar that had been stricken down without the will of the people—and without their knowledge.

The Demonetization of Silver.

If the purpose could be accomplished for which Mr. Sherman and his associates at home and abroad were trying, if there could complete the demonetization of silver (which would be done effectually if the senate should pass the house senate bill) they would add 30 per cent. to the tax every public and private debt, and every man would be compelled to make 60 per cent. more effort, 60 per cent. more sacrifice, to pay his debts than he would have had to make before 1873.

A Slap at the Platform.

Mr. Teller went on to speak of the silver plank in the Republican national platform, and said that if he had supposed it to be more clear-cut than the Republican ticket would not have had such support from him, and would not have got the great majority that it did in the state of Colorado.

Mr. Blair remarked that Mr. Teller felt in relation to that plank in the platform just as he (Mr. Blair) felt in relation to the educational plank.

Mr. Stewart—Does the senator think it right that any man should do that.

Mr. Blair—No, and the party that does it is certain to be blanked. (Laughter.)

Teller not Wall Street.

Mr. Teller went on to say that there was no feeling favorable to bi-metallism in high places and would not be while Wall street could influence political parties. He remembered a case of a president (Mr. Cleveland) addressing a crowd of people in Wall street and saying that he saw before him the representatives of the great interests of the country. The fact was (Mr. Teller said) that he did not see before him a single man who had ever done an honest day's work, ever produced an article of commerce, or ever promoted the industrial pursuits of the country.

Mr. Teller declared that no matter where the Republican party or himself should be left his vote should be given for that measure which would unloose the burden put upon the debtors of the country, and do it without detriment to the creditors.

Mr. Evarts gave notice that he would speak on the silver bill Thursday. The bill will be voted over. The conference report on the bill for a public building at New London, Conn., (costing $75,000) was agreed to.

The president of the senate laid before that body a petition of the West Africa Steamship company of New Orleans asking an appropriation of $500,000 to establish a line of mail steamers between New Orleans and the west coast of Africa.

To Amend the Bigamy Law.

Mr. Edmunds introduced a bill to amend the law relating to bigamy by the addition of these words: "Any of the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled an act to amend section 5,353 of the revised statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, approved March 3d, 1887,' as, before or since the taking effect of such act in respect of which funds and property is shall acquire, receive in no lawful private right, shall be devoted to the use and benefit of public common schools in the territory of Utah, and the secretary of the interior shall take and receive the same and dispose thereof, for the use of the aforesaid in such manner as shall seem to him, with the approval of the president, to be most, and the supreme court judges of said territory is hereby invested with power and authority to make all necessary and proper orders and decrees for the purpose hereinbefore mentioned."

Agreed on Pension Bills.

WASHINGTON, June 11.—The conferees of the senate and house on the general pension bills have reached an agreement. The house conferees receded from their stand for the service pension features, while the conferees on the part of the senate agreed to allow the dependent pension clause to remain in the bill. The bill practically a disability pension measure. It extends greatly the present pension laws.

In the House.

WASHINGTON, June 11.—The house passed the postoffice appropriation bill.

They Urged Governor Abbett.

TRENTON, N. J., June 11.—Governor Abbett received a delegation of Elizabeth people, who urged him to veto the horse racing bill. Among those who spoke were Rev. Dr. McAllister, of the Trinity Episcopalian church; the Rev. Dr. Morse, of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian church; Rev. John T. Kerr, of the Third Presbyterian church, and H. H. Isham, a large real estate owner.

The Company Will Have a Capital of $25,000,000.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11.—Wharton Barker has announced that the undertaking which he began last December of organizing a banking company under the English liability act had been consummated. The new company will have a capital of $25,000,000, only one-half of which is to be called in now. Mr. Peirpil he is about in London, Paris, Berlin and Philadelphia.

The American directors are Wharton Barker, who organized the Investment Company of Philadelphia and the Pittsburg Company of Pennsylvania; E. P. Wilbert, president of the Lehigh Valley railroad; Thomas M. Dug, vice president of the Baltimore and Ohio; George De B. Keim, president of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron company; Henry C. Gibson, of Gibson, Peacock & Co.; John H. Converse, of the Baldwin Locomotive works; William Brockie, president of the Investment Company of Philadelphia; Charlemagne Tow, vice president of the Belmont & Dougherty, and Simon B. Fleischer.

TWO WERE KILLED.

Fatal Collision on the St. Louis, Keokuk and Northwestern.

HANNIBAL, Mo., June 11.—A construction train collided with a freight train on the St. L. K. & N. W. road, Newton curve about twelve miles south of here and twelve cars were wrecked. The killed were: Nelson, Berry, fireman; scalded to death. Taylor, Arthur, fireman; scalded to death. The injured are:

Fitzpatrick, ——, engineer; slightly injured by jumping.

Lemons, Omar, conductor; injured internally.

Tucker, ——, brakeman; seriously hurt.

An error of train Dispatcher Davidson, said to be his first in twelve years, caused the wreck. He at once resigned.

Bids for the New War Ships.

WASHINGTON, June 11.— Proposals to build the three new vessels provided for by congress were opened at the navy department this morning. The bids were as follows: The Union Iron Works of San Francisco, according to the department's plans and specifications, $3,130,000, and according to their own plans, $2,750,000; William Cramp & Son, Philadelphia, on department plans, $3,150,000; their own plans, $2,965,000. The Risdon Iron and Locomotive works of San Francisco made only one bid, that on department's plan, at $3,450,000. Only one bid was received for the building of the protective cruiser No. 6, the limit being $1,500,000. The Union Iron Works of San Francisco propose to build the vessel on the department's plans and specifications for $1,750,000, and on their own plan for $1,700,000. For the gunnitine the limit of government's limit for which is $360,000, two bids were received. J. W. Wheeler & Co., of West Troy, N. Y., will build the vessel on the department's plans for $345,000, and Samuel L. Moore, Sons & Co., Elizabeth, N. J., on the department's plans for $350,000. Bethlehem company offered a bid for this vessel on their own plan.

The Bar Mills' Scale.

PITTSBURG, Pa., June 11.—The Amalgamated association considered the scale governing bar mills. The base, seventy cents per ton on a two cent card, was reaffirmed. The qualifying clauses on extras were then taken up for discussion. The price for puddling in eastern mills has been advanced from $5.50 to $6 per ton. This means that the eastern workers will demand a general increase of pay approximating 15 per cent. The position taken by the Amalgamated association is that the raw materials do not cost 30 per cent. more than is paid by western manufacturers, yet the east has enjoyed the advantage of 30 per cent. in its favor for years. There are about 135 mills in the east. There seems to exist a feeling that the eastern manufacturers will resist the payment of the proposed advance.

Two More Goulds Arrested.

ALBANY, June 11.—Both A. Gould and Albert L. Gould, brothers of the two other bank conspirators, were arrested last night upon a similar charge, making four brothers and a brother-in-law now in custody. Albert Gould was bailed in less than twenty minutes by his father-in-law, a wealthy maister. Recorder Gould is yet in custody, having been unable to obtain bonds. Albert's bond is in the sum of $10,000 and security amounting to $20,000. It is said the bank books are nearly compiled and that three more arrests will be made. Bank Examiner States authoritie. They are Edward L. Taylor, Theo Ramsdell, Jr., and Miss Elise Engel.

A Bold Diamond Robbery in Chicago.

After looking at them a few minutes by his father-in-law, a wealthy maister. Recorder Gould is yet in custody, having been unable to obtain bonds. OUTLAW BURROWS'S WORK

An Express Messenger Used as a Target.

TORTURED BY TRAIN ROBBERS.

Six Masked Bandits Wreck an Express Train in Arkansas and Secure About $10,000—Passengers Intimidated with Winchesters—Hunting the Miscreants.

TEXARKANA, Ark., June 11.—Express train No. 1, of the St. Louis, Arkansas and Texas railroad, was wrecked by six masked robbers two miles south of here at 12 o'clock. The train was ditched at Haywood's switch by throwing the switch. The engine, tender and express cars left the track, and an unknown tramp who was stealing a ride in front of the express car was instantly killed.

A Fight with the Messenger.

The robbers attacked the express car, but the messenger repulsed them with a volley from his Winchester, but hit none of the robbers. They returned the fire with vigor and finally after threats of cremating the messenger in the car he surrendered. The safe was opened and the robbers secured about $10,000. Neolin, the express messenger, and the fireman and engineer were taken in the woods by the robbers and tied to trees.

Tortured in Revenge.

They then shot the messenger in the hand, the arm, and shot one of his ears off to revenge themselves for his resistance, but the messenger still refused to give them ever resisted another train robber. All this time the passengers were prevented from giving any assistance by one of the robbers who guarded them with a Winchester. After the robbers rode off it was an hour before the frightened passengers rescued the train men and gave the alarm.

More of Train Robbery Work.

Two posses are now hunting the robbers, but no trace of them has been found. The leader of the gang is supposed to be Rube Burrows.

Six Hours the Start.

The bandits had just six hours' start of the sheriff and his posse, who are now out hunting for the robbers, but no trace of them has been found. The reason why the leader of the gang is supposed to be the celebrated Rube Burrows is because this particular band has spared hundreds of dollars in hunting him, and he has threatened to be revenged.

A large reward will be offered by the express company for the capture of the robbers.

Stopped by a Winchester.

When the train went into the ditch Conductor A. B. Snoyer ran forward to ascertain the cause. He was ordered to halt. He flashed a lantern on the man who gave the command, only to find a Winchester leveled at his head. The conductor was very quiet after he learned the cause of the trouble.

A FUNNEL SHAPED CLOUD

The Destruction It Caused in an Illinois Town.

A GREAT DISASTER REPORTED.

The Town of Channahon Swept by a Cyclone—The Roaring of the Wind Was Heard Four Miles—A Large Number of Persons Killed.

JOLIET, Ill., June 11.—A funnel shaped cloud passed through the village of Channahon at 9 o'clock last night doing immense damage and killing and injuring. It is understood, quite a number of people. Channahon is a town of about 1,000 persons nine miles south of Joliet, with no railroad or telegraph facilities.

Heard Four Miles.

A telephone message says the roaring of the cyclone could be heard four miles away, but the people were too frightened to think of aid to the sufferers. A large area of country was devastated. Reports indicate that the list of killed and wounded will be large.

Rescuers have been sent from here to relieve their sufferings.

Very Meager Details.

From the meager information at hand it seems that most of the damage done by the storm was in the country around Channahon and that the majority of the casualties occurred outside the town.

Although only ten miles from here, there is little hope of getting anything definite from there, owing to the bad condition of the roads.

A Great Disaster.

While it is believed that the reports so far received are exaggerated the belief is prevalent that a great disaster has occurred.

The General Athletic Championship.

NEW YORK, June 11.—The competition for the individual general athletic championship for the year 1890 commenced on the grounds of the Staten Island Athletic club. E. G. Abbott, Corinthian Athletic club; M. O. O'Sullivan, Pastime Athletic club; Jordan, New York Athletic club, and J. C. Deversaux, Manhattan Athletic club, were the only contestants. The programme contained ten events with a standard for each. The 100 yards run was won by Deversaux, Jordan, second; O'Sullivan, third—time, 11 seconds. Abbott was disqualified for not reaching the mark. O'Sullivan put the 16 pound shot 38 feet 3 inches. The others were disqualified. Jordan won the running high jump by clearing 5 feet 7 inches; O'Sullivan was second and Deversaux third. Abbott failed to qualify for the third time and therefore was disqualified from further competition. In the 120 yards walk there were but two competitors, Jordan and Deversaux. The former won in 4:58 1-5. Deversaux did not qualify. O'Sullivan put the 16 pound hammer 88 feet 7 inches. Deversaux disqualified for this event, which made three failures on his part, thus debarring him. This left only O'Sullivan and Jordan to compete. Jordan won the pole vault with 8 feet 6 inches and then the 120 yards hurdle race in 19 seconds. O'Sullivan threw the 56 pound weight 22 feet, winning that event. In the running broad jump Jordon won with a leap of 19 feet 1 inch. He also won the one mile running race and was declared the champion amateur athlete of the United States. Jordan scored 41 points to O'Sullivan's 30.

The Stamford Election Case.

STAMFORD, Conn., June 11.—The decision in the contested Stamford election case was rendered by Judge Penn in the superior court. The trouble arose as the spring borough election when it was claimed that a number of residents voted illegally. The matter was brought to the superior court, and another election was held on April 14. At this election also there was trouble, and the matter was brought to the superior court and strenuously contested by each side. Alexander West was the Republican candidate for the office of burgess, and Andrew G. Bell the Democratic candidate. Judge Penn, in his decision, finds that West, the Republican candidate, is entitled to the office.

Exercises at Princeton College.

PRINCETON, N. J., June 11.—The newly made civil engineers read their theses yesterday, and Professor Libbey gave a microscopic exhibition of the work done in his department. The Arnold Guyot memorial tablets was unveiled at 11 a. m. and at 12 o'clock Alumni hall was laid in place. The next exercise was the laying of the corner stone of Clio and Whig hall. In the evening the Lyzne debate and the sophomore reception took place. Mrs. Susan Brown has given $100,000 to build another dormitory, which will be called "The David Brown Hall," in memory of the woman who cut the Calednian games.

Her Skull Was Fractured.

OSWEGO, N. Y., June 11.—A spirited horse attached to a buggy containing Miss Belle Mitchell, daughter of Mayor Mitchell, and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Edward Mitchell, became frightened and ran away, and in turning a corner the vehicle was upset, throwing the ladies out. Miss Mitchell's head struck a curbstone, and her skull was fractured. She cannot survive. Mrs. Mitchell was badly but not fatally injured. Miss Mitchell was to have been married to Dr. Raney, of Erie, Pa. Mrs. Mitchell had just returned from her wedding trip.

Ex-Alderman Pearson's Condition.

NEW YORK, June 11.—Ex-Alderman James Pearson, who was a member of the New York city board of aldermen in 1884, lies at St. Francis' hospital, Jersey City, in a very critical condition. When he was carried to the hospital after being struck by the Erie locomotive Monday night it was found that one arm and several ribs were broken, and that he had sustained severe internal injuries. The arm was amputated yesterday. There are small hopes of his recovery.

William O'Brien Married.

When he did it was too late. The child ran to a stream close by and threw herself into it. Some men were passing and they arrived just in time to save the life of the boy, whose heroism also caught fire in his efforts to save his sister.

For a National Election Law.

WASHINGTON, June 11.—The Republican caucus of the house considered the Lodge and Rowell national election bills last night. Cheatham, the colored member from North Carolina, spoke in favor of the Lodge bill. A resolution was agreed to providing that the bill be referred to the caucus committee on elections to report back to another caucus a bill embracing the features outlined by the speaker.

To Be Sent Before Examiner.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., June 11.—Judge Fish has fixed the time for the execution by electricity of Joseph Chapleau for the week beginning July 21. When Chapleau was convicted last January the execution was fixed for the third week in March, but a motion before the court of appeals for a new trial acted as a stay. The motion was denied and the prisoner was brought here from Clinton prison for resentence. Chaplaau killed Irwin Tabor, a neighbor, with a stake in January, 1889. He is said to be a cousin to Premier Chapleau, of the Canadian government and a college graduate. He was formerly a soldier in the regular army, and was stationed here. In all probability he will have the unenviable notoriety of being the first man to be legally killed by electricity.

A Bloody Fight Over a Girl.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 11.—Harry McBride and Frank Larue, two waiters, quarreled over a girl. After a while they agreed to adjourn to the Golden Gate club and fight with three ounce gloves. A referee and seconds were selected and twelve rounds were fought. At the end of the twelfth, while Larue had not a mark, McBride was unconscious and blood was pouring from his ears, nose and mouth, and his face and body were terribly bruised and lacerated. A physician was called, who said a blood vessel was broken in McBride's head and that he would probably die. Larue has been arrested, and will go to work in one of the local shoe factories. He has been a leader in the organization of the union, and to him was due much of the success the last winter's great strike. In his letter of resignation Mr. Moulton says that his reasons for withdrawing from the national executive board are of a private nature.

THE TEXAN VOLUNTEER

HEROIC ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE TEXAN-AMERICANS.

Services of Commodore Moore to the Texan Republic—Sacrificing Rank and Fortune to Battle for the Lone Star Flag—The Founders of an Empire.

[Copyright by American Press Association.]

HIS republic of Texas, when it first took shape, had no naval armament and leaned upon the mercenary support of adventurers, smugglers and pirates —all who fought where there was the most booty. In 1835, the cabinet looked around for a seaman to organize and command a fleet of war. The choice fell upon Edward Ward Moore, a young Virginian, 25 years of age, at that time a fleet commander in the United States service. He had been engaged in wastern explorations and had won distinction in West Indian waters battling with the pirates; he was a gentleman of family and fortune and moreover a warm friend of Texas and her ambitious people. The Texan government invested him with the rank of commodore, and he resigned from the United States navy to join his fortunes to the Lone Star republic.

The population of Texas was less than 40,000, and her resources had been drained by repeated conflicts with the Mexican and Indian enemies who gave the colonists no peace. Moore pledged his private fortune, which for those days was large, and added by the credit which his conduct secured for the new state, procured a small fleet and stationed it off the coast.

The United States acknowledged Texas' independence in 1837, France in 1839, and a year later England, Holland and Belgium. Meanwhile the murderous Comanches and other savages on the northern borders kept up a tedious and costly war inland; the administration changed from Houston in 1838 to Lamar, and back to Houston again in 1841. The condition of the treasury was that there was no treasury at all, excepting a bale of invoices owing in all quarters.

Moore's navy, amounting to half a dozen wooden vessels, was eating up his own resources and doing little for Texan independence except to warn off the despicable batteries flying the Mexican flag. But the pluaky commodore did not grow disheartened. His extensive acquaintance and fair demeanor made him a host in himself, and drew support from individuals and municipalities outside of Texas. He kept on recruiting and disciplining his men. Fortunately for Texas there was another rebellion against the usurpation of Santa Anna in 1842: the state of Yucatan, then comprising the present Yucatan and Campeachy, threw off the yoke of Mexican dictator a war nearer home. Moore sailed for Yucatan and lay off Campeachy to await the movements of the forces on land.

But the rebellion of Yucatan, like all Mexican uprisings, was the work of a faction, and there was treachery and delay. Besides, Mexico had just expended a vast sum in England for a new fleet of war vessels, including the steamers Montezuma and Guadalupe. Moore's vessels were sailers and all old, and carried but five guns each. Houston was alarmed at the turn of affairs and recalled Moore at once. The trip to the seat of war, however, far from cooling the enthusiasm of the young commodore, filled him with fresh zeal for the cause of Texan independence. The English government, though friendly to Texas, desired to see it remain out of the hands of the United States, and kept a fleet cruising convenient for any emergency.

The United States government was also on hand with a force on the Mexican waters to protect her interests and secure the large indemnity due on Mexican guarantees. Moore proposed to his superiors that if given a suitable outfit he could blockade the Mexican ports on the Atlantic side, as the rebellion of Yucatan had already closed up those on the Pacific coast. Such a successful blockade would bring about foreign interference, and Mexico would be compelled to treat for peace. Houston proclaimed a blockade on these representations, and ordered the commodore to repair to Mobile and New Orleans to refit and strengthen his command for a contest with the new Mexican navy.

The serviceable vessels under Moore at this time were the brig-of-war Austin and the schooner San Antonio. A third, the Wharton, was bought at New Orleans and all haste was made to get to sea. Lack of funds was the chief drawback, for the little state could spare but $60,000 of her depreciated currency to expend on the navy. Mexico's fleet had cost $1,000,000 in gold. Moore's large acquaintance and his reputation for energy and zeal served a purpose, and he soon had his vessels ready and only needed funds and supplies for the crews. The vessel sent to the San Antonio, had a complement, and she was sent out in August to meet the Mexican steamer Montezuma, which was off Yucatan.

The San Antonio was struck by a storm which destroyed her, and Moore was left stranded at New Orleans with only the Austin and the Wharton, and no provisions or sailors. Alarmed now for the fate of the remaining vessels, in view of the strength of his adversary, Houston recommended the sale of the ships, and a secret act was passed authorizing the disarmament.

JIBBOOM AND STRAMPIPE SHOT AWAY.

Moore, who was offered funds from Yucatan and his friends in New Orleans if he would help the Yucatecos against Santa Anna, replied to the summons to return to Texas that he had gone for his ships and would do as he liked. Then Houston sent three commissioners after Moore, but the latter would not obey.

After a deadlock of weeks the commodore, having a truce with one commissioner, replied to the imperious president, under date of March 14, 1843, that he "expected to go to sea in a few days and keep at it until the termination of our difficulties with Mexico, without expense to the government of Texas." He told the commissioners that, if permitted to go to the Mexican coast, he would levy a contribution against that country that would repay Texas for every dollar expended on her navy. He sailed in a few days, as agreed, with the Austin and Wharton, having Houston's commissioner on board, and made for the bay of Campeachy, on the coast of Yucatan.

Campeachy was besieged by Santa Anna and the Mexican fleet was watching the harbor. Moore reached there at the close of April, and on the 30th, while his vessels were separated and becalmed, the Montezumas and the Guadalupe opened fire on the Wharton. The Texans made a gallant fight, handling their vessel with skill and outworking the Mexicans with their guns. The jibboom and steam pipe of the Montezuma were shot away, and the loss on the two steamers was nearly fifty killed and wounded.

The Wharton bore the brunt of this attack and had but six men. One Mexican ball entered the port hole, decapitating a gunner and wounding two or three comrades. The Austin, which lay at a distance, becalmed, got under way with the first breeze and the Mexicans speedily crawled off to avoid further damage. The next day the whole fleet of war vessels, seven in number, returned to the scene, but refused to fight. Moore spent over two days maneuvering to draw them into action, but as soon as he got within range they ran off. He said, "I would give ten years of my life if I had a steamer, as with one I could get close action at once and decide the fate of Texas." On the 10th of May the Yucatecos made a gallant fight on land to raise the siege. The Texan commodore commanded the Yucatecos vessels as well as his own and helped demolish a strong battery by fire from his gunboats. During the battle he again stood for the coast. The Austin, which lay at a distance, becalmed, got under way with the first breeze and the Mexicans speedily crawled off to avoid further damage. The next day the whole fleet of war vessels, seven in number, returned to the scene, but refused to fight. Moore spent over two days maneuvering to draw them into action, but as soon as he got within range they ran off. He said, "I would give ten years of my life if I had a steamer, as with one I could get close action at once and decide the fate of Texas." On the 10th of *May Question for Debate—"Which will advance the cause of Temperance the most, the temperance lecturer, or he who shows those who are striving to live a temperate life?"

The Session is Prolonged.

The General Synod of the Reformed church in America which is in session at Asbury Park, finds itself crowded with work and will not dissolve before Friday, making the session two days longer than was anticipated. The annual report of the Board of Home Missions was read this morning. The work of the board extends from New York to Dakota, and during the past year 120 churches have been added. The Board's work has been done at a cost of $66,600, of which over $11,000 was raised by the women of the church.

Sprout Nolle Prossed.

The case of James Sprout, coachman for Mr. Geo. H. Thompson, the Seventh ward, who was held by Judge Codington to await the action of the Grand Jury on the ground that he had committed an assault upon a boy by striking him with the pole of his carriage while walking his horses around the corner of Park place and Front street last Spring, has been nolle prossed by Prosecutor Wilson on the ground that the charge was too trivial to put the county to the expense of a trial. Wm. M. Stillman was Sprout's counsel.

JOTTINGS.

—Men are engaged painting the electric light poles.

—Crescents vs. Hackett-Corbett in a game of ball Saturday afternoon.

—A team of horses belonging to Cook Bros., ran away on Grove street last night, and demolished the wagon.

—The recital by Miss Maud Agnes Bowers at the Sanitary will take place this evening. She will be assisted by Miss Marchand.

—The Rev. D. J. Yerks officiated at the funeral of the late Mrs. Mary Hamilton which took place from the Mt. Olive Baptist church Tuesday afternoon.

—A missionary concert on Africa was held in the Crescent avenue Presbyterian church last evening. The affair was well attended and was very enjoyable.

—The fire files were very numerous all over the city during the storm last evening, and for a time the night was exceedingly weird and bright, strongly resembling miniature electric lights.

—There is some talk of building an extension to the Hope chapel to accomodate the scholars who attended Sunday-school there. When the number reaches 220 the building will be enlarged.

—A strawberry festival for the benefit of St. Joseph's Catholic church in North Plainfield was held in the Temperance Hall last evening. The affair was well attended. Dancing was one of the features of the occasion. O'Reilly furnished the music.

—The workmen who served notices on Hon. John Ulrich to withhold from the contractor, Justice James Hardy, the sum of $200 then due him for the contract covering his new building on North avenue, are being paid by him. Some were paid yesterday, and checks are awaiting the others at his office.

—Mrs. Van Doren Hoff, daughter of Capt. Hickson of the Franklin steamboat on the Delaware and Raritan canal, died at her residence, Division street, Bound Brook, yesterday morning at five o'clock. Mallon, late of Wallack's Theatre, N. Y., Miss Mabel Irving, late of Haverly's Theatre, N. Y., Miss Mabel Bloomfield, late of Haverly's Theatre, N. Y. Popular prices will prevail and reserved seats will be on sale at Shaw's pharmacy Saturday.

—Mr. P. T. B. Revier of North Plainfield says that the row with which he became connected Monday was due to Italians fighting among themselves and that he had nothing whatever to do with it. He employs Italians to work on his stone crushing machine and which never shows any disposition to be on account of his failure to pay them. This, he says, is the reason, and that is why the Italians struck. Mr. Revier says that not more than a dozen Italians were engaged in the fight.

THE BOICE - THICKSTUN CASE SETTLED.

A Long Contested Suit at Last Adjusted.

Counsellor R. V. Lindabury of Elizabeth, on behalf of the estate of David Thickstun, and Wm. M. Stillman on behalf of the estate of D. J. Boice, yesterday settled on favorable terms to both sides the long drawn out case of Thickstun vs. Boice, which has been pending in the County of Chancery for the last three years. The suit involved over forty thousand dollars and was brought by the Thickstun estate for an accounting as to the partnership affairs of the old and well-known firm of Boice & Thickstun. No charges of bad faith or fraud were made by either party, but owing to the tangled way in which Mr. Boice had kept his accounts it was almost impossible to determine what amount was really due by the Boice estate to the Thickstuns for their share of the collection of the book accounts, which Mr. Boice had taken as surviving partner to collect. The Boice estate has always admitted that something was due by them, and stood ready to pay a reasonable amount, but the Thickstun estate wished to find out if possible the exact amount that should come to them, but this latter was found impossible, and in sheer dispair of ever finding any end to the matter the case was settled by the Boice estate paying the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars in full of all demand.

AIDED A CRIMINAL TO ESCAPE.

And by so Doing James Day Got Himself in Trouble.

Last evening Policeman Goss and Kiely went to Day's saloon in the boulevard for the purpose of arresting Thomas Dowd, Jr., for fighting. When they arrived at the place James Day saw them and surmising their business, hastily closed the door and locked it, so that Dowd escaped.

The officers demanded admission but Day refused to open the door until after Dowd had had sufficient time to make his escape. When the officers ascertained this fact they promptly arrested Day for aiding a prisoner to escape and lodging him in custody. He was taken before Justice Codington this morning and was fined $10 and costs.

Young Naylor Will Recover.

Young Alfred Naylor of 70 East Third street, the boy who fell out of a cherry tree at the corner of Madison avenue and Fourth street, as reported in yesterday's News, was seriously injured about the left side of the head and face. He was suffering profoundly from the shock when Dr. Faul was called to see him. After a thorough examination the doctor found that no bones were broken, and thinks that the boy will recover.

And Still Another Runaway.

Yesterday afternoon an old farmer was driving a team of horses on Grove street when suddenly one of them began kicking. In order to escape being struck by the animal's heels the man jumped from the wagon. When the horses found that they were free they ran away, but were caught before the proceeded in doing much damage to the vehicle to which they were attached.

FLAG RAISING AT WARRENVILLE

Patriotic Exercises by School Children.

A short time ago The Youth's Companion offered as a prize to the school which would send the best composition on "Patriotism" an American flag. The competition was open to every school in the State. The public school at Warrenville, of which Miss Mamie O'Conner of Bound Brook is the teacher, was the fortunate winner of the prize, and the composition which won it was written by Miss Elizabeth G. Austin, a daughter of Justice Austin who formerly resided on Craig place, West Plainfield.

Yesterday was the time set for raising the flag and at three p. m. about three hundred people gathered in the grove opposite the school in which the exercises were held. An interesting programme, consisting of patriotic songs and recitations had been arranged, and was well rendered by the scholars.

Mr. William A. Coddington of this city delivered the oration on the occasion which was of a patriotic nature and was listened to with much interest by all present. During his remarks he gave a resume of the winning of the prize and complimented the little girl on her successful composition. Every body present was happy, but none were happier than Miss O'Connor and the Miss Austin.

The following is the programme of the exercises:

Recitation—"The American Flag".....Benjamin Jennings
Song—"Shouting the Battle Cry of Freedom"
Recitation—"Our Whole Country,".....Fanny Chalcroft
Recitation—"America Hymn,".....Elmer Jennings
Recitation—"Stars and Stripes,".....Mary Scholl
Song—"Freedom's Banner"
Recitation—"The American Flag".....Annie Hudson
Recitation—"E Pluribus Unum,".....Martha Jennings
Song—"Let the Hills and Vales Resound."

"Our Flag".....Warrenville Boys
Recitation—"Barbara Frietchie" Maude Hilmus
Song—"The Star Spangled Banner" Solo and Chorus
Recitation—"Liberty and Union" Emily Austin
Song—"Red, White and Blue"

The size of the flag is 12x20 feet and it was raised on a flag pole 75 feet high.

Mr. W. A. Coddington obtained the original copy of the address, and says he loaned it to the reporter of another paper whom he met, with the understanding that he was to copy it, and forward it early this morning to THE NEWS. It failed to reach us up to the hour of going to press, so that its publication is necessarily delayed.

WALKED OUT OF THE COURT ROOM.

The Indicted Man Was Missed. A Constable Caught Him.

John Whitlow, of Philadelphia, indicted in Union County for playing a shell game at the Linden Park race track, surprised the Union County Court yesterday by walking out of the court-room while he was waiting to be arraigned. There was much excitement when he was missed, and Constable Carey was sent in pursuit.

The officer espied Whitlow walking rapidly up Broad street and hailed him. The man broke into a run and turned up Murray street. Carey followed and overhauled him near the Pennsylvania tracks and led him back to jail. Whitlow's bail was $500, but as a reward for this display of enterprise on his part the bail was raised to $500, and he was remanded for trial.

Board of Freeholders.

All of the members of the Somerset County Board of Freeholders were present at the meeting yesterday.

The County Collector was authorized to borrow an amount not to exceed $10,000, in anticipation of taxes.

A committee, with counsel, will meet soon to examine the Union avenue bridge in Bound Brook.

The Board proceeded to ballot for a County Collector. Eleven ballots were taken. On the first two Hugh Gaston received five votes, W. A. McMurtry three, R. B. Allen one and J. H. Mattison one. On the 10th, and 11th, ballots Mr. Gaston had five, Mr. McMurtry one and Mr. Allen three and one was blank. Mr. William Sandford's new home on Front street and Central avenue.

Mr. John Wennsmied and bride were tendered a reception in their new home on Grant avenue last evening. A large number of invited guest were present.

The Louisiana Lottery company gave $20,000 for the establishment of free public bathing houses at New Orleans. Thus it is trying to wash its sins away.

Authors are running the "Why and Why Not" business into the ground in their titles. We suggest a few more to help kill the fashion, something like the following, for instance: "Why I Am Crosseyed," "Why I Don't Pay My Debts," "Why I Expectorate in Public Places and Disgust Everybody." An exhaustive treatise could be furnished on the last topic.

Now is the time of year for the village improvement association to get in its best work. Under the fostering care weedy, malaria breeding commons can be turned into beautiful parks; muddy, impassable roads can be changed to smooth turnpikes and graveled walks, while barren, dusty streets can be made bowers of beauty by splendid maple and chestnut shade trees. Hearty co-operation on the part of farmers and villagers would in a few years make our American landscape as lovely as that of Europe, which has been under the touch of beautifying for centuries. For man's touch first destroys then beautifies nature's landscape.

The New York of the Future.

Under the above heading The New York Sun presents to its fellow countrymen some statistics as follows:

In his address as president of the commission he inquired into the expediency of consolidating the communities about the port of New York into one great municipality. Mr. Andrew H. Green pointed out that together they would make up the second city of the world as to size. London alone contains a greater population.

The twenty-three contiguous four cities of independent municipal governments, and are situated in two states and four counties, have a combined population, at present accurate 8,000,000. The estimated population of London is about 4,270,000, and it is estimated that the city of Paris has 2,000,000. In the growth of the population and wealth about this port is so much more rapid that, as Mr. Green said, when the infant of to-day becomes old enough to cast his first vote, the greater New York will be the foremost city of the world, of all human history, if imagination will not outrun reason.

When the boy is at 40 years of age he will be one of a community of 10,000,000 people, by far the greatest city, as well as the richest by all tests. The densely populated area will extend on the north far into Westchester county, on the east over Kings and Queens counties, and on the west into New Jersey as far as the Oranges and beyond. It will contain more than one-fifth as many as the whole present population of the state of New York outside of it. Boston, with the population of New Jersey added, will be a great state of itself, the greatest in all the Union in respect of wealth and numbers, and its commercial and financial power will be second to none in the world.

What the New Census Will Find.

It will find forty-two states in the Union instead of thirty-eight. It will find the national debt reduced from over $2,120,000,000 to less than $1,700,000,000 and the national revenues larger than ever before.

In the largest cities, where four and five story buildings were considered enterprising for hotels and office structures in 1880, 1890 will find giant houses thirteen and fourteen stories in height, sky scraping affairs, with elevators running to the top. It will find the new houses fitted with steam and hot water heat instead of fires—houses at a summer temperature the winter through, with never a hint of smoke, dust or ashes about it. Great natural gas fields, unknown in 1880, have given a new impetus to industry. Telephones enable us to speak to our friends 200 miles away or our neighbor in the next block at will. The modern apartment house has revolutionized the way of living of poor people in cities. Every flat has its bath-room, the electric bells, the dumb waiters, the neatly finished light rooms, the man who can only pay a small rent has more conveniences than the millionaire had a generation ago.

The new census will find electric lights where the last census found gas and kerosene. It will find electric and grip cable roads, the horse car and the clumsy, old fashioned omnibuses and horse cars. It will look along over 150,000 miles of glittering railway tracks, girdling and criss-crossing the country, where 1880 saw only 93,340. In the last ten years steam has shortened the distance across the ocean by nearly a day. The new census will behold the first fruits of that gigantic co-operative idea which is the distinctive feature of the last quarter of the Nineteenth century, and born of this idea the enormous development of such colossal industries as history never recorded before. It will see such mining and manufacturing enterprises in the south as nobody dreamed possible till now. In brief, it will see a new south out and out. Another fact it will meet will be $150,000,000 cash from Great Britain invested in industries in the United States, where the movement had hardly begun ten years ago.

Oh, yes! The census of 1890 will find us a happy, healthy, prosperous people, richer than we ever were before, at peace with all mankind, and, please God, the idea of co-operation and human brotherhood only in its infancy as yet. May it steadily grow till the next census, and may 1900 and likewise all our readers witness together its full, glorious flowering!

A PENSION BILL PASSED.

Senate and House Agree Upon a Measure.

IT WILL DISTRIBUTE $85,000,000.

Pensions for Dependent Parents, Widows and Children of Three Months' Men.

One Estimate Says the Bill Will Call for $90,000,000 the first year.

WASHINGTON, June 12.—In the house Mr. Mills (Tex.) was appointed a member of the committee on rules and Mr. Turner (Ga.) a member of the committee on ways and means to fill vacancies occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Carlisle. The conference report on the service dependent pension bill was presented and the previous question ordered. In explanation of the report Mr. Morris stated that the conference committee had stricken out the dependent feature of the senate bill relative to service pensions of the house bill. It would distribute $85,000,000 among the poor soldiers of the nation.

Many Members Protest.

Mr. Yoder (O.) protested against the conference report, holding that it ignored the demand of the soldier and buried in the basement of the Capitol his petitions for a per diem rate of pension. Protests were made on similar grounds by Messrs. Springer and Turner, and after discussion the conference report was agreed to—yeas, 145; nays, 56.

The General Pension Bill.

The general bill was then taken up upon after providing for the pensioning of dependent parents, says that all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the war of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from a disability of a total character of a permanent character, not the result of their own vicious habits, which incapacitates them from the performance of manual labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support, shall be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States and shall be entitled to a pension not to exceed $12 per month and not less than $6 per month, proportioned to their inability to earn a support, such pension to commence during the existence of such disability. Rank in the service shall not be considered in applications filed under this act.

The Cost of the Bill.

Provision is made for pensioning at the rate of $8 per month widows of men who served ninety days, without proving death to be the result of service, and likewise granting $2 a month to each child under 16 years of age. Ten dollars is fixed as a limit of the fee to be charged by agents in preparing cases under this act. There is no possible way to estimate the cost of the bill. The estimates range from $60,000,000 to $120,000,000. Mr. Morrill, in the house, places the estimate at about $85,000,000, but it is thought it will run up to at least $90,000,000 the first year.

Mr. Stewart's Views.

Mr. Stewart (Vt.) presented the conference report on the senate anti-trust bill.

The explanatory report on the part of the senate conferees (Mr. Sherman, of Missouri, dissenting) says: In the original bill two things were declared illegal, viz: Contracts in restraint of interstate trade or commerce and the monopolization of such trade. Its only object was the control of trusts, so far as such combinations in their relation to interstate commerce are within reach of federal legislation. The house amendment extends the scope of the act to all agreements entered into for the purchase or sale of merchandise or in the transportation of persons or property within the jurisdiction of congress.

No Relief from Competition's Effects.

It declares that any agreement for relief from the effects of competition in the two industries of transportation and sale of merchandise, however excessive or destructive such competition may be. The amendment reported by the conferees is the senate clause with the added proviso that the power of the states over the subjects named in the act shall not be impaired thereby. It strikes from the house amendment the clause relating to contracts for the purchase or sale of merchandise and modifies the transportation clause by making unlawful agreements which raise rates above what is just and reasonable.

In the Senate.

WASHINGTON, June 12.—The senate passed senate bill extending the criminal jurisdiction of the circuit and district courts to the territories and their connecting waters. Mr. Morrill, from the committee on finance, reported back favorably and with sundry amendments the house silver bill and gave notice that he would offer it as a substitute for the senate bill. The senate silver bill was then taken up and Mr. Eustis addressed the senate.

Mr. Eustis on the Administration.

He considered that the proposition for free coinage was simply an extension of the existing system of finance. The American people had tried the experiment and were satisfied with it, and they demanded that the experiment should be developed and extended. He denounced the present administration which, he said, had recommended the outline of Mr. Windom's proposition and had given a half promise that it would communicate further with congress on the subject, a half promise which had not yet been fulfilled. He declared that election of candidates would be overthrown by the popular will. He characterized as absurd Mr. Windom's supposition that the balance of trade might be against the United States, in which case gold would be drawn from the country.

Mr. Harrison and Emperor William.

In conclusion, Mr. Eustis contrasted the young emperor of Germany and his sympathy with the working classes with the president of the United States, who, he said, was not as accessible to the American people as the young emperor had shown himself to his people. Mr. Turpie next addressed the senate. He favored the free coinage of silver.

The Bills Passed.

The senate bill to prohibit monopoly in the transportation of cattle to foreign countries and the senate bill to provide for the inspection of live cattle and beef products intended for export to foreign countries were passed. The senate joint resolution in regard to the export trade in cattle then came up for final passage, and the president to cause negotiations to be had with Great Britain for the purpose of securing the abrogation or modification of the regulations now enforced which require cattle imported into Great Britain from the United States to be slaughtered at the port of entry and prohibiting the same from being carried alive to other places in the kingdom.

WOULD NOT LOWER THE FLAG.

The Stars and Stripes Cause Commotion in a Canadian Port.

KINGSTON, Ont., June 12.—Quite a ripple of excitement was created at Ferry wharf yesterday afternoon by an attempt on the part of Col. Cotton, the commandant of Battery A, stationed at Kingston, to prevent an excursion party boarding the American steamer St. Lawrence until she had lowered the stars and stripes. A few days ago the management of the steamer received permission from the Canadian government to call at Canadian ports down the St. Lawrence river to collect excursionists. The boat was engaged Wednesday by the Canadian Order of Foresters for an excursion to the Thousand Islands. Among these most prominent in the party was Mayor Brennan, of this city, who had engaged Battery A band to escort the excursionists. When the party boarded the boat the mayor was informed by Col. Cotton that he must not board the steamer until the colors had been lowered. This the order caused great commotion among the Foresters and their friends. The owners of the steamer, however, after being consulted, refused to obey the order and so informed Col. Cotton.

The American flag was flying at the end of the steamer's bowsprit and the Union Jack at the top of the staff at the stern of the boat, and the Stars and Stripes were also displayed at the stern.

Col. Cotton was interviewed by a reporter and asked for information in the matter of allowing the men to land in American ports wearing British military uniforms; he said that no distinction prevailed. British troops and I objected. I found out afterwards that it was not intended to land the men, and when I learned that the American flag was to be lowered I protested place on the steamer I objected to allowing the members of the band to go on board because I did not think it would look right to see a band of British troops being conveyed through the Thousand Islands on a steamer carrying the Stars and Stripes at her stern. There would have been nothing wrong in the band going with the excursion as civilians. Of course we did not own the boat and could not compel the owners to lower the flag. They refused to allow the band to go on board."

PROHIBITION AND HIGH LICENSE.

The National Temperance Congress Meets at New York.

NEW YORK, June 12.—The National Temperance congress has opened here. The Rev. Dr. Charles F. Deems, of the Church of the Strangers, was called to preside over the deliberations. The question for discussion, "Is State and National Prohibition Desirable and Feasible?" was then discussed by Gen. Neal Dow from the high license side and Robert Graham from the prohibition point of view. At the afternoon session Rev. J. K. Funk, of New York, addressed the meeting on Sabbath reform. High license people unite on some practicable restriction measure.

Dr. Huntington, of Grace church, disbelieved in either prohibition or high license. Both had proved failures. We must find some substitute for the saloon and must lessen the desire for liquor before we can eradicate the evil of intemperance. Improvement in the homes of the poor would be one good step. Gen. A. B. Nettleton, of Minneapolis, favored the founding of an American union temperance alliance to work for better laws and better public sentiment. Dr. A. J. Kynett, of Philadelphia, favored prohibition. After several other speeches in favor of total abstinence and prohibition the session closed. At an evening session Gen. Wager Swayne presided and addresses were delivered by him and Walter B. Hill, of Georgia; Rev. A. H. Church, of Massachusetts; Gen. O. Howard, J. B. Stearns, Rev. A. A. Miner, Rev. Howard Crosby and others. Several of the speakers declared that unless the "original package" decision was nullified by congress a political revolution would be worked by the temperance people.

No Union for the Reformed Church.

NEW YORK, June 12.—At the morning session of the Reformed Presbyterian synod the report of the committee on union favoring a union with the other branches of the denomination was rejected. The vote was as follows—ayes, 17; nays, 125; absent, 3; and not voting, 12. In the afternoon session the committee on divorce reported in favor of limiting divorce to cases of adultery or willful desertion. The report opposing the use of or trading in tobacco was adopted. Reference was again had to the president's building in Washington being used partly for the liquor business, and this was condemned as an indirect participation in immorality.

MONTREAL, June 12.—The condition of Cowles shows some improvement. The physicians appointed by the court to examine him have decided that he is able to make a deposition. Accordingly, at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon he was carried to the hospital and took his sworn statement. It will be laid before the grand jury. Hale is still out on parole.

JONASSON'S HARD LUCK.

An American Citizen Ill Treated in Berlin.

IT DID HE LIBEL EMPEROR WILLIAM?

He Says He Was Falsely Accused by Two Drunken Students—The Outrageous Conduct of the Police—Three Days and Nights in a Dirty Cell.

BERLIN, June 12.—A tremendous sensation has been created here this week by the arrest of Joseph Jonasson & Co., of firm of Meyer, Jonasson & Co., of No. 328 Broadway, New York, on the charge of libelling the Emperor William. It appears that Mr. Jonasson met a couple of students one evening at a beer house here, and after went with them to several places, when suddenly both of them turned upon him and accused him of making objectionable observations about the emperor, although as a matter of fact the latter's name had never been mentioned.

Jonasson Under Arrest.

Jonasson then noticed that both the students were drunk. He tried to smoothe the matter over as a joke, but they refused to listen to him and called for the police. They took him to the little police station house, where he was rudely searched and all his valuables, papers, etc., taken from him. Mr. Jonasson protested against this treatment and called the officer's attention to the drunken condition of both students and demanded to be released, but all his protests were in vain. He was shoved into the Black Maria and then rapidly driven to police headquarters.

His Protests Ignored.

The officers at this station likewise declined to entertain Jonasson's protests, and ordered his instant removal to jail. There he was given a strict cell, and compelled to give up his own clothing and to wear prison garb. For three days and nights he was kept in solitary close confinement and given food in a filthy condition. Meanwhile Mr. Jonasson's brother, who was staying at the same hotel, became alarmed at his disappearance, and searched the morgues and hospitals in vain. He then went to police headquarters, and was told that nothing was known of such a person. He was then nearly in despair.

Prostrate in a Cell.

All this time the unfortunate victim of the two students' drunken freak was lying prostrate in his cell. He first asked to be allowed to communicate with his brother. He gave the address to an official, who promised to go and find him, but did not even go to the hotel. He called back soon after and said he could not see him, and that the name was unknown there. Mr. Jonasson then asked that some one be sent to the American legation or to a good lawyer in the city, but again without success. He was told that he must wait and see if he is to be charged in the ordinary manner. At length Mr. Jonasson succeeded in getting one of the best lawyers in Berlin, who secured his release on bail, which was placed at a high figure in the hope that his American friends would be unable to furnish it, but they were able to defeat the hope, and Mr. Jonasson was set free.

They Will Be Punished.

The two drunken students, his accusers, now say they made the whole thing drunk and therefore remember nothing about the affair. But it is hardly likely they will be allowed to go off with such an infamous excuse. On the morning following the arrest they said that all was perfectly true and that the American had libelled the emperor. Efforts have been made to hush up the case, but Americans refuse to listen to such a proposal. The case is still before the court. There is no doubt as to Mr. Jonasson's ultimate acquittal. When he is really free he will move an inquiry as to the conduct of the police officials who refused all assistance to him and will fight the case out to the end.

A Hudson River Bridge Bill.

WASHINGTON, June 12.—Mr. Evarts by request introduced in the senate a bill to authorize the New York and New Jersey Bridge company to build a bridge across the Hudson river between New York city and the state of New Jersey. The bill provides that the bridge shall be built from a point north of Tenth street and south of One Hundred and Eighty-first street to a point in New Jersey north of the southerly line of the township of Union or at some point on the Palisades north of Fort Lee. It is to be not less than 145 feet elevation in the clear above high water mark at the piers and 135 at the center of the main span.

Mexico's Phonograph Scheme.

WASHINGTON, June 12.—The postoffice department has entered into an arrangement made by the Mexican government for placing in all the postoffices in that country phonographs for the use of the public. By this means letters are sent from one point to another in the mails at the same postage rates as first class matter The use of the machine is likely to become general and it will be utilized by persons who are unable to write. The phonographs are managed by a company who pay a certain proportion of the receipts to the government.

Ruined in a Few Days.

CHICAGO, June 12.—The board of trade firm of Robert Warren & Co. failed to pass the clearing house Wednesday. Wheat and short ribs, both of which articles the firm was a heavy holder, dropped sharply in price when the failure became generally known. Mr. Warren said that he could have paid his debts in full, and would in about two weeks ago to net him $150,000 profit, but the decline of the last few days had ruined him.

A Fatal Gas Explosion.

PITTSBURG, June 12.—By an explosion of natural gas which had leaked into the cellar No. 10 Fifth avenue, Allegheny, Mrs. Kipp, about 70 years of age, and her granddaughter, Lizzie, 16 years of age, were so badly burned that they died last evening. Mrs. Kipp and the girl entered the cellar and struck a match to light a lamp when the explosion threw them up the stairs.

The Genesee House in Trouble.

BUFFALO, June 12.—The proprietors of the Genesee house are in trouble. The furniture and property has been taken on mortgage for $13,300, which it holds against the furniture, and the sheriff seized the furniture and commenced removing it. This action will probably result in the closing of the hotel.

A NEW POINT IS INVOLVED.
TOLEDO, O., June 12.—It was reported here that Rev. Dr. Quigley, the prominent Catholic pastor of St. Francis De Sales church, in charge of the largest parochial schools in the state, had been indicted by the grand jury for refusing to comply with the provisions of the state law regarding the school children. Complaint had been made against him for refusal to make returns of the number of children in his schools in order that truant officers might be discovered. Lawyers say an interesting constitutional point is involved in the indictment. In case parochial schools come under the truant law they can demand a division of the school fund.

To Search for $10,000,000.
NEW YORK, June 12.—The wrecking steamer Rescue, of the Merritt Wrecking company, started last night for Cape Henlopen to begin operations for the recovery of the British sloop-of-war De Braak, which was capsized off the Delaware coast on May 25, 1798. There is every reason to believe that $10,000,000 in gold is on the hold of the sunken vessel, which is supposed to be lying on the bottom somewhere off Cape Henlopen. The English government wanted on several occasions to send a wrecking party to seek the lost treasure, but as the sloop De Braak sunk so near the coast of Delaware the United States government claimed it.

NEW YORK, June 12.—The Sun says that Edgar Gray, general factotum of the United States Land and Investment company, and chief agent in its scheme to unload $750,000 of "worn out collateral" on "unsuspecting investors" in Wall street, has been fully identified as William E. Gray, who twenty years ago was one of the most noted and successful forgers in the country, and that the severance of his connection with the investment company and his contemplated trip to Europe at the earlier side of the ocean have been announced.

KEMMLER'S LAST HOPE GONE.

The Writ of Habeas Corpus in the United States Circuit Court Dismissed.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., June 12.—The last chapter of the Kemmler electrocution case, as far as the appeal to the federal courts is concerned, was written here Wednesday. In the United States circuit court, before Judge Wallace, Attorney General Tabor appearing for the state and in behalf of Charles F. Durston, agent and warden of Auburn prison, moved that the petition of William Kemmler, alias John Hart, for a writ of habeas corpus be dismissed and vacated. Judge Wallace at once granted the motion, and ordered that Kemmler be remanded to the custody of the warden of Auburn prison for the execution of the sentence.

Judge Wallace, with the order, filed this memorandum: "This writ has served the office for which it was allowed, and there is no reason why it should longer remain in force. It was allowed because there seemed to be a question whether the sentence under which Kemmler is to be put to death did not offend the fourteenth amendment of the federal constitution. This was a question which could only be finally decided authoritatively by the supreme court of the United States. If it had seemed to me obviously so frivolous as not to be worthy of serious discussion the writ should not been allowed; but unless it was thus frivolous, it was not for a judge of this court to refuse it, under the particular circumstances, even to the most depraved criminal, and thereby deny him the chance which the statutes of congress had given him, to challenge the validity of his sentence.

"The writ of habeas corpus is of the highest right; the application for it is addressed to the discretion of the judge but peremptorily. It cannot be denied because the application has been unreasonably delayed or because the most serious inconvenience may result from its allowance, and it is wholly immaterial whether the applicant is held in custody by the warden of a state official or by the highest judicial authority."

There is one other legal question touching this case remaining in the state courts. That involves the quest whether Kemmler shall be executed by the warden of the state prison or by the sheriff of Erie county. This has been quickly taken to the court of appeals and will soon be decided. Then Kemmler will be resentenced.

Wallace, with his Ignatius Loyola, robbed his uncle, the editor of Wallace's Monthly, of $52,000 in bonds and money a month ago, and who was brought back from Havana by detectives, has made a full confession of his crime. This money came from the funds of his uncle, for whom young Wallace was acting as cashier. To cover up this shortage Lewis induced him to commit other irregularities. Among other ventures they went into the bookmaking business at the races, dropping $8,000 in a few days. Pinkey the big steal was made and the two fled to Havana, where they were arrested. It is understood that about half the money has been recovered.

Balfour Scores the Parnellites.

LONDON, June 12.—Mr. Balfour was entertained at a banquet in St. James' hall last evening. In reply to a toast he said the Irish secretaryship was a target for Parnellite abuse, but he had been less abused than some of his eminent predecessors. Mitchelstown's beaming state, he said, the Parnellites were running another horse called Tipperary. He complained of the obstructions of the opposition in parliament and suggested the dispatch of the once great Liberal party, which was being dragged at the heels of the national mob. The nation would come home to them a generation hence, when they found the honor of the country in the custody of the Unionist party alone.

PEERLESS DYES

Cultures vs. Cheek.

Scene: A corner in a Murray Hill drawing room.

Characters: Miss Bunker, a lady from the classic corridors of Boston. Mr. Golightly, a gentleman from the windswept boulevards of Chicago. Time: Evening.

Miss Bunker (with a refined smile)—Charming evening, isn't it?

Mr. Golightly—Oh, I didn't notice saying about the evening, except that it was not raining.

Miss B.—But the moon—so exceptionally fine.

Mr. G.—Oh, yes; of course. Fine moon. Do you know, the finest moon I ever saw was one we used to access nearest shanty on our farm in Chicago—our club, you know. We made it out of the bottom of a lard can. Nothing like a lard can for reflected sunlight.

Miss B.—Oh, you have been interested in amateur theatricals, have you? I knew you were intellectually inclined. Do you write poetry?

Mr. G.—Oh! some kinds.

Miss B.—Of course, not all kinds. No one reads the old style of poetry now, that death, dust of Brimstone rot whoever anybody.

Mr. G. (toying nervously with mustache)—Yes, very. Let's see; he was a relative of yours, wasn't he?

Miss B. (embarrassed)—Oh, no! Do you—do you know where they are going to bury him?

Mr. G. (making a desperate guess, unassuming sang frois)—In Chicago, I think. At least that's what I heard.

Miss B.—Indeed? That's singular. It must be so different there from his beloved Venice.

Mr. G. (bluffing manfully)—Oh, not so very different.

Miss B. (suspiciously)—Have you read much of Browning's poetry?

Mr. G. (nonchalantly)—Oh, I used to read a good deal of it when I was a boy. I was one of the youngmen him, don't you know. Of late I haven't been reading much poetry, except what I see in Truck. Elegant poetry in Truck. Don't you think?

Miss B.—Oh, very.

Mr. G. (becoming enthusiastic)—I remember a thing they had last month called "A Ride on the Railroad."

Miss B. (sarcastically)—Must have been something like Browning's "Love in a Balcony," I suppose.

Mr. G.—Just about the same, only better. That's where Browning got his start, writing for Truck. They made him. He used to do Love.

There was a young man from Madrid kind of work for them. Ten cents a line. Good pay, too.

Miss B.—Really, Mr. Golightly, are you not mistaken in the man?

Mr. G.—Oh, I can't be. Father used to know him well. Loaned him $5 once. Browning never paid it. But I must go.

Miss B.—Must you go?

Mr. G.—Oh, I must, indeed. I'll send you the copy of "Truck" containing that "Ride on the Railroad." I am sure you will like it. Beats Browning all hollow. Good evening.

Miss B.—Good evening.—Tom Hall in Life.

The Truthful Boy.

A pedestrian recently stopped before a house which bore the sign of "For Sale Cheap," and inquired of a boy sitting on the steps:

"Bub, do you live here?"

"Yes, sir."

"If you that the place is for sale."

"Yes, sir."

"Hear hear your father say what price he wants?"

"Yes, sir. He says that if any one is fool enough to pay him $4,000 he'll let it go quicker'n a wink, but if he is to take $5,000 he'll hold out a little and by and by get a couple of months' rent out of it."—Detroit Free Press.

A Tosh.

"Please look a little pleasant, miss. I know it's hard; but it's only for a moment!"—London Punch.

The March of Trade.

Great Merchant (to Manager)—Inform the clerks, Mr. Mumm, that owing to the general stagnation in business their salaries will be reduced 10 per cent. on and after the 1st.

Mr. Mumm—Yes, sir.

Great Merchant—And by the way, if the architect calls with those plans for my Newport villa ask him out to dine. I will return at 1 o'clock—Clothier and Furnisher.

A Genuine Attachment.

Polite debtor (who has been dining his principal creditor at his country home)—Well, how do you like the place?

Creditor—Beautiful, charming! I confess to an attachment for the place already.

Debtor—Indeed?

Creditor—Yes, my lawyer will serve the papers to-morrow or the next day.—Burlington Free Press.

The Indications Strong.

Mr. Kajones—Laura, how many times has that young sneak, Grigson, been to see you this week?

Miss Kajones—Perhaps five or six times, father. Why?

Mr. Kajones (much excited)—First thing you know, Laura, he'll be coming here Sundays!—Chicago Tribune.

A Nonsense Song.

The Clock looked up at the Knifeboard;
The Knifeboard looked up at the spit;
On the Tom Tom bank so dolorous and dark,
With an infinite longing to flit.

And the Wallswept dozzled out of his hole
And looked at the Ghost against
With a dismissive fit did the Lobbygoggle
Flop fastfully over the Wale.

"Stars of the Wall of the Watch," says he,
"Of the dominous Wall of the Wurly!"
When the globerous Clair sticks into his hair
And the world is left in the dark.

Then the Flock flew over the dewy Pleat;
O dusty and dark was the Nest!
And the perverted Book he blew on his Hook
And the Bugle burst in two!

Then the Shirk he gazed at the Bankbreak,
And the Clock he looked at the Wall;
And the Wallsnib he whirled right over the world,
And dapped his flame and died.

And then this Wall of the Work was heard;
O the dominous Wall of the Watch!
And the light went out on the Square of the Sheet,
And the world was left in the dark.

WOMAN AND HOME.

REV. E. E. HALE'S OBSERVATIONS ON THE BOSTON WOMAN.

Why Women Are Vain—Camping on the Veranda—Neat Ways of Mending.

Matching the Complexion—How to Save the Boys—Never Whip the Baby.

This time, Miss Reader, we will not try a spinner; there are no spinners in front of the Vendome. Let us take the more decorous and slower horse car. And while you tell me, Miss Reader, how the ladies behave whom you meet in here cars in Fort Wrangle? There is rather a curious character in the car bowling of Boston women. Just read these lines, which I received yesterday from one of the most charming women whom I have the pleasure of knowing. Any experience with Boston women to whom I have been introduced have been very charming in most senses; but my experience in shops, cars and streets have been otherwise, and would fill a volume. I have been a stranger in New York, San Francisco and Boston, and have lived in the three cities in the first two I have asked for information, and offered small courtesies to total strangers—women—with the pleasantest results. But in Boston my experience has taught me never to ask a question, or try to help a well dressed woman, even when I know her to belong to the "best families!"

I have these lines in my pocket, as you see, and I read them to you because the last time I was on the car something very similar happened. A young woman, a little over dressed, if you please, stepped the car that she might leave it. She dropped the bag, one some outgrown him, don't you know. Of late I haven't been reading much poetry, except what I see in Truck. Elegant poetry in Truck. Don't you think?

Camping on the Veranda.

One of the most delightful reminiscences of my last summer in the country was the summer room which my friend fashioned on the wide veranda of her cottage. She painted the floor a dark drab, which is better than any deeper color for the floor of the porch or veranda, because it does not show the dust, and it helps to make the lights of a summer day. A breadth of fancy straw matting was tacked against the wall of the house and along the railings for a dado. Above this, on the house, hung a few sketches in black and white and water colors in plain oak boards, bark and rustic frames, the product of the summer's outings. This cottage, by the way, was painted the new shade known as "Zilfel Tower," which has almost a silvery tone in some lights, and made an admirable background.

A hammock was hung across one corner; a bamboo couch, one or two wicker chairs, a rocker and a few bamboo stools rounded luxury either sitting or lying. The hammock and couch were furnished with plain mattresses and pillows covered with bright chintz, and these, with the breath of the woods and spring upon them, made repose a delight. A paper rack and a set of shelves for books served to hold such papers and books as were used from time to time. As this was a most quite region the veranda was closed with wire netting. There were adjustable awnings to protect this "room" from sun or rain. Rugs were brought out and placed about, and there was, in pendence to any other part of the house, that the gentlemen lounged or smoked or read aloud and the ladies sewed or made rick-rack all through that memorable summer. —Cor. New York Herald.

Why Women Are Vain.

"I am one of the women," said a woman the other day, "who willingly confess that our sex is vain. And you may be sure that we do not like to have our vanity wounded. When I see a man making a public show of my complexion, or a bit of lace which I know will catch the eye of my husband when he comes home from the office, I am ways fool that I have had a victory in the advance. If you think, you bachelor (and the bachelor tried to look miserable), that I wear pretty gowns and bright ribbons and dainty bonnets for my self gratification alone you are very much mistaken. I wear them because I know that my husband will admire them, or that when men see me and meet me they will find them attractive.

"This is the whole secret of a woman's desire to be well dressed. And do you know that the more cheaply I can get one of my gewgaws or baubles the more I am pleased? You men not think and believe with the ignorant majority of men that a woman spends money without an idea of what she is doing. When I get a bargain in something that I am sure will find favor the admiration of yes men, I must wait for my husband to say after he has admired it, 'Well, I suppose we shall have to threaten two of our cousins with fire or evil extravagance in dress.' Then I laugh when I tell him that the extensive luxury cost him sixty-five cents."—New York Tribune.

Matching the Complexion.

For years it was thought that yellow of any shade was peculiarly the color for brunettes, and that blondes should never wear it. This has now been shown to be a great mistake.

A woman of the darkest white skin, with light blue eyes and pale blond hair, becomes at once an absolute a yellow gown.

A yellow frock and a yellow fan have been known to transform a rather plain blonde into a vision of almost perfect loveliness. How could it fail to be so? All the lines of blond beauty are fair and sunny. Why, then, should it not follow that they are set off by the yellow tones and brought into more admirable prominence by similar tints? To my mind like has as much attraction for like in the law of beauty as in that of love, for I am not one of those who believe in the doctrine that people are attracted by their opposites.

But it must not be supposed that perfect by the same shade of yellow will suit every old nor middle aged. They afford one a curious study as they parcan the columns. After jotting down a few addresses they throw the paper on the table, and, with painful weariness, leave the room.—New York Press.

MISS BOWERS' WELCOME

RECITAL AT SEMINARY HALL A GREAT SUCCESS.

A Summery Evening, but a Large and Well Satisfied Audience. The Programme.

Notwithstanding the thunder, lightning and heavy rain last evening, the seating capacity of Seminary Hall, on West Seventh street, was taxed to its utmost, the cream of Plainfield society being represented. The occasion was a recital given by Miss Maude Bowers, who was assisted by Miss Gertrude Marchand and the New York College Banjo Quartette. Miss Bowers has recently completed her elocutionary studies at the Boston school of art. She delivers her readings in an easy, graceful manner. Her talent was much admired last evening by her friends. Miss Marchand who assisted, is a tall graceful blonde, and renders her recitations in a dashing or languid manner as the piece may require. Her style is opposite to that of Miss Bowers and formed a pleasing contrast.

The New York College Banjo Quartette very pleased several times.

Miss Bowers and Miss Marchand were each favored by their friends in the audience with an elegant bouquet of flowers. They were favored repeatedly throughout the entertainment, and on the occasion made very clever responses.

The following is the programme:

(The Lady of Shalott was a story of a high strung girl of Boston who had her notions of the outside world reflected in a looking glass, and not Tennyson's Lady of Shalott as many supposed. The story was very pathetic.)

The Recital throughout was a great success.

A Successful Festival.

One of the most successful strawberry and ice cream festivals which has ever been held in the Bethel Mission took place there last evening. There was a large crowd in attendance and all present seemed to vie with each other in making the affair as enjoyable as possible, and it could be seen by the smiling faces that their efforts were not in vain. The music for the occasion was furnished by Orlando's orchestra and was up to the standard. This mission is conducted by Spicketown avenue church and its success, under the superintendency of Mr. S. A. Glass, is unparalleled.

Mad Dog on Front Street.

Shortly after one o'clock this afternoon a mad dog scattered pedestrians right and left on West Front street. The animal ran into Todd's bakery, but was finally ejected before it succeeded in doing any damage. It then went down Park avenue to Second street, where it attempted to bite several persons who were passing, but the muzzle which it wore prevented it from so doing. The animal finally made its escape. It was a Scotch terrier.

Injured by a Collision.

Just after seven o'clock last evening, as Mr. J. E. Rosymon, of Dunellen, North Plainfield, was driving along Front street in the vicinity of Grant avenue, another vehicle which was going in an opposite direction collided with the wagon in which he was riding. The force of the collision threw Mr. Rosymon to the hard road bed and badly lacerated the left side of his face. The horse which he was driving was very gentle and consequently did not run away.

Fined for Insulting a Lady.

John O'Connor, a merchant, was arrested last evening charged with insulting a lady. This morning when arraigned before City Judge Codington he pleaded not guilty. The Judge gave him a trial, and after hearing the testimony the accused was adjudged guilty and given the choice of paying a fifty-dollar fine or spending the next twenty days at the County jail at Elizabeth. He will probably pay the fine.

National Division Meeting.

The National Division, S. of T., of North America will convene in annual session at Ocean Grove on July 9. The Grand Division of New Jersey will entertain the National delegates and a special session of that body has been called for 10 o'clock a. m. on that date, to formally receive the representatives from the national jurisdictions which include this country and the Dominion of Canada.

A Social Evening.

The United Christian Social Circle entertained its friends in Vanderbeek's Hall last evening. The entertainment consisted of music, recitations, readings, etc. The affair was a success and was apparently enjoyed by all present. At its conclusion, refreshments were served and a half hour of social intercourse followed.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS.

The Proceedings in the Court of General Quarter Sessions.

Criminal cases are occupying the daily sessions of the Union County Courts. Wednesday there were two or three indictments tried, and several arraignments.

Barney McGrea returned a plea of not guilty of assault and battery, and pleaded non volt. He gave bail for appearance.

Timothy Carmody pleaded not guilty to a charge of assault and battery, and his trial was appointed for Friday.

William Hourke pleaded guilty to larceny, and was sentenced to the county jail for five months.

Patrick Dowling was placed on trial yesterday afternoon, charged with committing an assault on Joseph Miller. The men are employed in the New Jersey Extraction works. Dowling testified that the complainant attacked him, and the assault with which he was charged was committed in self defense.

Hon. John T. Dunn defended Dowling. The jury were not charged until yesterday morning.

The jury in the case of Henry Carter, who was tried for assault and battery, were out all night and failed to agree upon a verdict.

Yesterday morning the jury in the case of Patrick Dowling were charged and retired for deliberation.

A recess was then occupied by the trial of the indictment against Joseph Novello, for assault and battery. Hon. Foster M. Voorhees conducted the defence. Novello was alleged to have assaulted his countrywoman, Anna Corvi. The parties are all residents of the Italian colony in the Third ward, Elizabeth.

The jury found Novello not guilty.

In the case of Patrick Dowling the jury came in yesterday afternoon with a verdict of guilty as charged in the indictment.

Fright Hopkins, a colored boy of the name of Willis Mudd, was next tried on an allegation for malicious mischief. The jury without leaving their seats returned a verdict of not guilty.

A REPUBLICAN POST OFFICE.

Republicans of Plainfield Must Get Mail Over a Barroom.

PLAINFIELD, June 13—The Common Council last March Removed William Schorb to run a liquor saloon under the Post Office building. Vigorous and indignant protests were entered, by leading citizens. The outraged Republicans, who do not want their children to go for mail over a barroom, sent a protest to Washington.

A speedy removal of the Post Office from the objectionable quarters was promised. One or two fine sites was accepted, and Plainfield was happy again, but Tuesday morning government workmen began to remodel the Post Office in its old tenancy and it was announced that no change of location would be made.

Objectionable saloon smells, sounds, and sights will therefore continue to assail the senses of children, men and women who have occasion to call for mail at the bar-room Post Office. Present citizens country their forefathers signed by a faithless administration. —Newark Journal. (Dem.)

The above information from the Journal's local correspondent is slightly misleading. The administration has endeavored to find a new location for the town office, because of the barroom in the basement licensed by a Democratic council regardless of the protests of our respectable citizens. The lease of the post office building does not expire until next year, and then it is understood for another building will be selected, possibly the Clarkson building, now occupied on the ground floor by Mr. Thompson Park, who holds a lease until that time for his store for the sale of musical instruments and music.

Meanwhile the post office is simply being enlarged to obtain room for the clerks and carriers, as has already been reported in THE NEWS.

Eager for a Contest. But Too Impolite About It.

EDITOR OF THE EVENING NEWS:—As the management of the Rahway Base Ball Club are mouthing around a good deal about their club being able to down the Crescents, and as we don't believe all these blatherskites say, why want it be a good idea to get a game on between the clubs to show that we are the people and they in the soup. S. G. ANDREW.

[But why so discourteous about it? If, as you correctly intimate, the Rahway club's is composed of "blatherskites, "why should so gentlemanly a club as the Crescents care to play with them at all. If one stoops to the methods of the blackguard or blatherskite He is likely to himself be regarded one. The Rahway club, presumed to be composed of persons of at least gentlemanly instincts, would naturally feel unkindly toward those who would refer to them as above. The club has possibly been misrepresented to our correspondent, and to its reputation seems to have overlooked the courtesy which goes with good breeding, and pays best in the long run. We refer to the matter so fully because it may tend to prevent a repetition of the ill-natured acts which last year so embittered the Plainfield and Somerville teams against each other.—Ed.]

A $35 WATCH STOLEN.

A Discharged Barrender Suspected of the Theft.

On Wednesday, June 4th, Mr. Charles Smith of West Front street went to New York and engaged a bartender for one week on trial, with the understanding that if he was competent to fill the position he was to have steady employment. Last Wednesday his time was up, and as he did not understand the business thoroughly Mr. Smith discharged him, at the same time warning his other employes to look out for their clothing, etc. The discharged bartender went to his room to get his clothing and shortly afterward took his departure. Yesterday morning Frederick Hilbert, a waiter employed in the place, went to get his watch and chain but found that they were missing, and he naturally concluded that the discharged bartender had stolen it. He immediately telegraphed to the New York authorities, but as yet he has not recovered his property.

The watch and chain was valued at $35.

The Gaston Will Case.—Another "Scoop" for the Lawyers.

In the matter of the contest of the will of the late Robert Gaston a settlement has been agreed upon by the parties in interest, and has been ratified by the Orphans' Court.

The terms of the settlement are that the executors withdraw their caveat and the will be admitted to probate. The specific legacies in the will are to be paid off, and the residuary legatees, the Board of Foreign Missions of the Reformed church, agree to accept $13,000 in full of their claim. The lawyers engaged in the case receive $5,000 divided as follows:

Cortlandt Parker, his son Chauncey and Hugh K. Gaston, $1,000 each; James R. English, $1,000, and Clark & Read, $1,000. The amount of these fees was fixed by the Messrs. Parker and Mr. English.

Base Ball To-Morrow.

The Crescent Base Ball Club will cross bats with the celebrated Hackett-Carhart nine to-morrow afternoon, weather permitting. The game is looked for ward to with much interest as the Crescents have not been defeated since their re-organization on June 30th. The nines will be made up as follows:

Crescents—Martin, s.s.; Lafferty, 3b.; Wiegand, 1b.; Jones, c.; Gillis, c.f.; Gregg, p.; Lee, 2b.; Walker, l.f.; McAdoo, r.f.

Hackett-Carhart—Morehead, s.s.; Kraus, c.; Hammel, c.f.; Divus, 1b.; Berry, 3b.; Abel, l.f.; Nugent, 2b.; Carmichael, r.f.; Tierney, p.; Gough, extra.

A Model Employer.

The employees of the Potter Press Works presented a petition to Mr. Potter this morning asking that their wages be paid weekly instead of twice a month as at present. Mr. Potter said it gave him pleasure to comply with the wishes of his workmen, and that on and after July 1st, their wages would be paid as requested.

MISS AUSTIN'S COMPOSITION.

Her Efforts Secured a Flag for the School She Attends.

We publish to-day the composition written by Miss Margaret B. Austin and in acknowledgment of which the Youth's Companion awarded a silk American flag to the Warrenville public school, of which Miss Mamie O'Connor of Rahway is the principal. Below is the essay which failed to reach us in time for publication yesterday:

The school house is the children's castle. Everything within and around it is peculiarly their own. Place a flag there and a feeling of proprietorship is awakened and the germ of patriotism is planted. To the little one on the first going to school, it is a plaything. They are attracted by its bright colors and beauty. As they grow older, and learn the meaning, is the nursery of patriotism, the public school. "God bless our Flag," they know a real, living, breathing flag is floating over them with lovely benediction.

As they grow physically and mentally developed, they daily commune with the flag, combined with the study of history, makes the girls and boys thoughtful, and a deeper love for the flag comes with the Thirty-eight States and thirteen stripes, of which blood was the price. Thousands of homes were made desolate that the flag might be united and have a flag which now becomes to them the symbol of "Liberty and Union." And she is not confined to any one section. All the children of our broad land will be influenced by the flag, which is the symbol of peace, abiding and moral influence growing with their growth and strengthening with their strength.

And now our flag, emblazoned with its forty two stars, representing the prosperity, wealth and vigor of our young republic, under whose free government we enjoy the blessings of civil liberty, respected by the world,

Do We Hate England?

No; we do not hate England, say, it The North American Review, a symposium of writers as follows: T. W. Higginson, Andrew Carnegie, Murat Halstead, Gen. Horace Porter, Rev. Robert Collyer, Gen. James H. Wilson and Mayo W. Hazeltine. They give their impressions in answer to Goldwin Smith's paper on American hatred of England. Still, most of them admit that there is in some quarters in this country a prejudice against Great Britain, a very little one, that is, and each in his way explains it.

Col. Higginson, whose ancestors came over in the Mayflower, says the British and American nations dislike each other cordially, as a whole, but love each other dearly as individuals, and he quotes Hawthorne's remark: "If an Englishman were individually acquainted with every one of our 25,000,000 of Americans and liked every one of them, and believed that each man of those millions was a Christian, honest, upright and kind, he would doubt, despise and hate them in the aggregate, however he might love them as individuals."

Andrew Carnegie writes that adult Americans like England, but that the young people, fresh from the study of the revolutionary war, do cherish a vague bitterness toward the mother country, but that, too, is dispelled in time. Our wars henceforth are to be industrial ones. Murat Halstead says there is no such thing on this continent as hatred of England and he is surprised that so much misinformation can be concentrated in a few pages. Horace Porter observes that when Goldwin Smith undertook to write about American hatred of England he merely "wanted something craggy to break his mind against."

Gen. Porter, Robert Collyer, Gen. Wilson and Mr. Hazeltine all cast into the teeth of the old country her open hostility to the Union during the critical days of the civil war, and yet they affirm that even then we do not hate England, for the unkindly feeling is passing away. Mr. Hazeltine says there is on the part of English descended Americans an earnest longing to be the best of friends with the old country, and when England is ready to love us we shall be ready to love her back again.

Bismarck and William.

Having got rid of Bismarck in his council of state, Emperor William is now endeavoring to clap an extinguisher on him so he cannot hurt him. He threatens unless Bismarck shuts up and ceases to criticise the imperial policy that he will make it very uncomfortable for the ex-chancellor.

What Bismarck's meditations are at this time it would be hard to describe. Probably language, English or German, would fail to do justice to the subject. William was the child of Bismarck's fostering care. He brought him up on the Bismarck model, to dislike the English and snub his own mother. William was to represent the idea of imperialism in its grandest form, the idea Bismarck spent his life to advance. Blood and iron were the forces on which the lad was taught, to depend for the perpetuity of his realm. He was taught to brook no contradiction of the imperial will.

And now the boy of Bismarck's love and pride turns and rends him. William learned his lessons too well. That is the trouble. But William must learn one more lesson, learn in his turn the lesson that Bismarck is learning now in loneliness and silence; that it takes a higher, kindlier power than brute force to win in the long run.

In the Medical Record.

In the Medical Record Dr. C. L. Dana contends that after all electricity has destroyed far fewer lives than either gas or steam has done. It is true that we never think of blaming steam or gas when a boiler explodes, or ignorant people blow out the gas in their room and suffocate themselves. Those occurrences excite no comment beyond that of sympathy with the victims, but when an individual is slain by the electric light wire at once public indignation is excited against the companies that own the wires. Public indignation ought to go to the extent of seeing that every precaution is taken to secure safety; still there is reason in all things. Dr. Dana declares that the railroads of this country kill annually over 2,500 people. Where does the doctor get his statistics?

Senator Evarts Talks

He Presents His Views on the Silver Question.

DEMONETIZATION DENOUNCED.

The New York Statesman Says Money Can Never Be Safely Treated as a Commodity—Senator Vance Says More Money Is Needed by the Country.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—In the senate Mr. Platt gave notice that immediately after the consideration of the silver bill he would ask the senate to consider the bill for the admission of Wyoming as a state. Mr. Davis presented the conference report on the dependent pension bill. After some debate the report went over and was ordered printed with the bill as agreed to by the conference committees. The silver bill was then taken up and Mr. Evarts addressed the senate.

Senator Evarts on Silver.

After a philosophical review of the history of the precious metals Mr. Evarts brought the matter down to 1873, at which time he said the two metals were (and had been since 1803) on a parity. It was no law of trade or of nature that broke up that parity. It was "the wit and the wisdom of man." The two metals had been brought together by money found tied together, their relative value being fixed by a comparison of the labor needed to bring them into existence. Sixteen days of "labor, for instance, were necessary to produce as much of gold as one day's labor could produce of silver." That was the thing happened in 1872. Silver was then worth in the market 59 pence—which was par with gold. In 1878 it had gone down to 52 pence; in 1881, to 52 pence; and in 1886 (when the bullion was reached) to 46 pence. What stupendous event in nature, he asked, had produced that sudden change; what freak had produced that disorder? Nothing whatever but the folly of man.

A "Murderous Threat" at Silver.

Not satisfied with the wisdom and experience of the world, they had made the experiment of demonetising silver. He characterized the act of 1873 as a "murderous threat" at silver, and said that every blow struck under the "drastic act" had covered was a blow of positive law. And yet the argument was made now that the effort to rearrange by law the ratio of gold and silver was like trying to put one physical body in the space occupied by another. The people of the United States, through their authentic representatives in the two houses of congress and in their election of the executive, had, in his opinion, determined that they would not allow the disgrace and disorder to continue, either in regard to their domestic money or their money in relation to commerce.

Money as a Commodity.

Speaking of the proposed opening of the American mints to the silver of the world, Mr. Evarts said that with the difference in ratio (15½ in Europe and 16 in this country) that measure would be attended by inextinguishable loss if it were decided also to cause the opening of the mints abroad to silver. The proposition to receive silver for the benefit of the treasury and to pay for it in certificates, leaving the transaction at the will of the owner of the bullion, had never approved itself to his judgment. He regarded it as being a step backward. Money could never be safely treated as a commodity. It was not to be treated as anything but the force and propulsion of business.

More Money Needed.

Mr. Vance next addressed the senate. Nothing was better established, he said, than the fact of the necessity of more money for the progress and prosperity of the country. The wealth of the world had increased ten fold within the last fifty years, and the output of the precious metals had kept pace neither with the growth of wealth nor with the population. In consequence of this deficient circulation the prices of all products were lower than they ever had been before. He favored the unlimited coinage of silver money and the restoration of silver as it was before it was demonetised. He believed that it was only a question of courage, and that if the United States made a beginning in opening the door to the unlimited coinage of silver the commercial countries of the world would follow the example.

Mr. Morgan Favors Free Coinage.

Mr. Morgan next addressed the senate, particularly in reference to the amendments reported by the finance committee. He said it appeared to him that if the United States should take the lead in this matter and restore silver as a money metal commerce would be stimulated; more abundant crops would be produced; more abundant factories turned out by factories, and there would be an increased activity in the exchanges of those products and commodities. Without concluding his remarks Mr. Morgan yielded to a motion to adjourn.

In the House.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—In the house Mr. Mills' resignation as a member of the committee on rules was accepted and Mr. McMillan (Tenn.) was appointed in his place. The conference report on the anti-trust bill was rejected. Mr. Stewart (Vt.) moved a further conference with instructions to the house conferees to recede from the house amendment. Agreed to by yeas 138, nays 98.

To Investigate the Cunard Company.

Mr. Hitt (Ills.), from the committee on foreign affairs, reported back the Lodge resolution calling on the secretary of the treasury for information as to the refusal of the Cunard steamship company to give a return passage to certain immigrants who entered this country in violation of the contract labor law. Adopted. Mr. Morrow (Cal.) presented the conference report on the pension appropriation bill. The report, which is a disagreeing one, was adopted, and a further conference was ordered.

The Agricultural Bill Passed.

On motion of Mr. Funston (Kan.), the house then went into committee of the whole (Mr. Payson, of Illinois, in the chair), for the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill. Mr. Funston made a brief explanation of the details of the bill, saying that the committee had had economy in view at every stage. The bill was passed.

O'Hara, of Olean, Third district of New York; Jay D. Dessteel, of Franklin, Thirty-fourth district of New York; Henry H. Hornbrook, of Evansville, First district of Indiana, and Albert S. A HALT CALLED.

The President Vetoes Another Public Building Bill.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—The president returned to the house without his approval the bill appropriating $150,000 for a public building at Tuscaloosa, Ala. In his message accompanying the bill the president says: "Judging by its postal revenues the post office at Tuscaloosa is in the office the postoffice at Tuscaloosa is not an important one. It has only one clerk at a salary of $1,000 and no carriers. The report of the postmaster general shows that the gross receipts for the year 1889 were $6,579 and the net revenues less than $4,000. The annual receipts have only increased by $2,000 in ten years. The rent now paid for a building having 2,300 square feet floor space is $275. The general proposition to erect post office buildings at a large expense in cities of the size of Tuscaloosa would not, I am sure, receive the sanction of congress."

"It would involve an expenditure for buildings of ten times the present net revenues for such offices, and in the case under consideration would involve an increase of cost of rent of 1,100 per cent greater than the rent now paid for the use of a room ample in size. I would not insist that the foregoing facts alone as to the proposed public building must yield an interest on the investment, but in the present uncertain state of public revenues and expenditures resulting from existing and probable legislation there is, in my opinion, an absolute necessity that expenditures for public buildings should be limited to cases where the public needs are very evident and very imperative. It is clear that this is not such a case."

Eugene Cowles' Deposition.

MONTREAL, June 13.—Judge Desmeyers devoted the morning to considering whether or not he should discharge from custody Eugene H. Cowles, who is under arrest, charging Eugene H. Cowles, of Cleveland. Cowles made a statement which practically clears Hale, but the judge refused to discharge Hale until another attempt can be made to hold him on a charge of assault. In his deposition Cowles says: "I stated to Hale and my wife several times that my object in coming to Canada on account of my child would be shot by me if I did not get protection of the court in time. The statement was made against any one who would try to deprive me of my child illegally. *I will not accuse my brother-in-*law with shooting me with intent to do me harm. I believe he was instrumental out of his mind, having been wrought up to that state by witnessing the sufferings of my wife, and I believe that both my wife and Mr. Hale incapable of doing an evil act, more especially of doing me any harm."

Speaker Reed Complimented.

AUGUSTA, Me., June 13.—At the Republican state convention Governor Burleigh was renominated by acclamation and highly recognizes among other things: "The munificent and successful contest made by the Republicans in the house of representatives for the rights of the majority to transact the business of the country under the leadership of Speaker Reed, who has, by the courageous discharge of his duty, done honor to the state and a great public service to the country." The Third district Republican convention nominated Seth L. Milliken, of Belfast, for congress by acclamation.

Ex-Treasurer Archer's Defalcation.

BALTIMORE, June 13.—The committee of the Maryland legislature appointed to investigate State Treasurer Archer's defalcation has now completed their report. It gives the total amount of the defalcation as $132,401.28, the disposition of all of which except about $10,000 in bonds has been accounted for. The bonds are fairly secured that Mr. Archer had gambled. The committee says the funds were used by him to pay off personal indebtedness incurred by him as far back as the time he represented the Second district in congress.

Ives & Stayner's Affairs.

NEW YORK, June 13.—The report of Referee Stetson in the matter of winding up the affairs of Ives & Stayner has been filed. The original liabilities of the firm were $400,000, but $150,000 has been extinguished by closing out of loans, sales of securities, etc. The total amount of claims presented before the referee was $8,584,874. Ninety-eight per cent. of these agreed to accept 5 per cent. The others will receive about 4½ per cent.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—The president has sent to the senate the following nominations: First Lieutenant J. A. Buchanan, Fourteenth infantry, to be captain; Second Lieutenant William R. Reynolds, Fourteenth infantry, to be first lieutenant; Dr. Benjamin W. Brown, of Virginia, to be assistant surgeon, with the Marine hospital service of the United States.

SENATOR FASSETT IS ACCUSED.

Alleged Attempt at Bribery in the Massachusetts Legislature in Connection with the Elevated Railroad Bills—The Interesting Testimony of Several Witnesses.

BOSTON, June 13.—The hearing regarding the alleged corrupt practices of the West End Street Railway company in obtaining its elevated road bill through the legislature was resumed yesterday morning before the special investigating committee on the part of the senate.

Testimony of Senator Sanderson.

The first witness heard was Frank E. Sanderson, who testified that on May 22 Senator Fassett met him and Louis P. Hagar, a lobbyist, at the office of the Burton Stock company, No. 194 Washington street, and that the senator had told witness that for $10,000 apiece he could furnish ten senators, including himself, to vote in favor of granting a charter to the People's Elevated Railroad company. Witness arranged a meeting between Senator Fassett and the financial men of the company. He did not himself attend the meeting.

The Offer Unauthorized.

In the afternoon session J. C. Moors, of The Manchester Union, testified that at the interview described by Mr. Sanderson it was stated as positive that ten senators could be captured for $100,000, but at another interview later in the day Senator Fassett said he was afraid he could not hold them for so much. The West End railroad people were offering greater inducements. Witness had not offered or consented to the proposed bribe. Mr. Moore said that Mr. Hagar offered $100,000 to Senator Fassett for ten votes was unauthorized. The People's company had no such sum to offer for the passage of the bill. Hagar was employed by Senator Fassett. Mr. Hilliard then introduced the letter written by Senator Fassett to Mr. Hagar, as follows:

"DEAR HAGAR—I hope you have made up my mind to go with the West End people, and for that reason I think it would not be of any use for me to see Mr. Moore.

"A. S. FASSETT."

He Caught On.

Mr. Pranker, one of the People's railway petitioners, testified that he arranged the interview between Fassett and Moore. Hagar assured witness Monday that the People's had twenty-four senators, but the next day the whole crowd went over to the West Enders. Witness afterward asked Senator Fassett about the matter, and Donovan replied that he saw his colleagues were deserting the People's, and in order not to get left he caught on.

As to Unsatisfied Lie.

Lewis P. Hagar testified that he was employed by the People's company to look after the senate. Sanderson was to give him a list of senators who were for sale. He told the latter shall be forthwith replied "No" when asked if he had such an interview as described by Witnesses Sanderson and Moore. He cross-examined Moore appealing to God to witness that the statement of those witnesses was an unqualified lie. Witness denied that he had made any bargain with Fassett to give $100,000 for ten votes. He had received about $800 from Sanderson.

John C. Watson, of Beverly, testified that he was at the state house just after several of the elevated road petitions had been rejected, and heard Sanderson say: "D—n it, I'll see that every elevated road bill if we can't have ours."

SENATOR EVARTS TALKS

He Presents His Views on the Silver Question.

DEMONETIZATION DENOUNCED.

The New York Statesman Says Money Can Never Be Safely Treated as a Commodity—Senator Vance Says More Money Is Needed by the Country.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—In the senate Mr. Platt gave notice that immediately after the consideration of the silver bill he would ask the senate to consider the bill for the admission of Wyoming as a state. Mr. Davis presented the conference report on the dependent pension bill. After some debate the report went over and was ordered printed with the bill as agreed to by the conference committees. The silver bill was then taken up and Mr. Evarts addressed the senate.

Senator Evarts on Silver.

After a philosophical review of the history of the precious metals Mr. Evarts brought the matter down to 1873, at which time he said the two metals were (and had been since 1803) on a parity. It was no law of trade or of nature that broke up that parity. It was "the wit and the wisdom of man." The two metals had been brought together by money found tied together, their relative value being fixed by a comparison of the labor needed to bring them into existence. Sixteen days of "labor, for instance, were necessary to produce as much of gold as one day's labor could produce of silver." That was the thing happened in 1872. Silver was then worth in the market 59 pence—which was par with gold. In 1878 it had gone down to 52 pence; in 1881, to 52 pence; and in 1886 (when the bullion was reached) to 46 pence. What stupendous event in nature, he asked, had produced that sudden change; what freak had produced that disorder? Nothing whatever but the folly of man.

A "Murderous Threat" at Silver.

Not satisfied with the wisdom and experience of the world, they had made the experiment of demonetising silver. He characterized the act of 1873 as a "murderous threat" at silver, and said that every blow struck under the "drastic act" had covered was a blow of positive law. And yet the argument was made now that the effort to rearrange by law the ratio of gold and silver was like trying to put one physical body in the space occupied by another. The people of the United States, through their authentic representatives in the two houses of congress and in their election of the executive, had, in his opinion, determined that they would not allow the disgrace and disorder to continue, either in regard to their domestic money or their money in relation to commerce.

Money as a Commodity.

Speaking of the proposed opening of the American mints to the silver of the world, Mr. Evarts said that with the difference in ratio (15½ in Europe and 16 in this country) that measure would be attended by inextinguishable loss if it were decided also to cause the opening of the mints abroad to silver. The proposition to receive silver for the benefit of the treasury and to pay for it in certificates, leaving the transaction at the will of the owner of the bullion, had never approved itself to his judgment. He regarded it as being a step backward. Money could never be safely treated as a commodity. It was not to be treated as anything but the force and propulsion of business.

More Money Needed.

Mr. Vance next addressed the senate. Nothing was better established, he said, than the fact of the necessity of more money for the progress and prosperity of the country. The wealth of the world had increased ten fold within the last fifty years, and the output of the precious metals had kept pace neither with the growth of wealth nor with the population. In consequence of this deficient circulation the prices of all products were lower than they ever had been before. He favored the unlimited coinage of silver money and the restoration of silver as it was before it was demonetised. He believed that it was only a question of courage, and that if the United States made a beginning in opening the door to the unlimited coinage of silver the commercial countries of the world would follow the example.

Mr. Morgan Favors Free Coinage.

Mr. Morgan next addressed the senate, particularly in reference to the amendments reported by the finance committee. He said it appeared to him that if the United States should take the lead in this matter and restore silver as a money metal commerce would be stimulated; more abundant crops would be produced; more abundant factories turned out by factories, and there would be an increased activity in the exchanges of those products and commodities. Without concluding his remarks Mr. Morgan yielded to a motion to adjourn.

In the House.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—In the house Mr. Mills' resignation as a member of the committee on rules was accepted and Mr. McMillan (Tenn.) was appointed in his place. The conference report on the anti-trust bill was rejected. Mr. Stewart (Vt.) moved a further conference with instructions to the house conferees to recede from the house amendment. Agreed to by yeas 138, nays 98.

To Investigate the Cunard Company.

Mr. Hitt (Ills.), from the committee on foreign affairs, reported back the Lodge resolution calling on the secretary of the treasury for information as to the refusal of the Cunard steamship company to give a return passage to certain immigrants who entered this country in violation of the contract labor law. Adopted. Mr. Morrow (Cal.) presented the conference report on the pension appropriation bill. The report, which is a disagreeing one, was adopted, and a further conference was ordered.

The Agricultural Bill Passed.

On motion of Mr. Funston (Kan.), the house then went into committee of the whole (Mr. Payson, of Illinois, in the chair), for the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill. Mr. Funston made a brief explanation of the details of the bill, saying that the committee had had economy in view at every stage. The bill was passed.

BLOOD MAY BE SPILLED.

Prohibitionists Are Ready to Use the Musket.

JOSEPH COOK'S WARLIKE WORDS.

General Orders at the Temperance Congress Think Bloodshed Alone Will Suppress the Saloon—Samuel Gompers Says Workingmen Are Indifferent.

NEW YORK, June 12.—The National Temperance congress finished its labors yesterday. Its conclusions were formulated in the shape of resolutions, but most of the speeches were overwhelmingly in favor of straight out prohibition and against any compromise with the liquor traffic in the shape of high license. The speakers were even more emphatic than on the first day, and most sanguinary hints were dropped that the fight against the saloons might become a fight in dead earnest in which blood would be spilled.

Ready to Shoulder the Musket.

"Should there be a political party whose dominant idea is the prohibition of the liquor traffic?" was the first query propounded to the convention. The Rev. Dr. E. E. Carroll answered it in the negative. The constitution, he said, conferred no power to impose upon the people a national prohibition law.

John Bascom, D. D., ex-president of the University of Wisconsin, favored a political prohibition party because nothing to any extent could be got out of existing parties. Then followed a lot of red hot political speeches. Henry Clay Bascom said that if the constitution didn't permit prohibition it was time to get rid of it. If ability was dominant in this country he was prepared to shoulder the musket.

Explaining Recent Defeats.

The topic taken up at the afternoon session was "To what causes is to be attributed the failure of the prohibition amendments in the late contests in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and Rhode Island?" Mrs. H. H. Faxon, of Massachusetts, undertook to explain how it happened in Massachusetts. He said that it was due to high license, the export tax of lots of money by the rum power, scarcity of cash in the hands of Prohibitionists, a venial press and all itself to the highest bidder, apathetic politicians and so on. He practically the same fashion Henry B. Metcalf explained the defeat in Rhode Island and Senator Palmer the reverses in Pennsylvania. Col. Hadley, of this city, was down on beer, and said that the cause of temperance wouldn't make any headway as long as the temperance people were disposed to let up on it.

The Laboring Man Indifferent.

The next subject taken up was "The attitude of laboring men toward the liquor traffic." Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, was the next speaker. He said that most workingmen looked with considerable indifference upon temperance agitation. Liquor traffic reformers, when they were workers of labor, were generally a little more harsh and unfair than other employers. Prohibition meant stopping the poor man from getting his beer by shutting up the saloons, while the rich man could drink his drinks in comfort at home. Where prohibition had been tried it resulted only in worse liquor at higher prices. People wouldn't be made total abstainers by law. What laboring men needed were better wages, shorter hours, and more comfortable homes. Then the saloons would not offer the temptations they now do. Then laboring men would have time and, perhaps, inclination to think the matter over and get over to the conclusion that it would be worth while to be total abstainers.

In Sympathy with Prohibitionists.

Mr. T. B. Wakeman said that laboring men as a class had no sympathy with Prohibitionists. Prohibitionists stood for sumptuary laws, backed by religious fanaticism. The Prohibitionist said in effect to the working man, "I am holier than thou: sit down." Cries of dissent resounded through the church, but Dr. Deems stopped them by insisting that Mr. Wakeman should have a fair hearing. Mr. Wakeman opposed his assertion that Prohibitionists as a class put on airs of righteousness that were offensive to workingmen. Prohibitionists would never succeed unless they got the workingmen with them. At present the liquor question stood athwart the path of prohibition. To bring the workingmen to their side the Prohibitionists would have to change their methods. Some plan would have to be devised that would put rich and poor on an equality with respect to the application of prohibition.

Joseph Cook's War Cry.

Then came Joseph Cook, of Boston, made an "Appeal to Philip Sober." It was decidedly sensational. Speaking of the power of the saloon he said, "I fear that we may substantially meet the musket. We may have horrible riots yet. When the path to political preferment leads through the gin mill free government is a farce and the saloon may control a country." He spoke in his high license, and quoted with approval an epigram, the author of which he said ought to be remembered 1,000 years: "Low license sells for your sons; high license for your daughter also."

Ministers, he said, were excluded from membership in most Protestant churches because their business was so mischievous and discreditable. He wished that he could call the Roman Catholic church up to the same high level in this respect. Then the counsellor would be practically without a church.

Blood Would Flow.

"No Sectionalism in the Temperance Work" was the subject assigned to Gen. Green Clay Smith, of Kentucky. He, too, was very much afraid that the musket would have to be used and blood would flow before the fight for prohibition could be won. The last speech was made by the Rev. John H. Hector, a colored brother. He said that in slavery times the negroes were kept free from whisky. Because of this they were today the healthiest and strongest race on the continent.

He Stole $1,000.

PHILADELPHIA, June 13.—Daniel B. Wallace, of Lynn, Mass., has been arrested here, charged with embezzling $1,000 from Norman McLean, a grocer of Lynn, by whom he was employed. The prisoner was committed for a hearing on Wednesday in default of bail. He acknowledged his guilt and expressed a willingness to return to Massachusetts without a requisition.

He Pleaded Guilty.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., June 13.—Edward Costello, who shot and killed his infant son, pleaded guilty to murder in the first degree, stating that he fully realized the enormity of his crime and that he should be hanged. He was sent to jail until Sept. 16, when the grand jury will act on the case.

The jury found a verdict of no cause of action.

Known Only by Numbers.

WASHINGTON, March 13.—Census Supervisor Ashley, of the Fifth Pennsylvania district, has started in Superintendent Porter that the Huns, Poles and many of the Italians composing the foreign element in Lackawanna, Luzerne and Carbon counties refuse to give any information to census enumerators. These people employed by companies and contractors, he says, are known only by numbers. The supervisor suggested that the enumerators be instructed to take account of such employes by their numbers. Superintendent Porter did not like the idea and informed the supervisor that the census office would not help to perpetuate a state of things where large numbers of laborers are treated more like beasts of burden than men and known only by numbers. He then gave positive instructions that a sufficient number of enumerators and interpreters be employed to procure the information called for by the census schedules.

Revealed by a Lightning Flash.

PHILADELPHIA, June 13.—During the height of Wednesday night's thunder storm Inspector Winiam Lenard, of the custom house, while patrolling his beat at Point Breeze, discovered an attempt to smuggle 400 bottles of brandy from the German bank steamship Energia. The vessel lies loaded with oil all ready for sea, but is prevented sailing by the customs authorities. Inspector Lennard was keeping under the lee of one of the sheds to avoid the rain, when he saw by a flash of lightning a small boat alongside the Energia's stern, and a number of men on the steamer's deck. He made a spring and captured one Ulrich, who afterward told him he was the owner of the boat and had been hired to row the brandy ashore.

That Big Baltimore and Ohio Purchase.

BALTIMORE, June 13.—Edward R. Bacon today paid over to the state of Maryland between $1,200,000 and $1,300,000 for the preferred Baltimore and Ohio stock which the state still holds. He also settled with the Hopkins university for the capital stock he bought of it. Mr. Bacon declines to say what parties are in the syndicate with him, but presumed, when all the negotiations are completed, the public should be told who are interested with him in the purchase he has made of the Baltimore and Ohio stock, which already aggregate more than $5,000,000.

Officials of the company are holding a conference with the employes, and it is believed that all difficulties will be settled at this meeting.

PHILADELPHIA, June 12.—Policeman Taylor arrested John Smith, colored, for selling liquor without a license and also selling on Sunday. When the officer and prisoner reached Tenth and Jefferson streets the latter tripped Taylor and ran away, with Taylor in pursuit. As they reached the railroad crossing at Ninth and Jefferson streets a train was approaching. Smith crossed the tracks in safety, but Taylor was struck by the engine and dangerously injured. Smith escaped.

Not a Bid Offered.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Navy department officials were greatly chagrined when at the opening of bids for the opening of bids for the construction of the two steam tugs, not a single proposal had been received. There is no lack of interest by ship builders in the proposed tugs, but it is generally understood that they consider the stipulations in the advertisements too severe and exacting. Readvertisements will probably be published, but no action has yet been decided upon.

A Fatal Wreck.

PHILADELPHIA, June 12.—A freight train on the River front road in the upper section of this city struck an open switch, causing a collision which threw a loaded car into Gunners run, a small stream crossed by the railroad. John Fallack, an employe of Hughes & Patterson's iron works, was carried into the water and drowned. John Dunn, another employe of the same firm, had his thigh fractured and was otherwise injured. His condition is serious.

Denver's Great Strike.

DENVER, Colo., June 13.—Twelve hundred carpenters have quit work to sustain the 400 machine woodworkers and bench millmen who have been out a month demanding nine hours' work with ten hours' pay. A Big Bridge Suit Decided.

NEW YORK, June 13.—The trial of the suits of P. W. Callender & Co. to recover from the Union Bridge company $100,000 as commission for securing a $2,000,000 contract for building the Poughkeepsie bridge resulted in a verdict for the defendant before Judge Barrett in the supreme court.

WHAT SHALL WE WEAR?

NEW STYLES INTRODUCED FOR THE SUMMER OF 1890.

Two Pleasing Coiffures—A Dressy Effect for Evening and a Simple, Graceful Style for Day Wear—Together They Offer a Decided Contrast.

In the accompanying cut we present two modes in hair dressing which will doubtless find favor with our lady readers. Figure 1 illustrates what is known as the pompadour, and is designed for evening dress. This carries out the prevailing Greek style, with the addition of waves and loops of hair arranged so as to fall to the nape of the neck, but closely following the contour of the head. This produces an exceedingly dressy effect.

COIFFURE CLASSIQUE AND COIFFURE MATINEE.

The remaining figure shows the coiffure matinee, designed for day or evening wear; simple and graceful. This style will be welcomed by many ladies to whom the high style of hair dressing is not becoming. It is a decided improvement over stiff, formal plaits.

Summer Gowns.

It will be the fashion to show a great deal of neck this summer, writes Miss Mentalini, in Pall Mall Budget. All the summer dresses are cut remarkably low. Some are finished off in a quaint fichu, with a full ruffle; others are shaped like a V in front. This is a pretty style for girls, but it is utterly unsuited for a woman out of the twenties. I have seen elaborate morning frocks in spotted or sprigged muslin for youthful wearers. An example was of white muslin with a pink flower. The bodice was made with full fichu, and a yoke ran into tiny tucks. It fitted inside the skirt. This dress was cut very low at the neck and ornamented with a fine frill. The blown sleeves had ruffles at the wrists.

Summer Fashions for Little Girls.

There are many pretty fashions for little folk this season, some of which we present in the accompanying illustrations. Attention is called to the pelisse in embroidered muslin, with graceful cape and triple collar to match. The bonnet shown in the same figure is of soft silk, drawn together at the back with fancy cord and having a full lace front. The bow placed at the side is of striped ribbon. The frock shown at the extreme right is dark green silk trimmed with guipure lace. The guipure is employed for the yoke and upper part of the sleeves.

NEW COSTUMES FOR LITTLE GIRLS.

Baby Ribbon Trimmings.

New chemises this season are much trimmed with baby ribbon of various colors run through insertion. This style in various widths is a marked and pretty feature in many garments for both children and grown people. Charming muslin frocks for little folks show baby ribbon run through insertion and daisy insertion here and there. This ribbon appears, too, on the dainty, bewitching hats and bonnets with their wide brims from beneath which the fair faces look so lovable. Some have a wide bow in the center under the brim.

The Important Item of Sleeves.

Sleeves are the most serious item in dress this season. Beside sleeves, every other point connected with dress is dwindling into insignificance. They are of a contrast to the rest of the dress in color and material. The big velvet and plush sleeves of the spring now look uncomfortably hot and heavy, and the sleeves of the summer dresses are made of silk, satin, brocade and lace. Silk sleeves are very pretty. On summer gowns they are frequently veiled with lace or covered with embroidery.

Beauty Spot Veils.

"Beauty Spot" veils, with sparsely powdered velvet spots; the patch ones, with the large velvet waters so cunningly placed that they appear on one cheek; the chin and lower, and the Rosalind ones falls, in two or more degrees of fineness, are the fashionable face protectors of the day, all worn below the mouth and generally drawn up from below the chin. As yet they have been only worn in black, but the Rosalind nets are beginning to appear in light colors.

Fashion's Rebuke.

Many new gowns have their most prominent features borrowed from old fashions, such as the postillion jacket, gauntleted sleeves and high, short waists.

Sprigged and spotted net over shot silk is proving a rival in favor to the black lace dresses.

A late freak in evening gloves is to have the Christian names of the wearer worked out in silk across the back.

There is an improvement on the double box plaits at the back of tailor made gowns. The plaits still exist, but between them there is a fully gathered back breadth which gives a flare to the skirt and takes away from the undue skimpiness into which we seem now to be sinking.

The close fitting, roll over collar that can be turned up at will is a novelty feature of some of the latest English coats and jackets.

Large buckles measuring six inches long are worn, but chiefly with empire bodices and their broad bands.

Some of the new ribbons have double edges, or, rather, double lines of satin at the edge.

A Lost Opportunity.

He looked as glum and down in the mouth that the half dozen of us concluded that he had lost his wife or met with some other distressing calamity, and so, after leaving Elmira, one of the boys slid into half of his seat and began:

"My friend, you appear to be ill."

"No, not exactly ill," was the reply.

"What, dead?"

"Never had one."

"Heard any bad news?"

"No."

"If there's anything our crowd can do for you we shall be glad of the opportunity."

"Will you?"

"Of course."

"Well, then, I wish you'd begin on me and kick until the last man can't swing his leg for another lift, for of all the barn fools in America I'm the biggest!"

"Why, what's the matter?"

"We had an accident on this road about three weeks ago, and a lot of us lost our baggage. We were told to file our claims, and I've just been down to get my money."

"Well, wasn't that all right?"

"All right! Why, jab my eye, if I wasn't fool enough to hand in a true list of about $8 worth of old duds, while a neighbor of our's who lost two pairs of socks and a box of cuff collars and shirt and blunted the railroad out of $74.38, and they even asked him to take a drink after he got his money! That's me to a dot. Didn't get a chin in up to the side door. Casting no response to the repeated knocks he pulled a paper from his pocket and was making a "mem." when a second story window was carefully raised, a pail of water balanced for an instant on the sill, and then some it went over the young mortgagee. He uttered a yell and leaped into a lilac bush and from there he reached the fence and gained the street. Just then an officer came up and asked:

"Anything the matter?"

"Oh, only a trifle."

"What were you doing in there?"

"Trying to collect interest on a chattel mortgage, that's all. Lady told me to call at 10, and I called. She was ready for me. Good day."—Detroit Free Press.

SOLDIERS IN EARNEST.

THIS MONTH WEST POINT GRADUATES ANOTHER CLASS.

The Gay Cadet of Yesterday May Be the Toil Worn Campaigner of Some Future War—The Academy Viewed from Fort Putnam.

June is the month of months for the bright cadet who has completed his course of study, is ready to graduate in something and looks forward to holding at an early day a lieutenant's commission in some branch of the regular army of the United States. If he desires to carry away a lifelong recollection of his student home as a whole he should climb to old Fort Putnam, 900 feet above, and view West Point as it stretches from the base of the hill far out to the apex projecting into the river.

CAMPING OUT IN AUGUST.

First comes the grassy parade ground, then a gravelly strip, at the south end of which stands the guns and caissons of a battery of field artillery; then the green space to which the cadets as soon as their examinations are finished are marched into camp, and the corner of this tented field projects an angle of Fort Clinton, its parapet and scarp and counter scarp overgrown with a coating of grass like green velvet. On the opposite side of the river and to the north juts the ragged promontory of the West point, called at one time Martaliers Rock; beyond it, low, marshy ground, stretching far to the hills. Directly south the river, once swept by the guns of Fort Constitution, is modernized by the New York Central railroad, which divides the water space into two almost equal parts. To the north tower Old Crow Nest and Storm King, faced by other gigantic sentinels of equal height on the opposite side of the river.

Stepping along the rear parapet of "Fort Put"—the front is too broken to walk on—one gets another view east and southward. Directly beneath are the academy buildings, the cadet barracks—three sides of a quadrangle—the academic building, the hospital, the chapel, the library, while near, on a hill slightly lower than that on which "Fort Put" was built, stands the retrenched observatory. "On the opposite side of the river, half hidden by the foliage, is the memorable Robertson house, where Benedict Arnold breakfasted on the morning of his flight, and the rocky point from which he put out in a barge to go on board the British ship Vultzire. On the west side of the river, looking south, is the broad face of Cozzens' hotel, and beyond a succession of summer cottages. Six miles down Anthony's Nose looms up, seeming to stop the current of the river, which it really turns aside.

Notwithstanding the stir, the excitement of the examinations going on below "Old Fort Put" is as quiet, almost more quiet, than the day when the Continental sentinel paced to and fro on its parapet. The river flows as tranquilly, a schooner rounding the point drifts as lazily as in Revolutionary times. Occasionally the rattle of a drum is heard in the court of the cadet barracks, or the fine notes of a bugle ring "thin and clear" as the cadet is called to some new duty. Then firing is going on in the ravine near by, and at long intervals there is a boom, reverberating as the echo is tossed back and forth, at first angrily, then faintly, till its last sounds seem to be going to sleep in the sleepy valley.

Go back in fancy 113 years. It is not June, 1890, but June, 1778, the spring when "Fort Put" was built, when Fort Arnold was commenced, when the Great Chain was laid. Col. Putnam has mainly completed the fort which bore his name. From below rise sounds from a party dragging a gun up the steep winding road which still leads to the summit. They are hidden from view by trees, but one can fancy the shouting and swearing of the ragged Continentals as they toil on with their heavy burden. Within the enclosure of the fort those of the little garrison not working on the walls or on guard are lounging about, gossiping of the various engagements of the war that have already taken place, or discussing the strength of the positions, or perhaps what further works the newly appointed engineer, Col. Kosciusko will see fit to build.

Far down on the plain there are white tents, but they do not cover cadets. The West Point cadet has not yet been born. They are the temporary abodes of men who are engaged in actual war. On the parapet of Fort Arnold, the eastern portion of which is completed, corked hatted sentinels are pacing, occasionally casting a glance across the river to Fort Constitution, where they may see their comrades also marching on the sentry's beat, or may look down on those engaged in floating the boom or the chain between the two forts. This is a picture as one would see it during a spring when all was activity at West Point; when the revolution was in its youth; when Benedict Arnold was one of Washington's most trusted generals.

Turn to another date, four years later. It is the 31st of May, 1782. The nation has passed the crisis of Arnold's treachery; Cornwallis has surrendered; but it is yet May in time, and British troops still occupy the city of New York. It is noon. The sentinel on the parapet of Fort Putnam passes on his beat to look down on what was Fort Arnold, but, since the treachery of the man for whom it was named, called Fort Clinton. There are signs of something unusual about to take place. A regiment of artillery is drawn up on the plain near the landing, just below the fort, behind which is a grand colonnade built of green boughs. A party is approaching the landing from the river in barges. It consists of his excellency Gen. Washington, with wife and suite; Governor Clinton, Maj. Gen. Knox, and many other prominent officials and citizens with their wives. Having landed they mount to the plain unperceived by the troops drawn up in line, and are conducted through the colonnade, proceeding in the stately fashion of the times. They are there in honor of an important event. The colonies have an ally, Louis XVI of France, who has just been presented with an heir. France is the main support of the colonies, and it behooves the commander in chief and the American army to pay due respect to the advent of a dauphin.

Perhaps if one should climb to "Fort Put" in the evening—the evening of the graduating ball—and listen to the strains of music floating up on the quiet air, and picture to himself the scene within, he might smile at the contrast between this and the ball which took place in honor of the new born dauphin. Then the venerable Washington—no one of whose portraits has ever been seen a smile—with the elderly Mrs. Knox, "carried down a dance of twenty couple in the minuet." Of all the dances ever laid out by a dancing master none has ever been more absurd than this minuet and it is scarcely possible to conceive of anything more solemn than George Washington and Mrs. Knox leading down the twenty couple of Continental officers, military and civil—knee breeches and powdered wigs—and their ladies, whose height of hair resembled more than any thing else the top of a one horse shay.

How different from the scene in the cadet ball room! A forest of white legs are triangulating in circles, sliding, gliding, whirling, sideways, backwards, in reverse. Each cadet holds by the waist a youthful beauty in silk, in tulle, in satin lace, mingled in exquisite combination of colors. There are but two shades in the uniform of the cadets, the gray and the white. But in the costumes of their partners are all the colors and shades of the rainbow. These youths, these maidens know no stately minuet. They spin, they twirl, now tilting before a change of direction; then darting from one end of the room to another, threading their way among other whooping couples, as if the youthful guide had spent his boyhood as a pilot on the Lachine rapids. Truly this, compared with Washington and Mrs. Knox leading the minuet, is a pleasing indication of the progress of the age and the increased fitness of things. So, also, are the parade ground flirtations, wherein cadets sometimes obey orders and still promenade with the girls of their choice. During certain hours the young warriors are not allowed to approach within a prescribed distance of visitors. A stick of the proper length, held by both parties to the evasion, allows of unlimited chatter without the technical violation of any order.

In the chapel at West Point is a silent moral, recorded by an omission. Among the marble tablets bearing the names and dates of birth and death of all the generals of the Revolution is one left blank, for the man whom the tablet commemorates died an alien in a foreign land. Back near the choir gallery, where it is not easily seen, is the unobtrusive memorial. The name which does not appear is that of Benedict Arnold.

Here is a bit of information of interest to the admirers of the poet Browning. Dr. Furnivall has traced the great singer's ancestry back five generations, and finds that he has a forefather who was a butler. This in itself is a distinction. The old time Browning earned an honest livelihood. He was neither a robber baron, nor the son of a king's favorite.

A NEW PASTOR.

THE REV. HOBART CLARKE INSTALLED LAST EVENING.

He is Now Pastor of the Unitarian Society in This City.—The Services Very Impressive.—An Able Sermon by the Rev. Edward Everett Hale.

The Rev. Hobart Clark was installed as pastor of the Unitarian church in this city last evening. The ceremony took place in Samuel Ross Hall at 7:45 o'clock. At the time appointed for the service to begin, there was scarcely an empty seat in the auditorium. The place was beautifully decorated with cut flowers, the fragrance from which filled the entire hall.

The services began promptly at the hour appointed and were opened with an organ voluntary. The Rev. A. D. Smith of Brooklyn then offered up a prayer, which was followed by a hymn. The reading of the scriptures by the Rev. Henry H. Woods was followed by a sermon by the Rev. Edward Everett Hale, D. D. He took his text from Paul's Epistle to Romans, 2r 5th chap.: "The love of the Spirit of Christ in Jesus Makes Us Free Unto Life and Death."

The reverend gentleman began his discourse by congratulating the society on the progress it had made, and briefly explained its object. Among other things he said: "The society does not exist for its own sake, but simply lives for no other purpose than to do the world advance in life. The church of the holy spirit may change its ritual every week, yet it will not be true to Christ unless it recognizes you who belong to it from sin. Let us thank God that the faith is changing. The people of the land are beginning to see life. Every act in our lives owes allegiance to its spirits and not its work. We society wishes to accomplish anything and be successful it must have a determination and love by-laws, do the best of its power, so must a church allow each man to do his own belief if it wants to succeed. This church has got a very good body, what it will now is life to make that body grow and mend. The great discovery of modernity is our time is that of the unfolding of life. We are to show in that this is the triumph of infinite life over death. The spirit of life in Christ Jesus makes you free from the old spiritual death. The teachers of Christ have succeeded in gaining converts for their reverend title and they called them. We must teach men to be free and to live. We must teach them to be free from the law of sin and death.

May the spirit of life in this city make you men I live from sin and death and teach us to be the Church of Christ and Christ."

The remainder of the programme was as follows:

Anthem—"God is a Spirit."..... Quartette
Invocation Prayer..... Rev. Marie St. Croix
Reading of Scripture.....
Reading of Fellowship.. D. W. Moore, D. D.
Address to the Pastor, Rev. W. H. Greene, D.D.
Address to the Society..... Rev. E. P. Collier
Closing Prayer..... Rev. J. F. Bixby
Hymn.....
Benediction.....The pastor, Rev. Hobart Clark

The ceremony was very interesting and impressive throughout, and will be long remembered by all present.

The portion of the programme was rendered by the Crescent-avenue church quartette comprising Mrs. Myers, Miss Alice Nelson, Mr. Gawett and Mr. Elmer E. Runyon, with Miss Jessie Utter as accompanist.

The Century Run.

At four o'clock this morning the cyclers of the Jersey and New York started from the Continental Hotel in Newark on their annual "century" run from that city to Philadelphia. There were about one hundred and fifty in all who may reached this city. The bicyclers partook of breakfast at the Plainfield bicycle club building. They then continued on their way ride, leaving Plainfield at 7:02 a. m. Captain F. L. C. Martin of the Plainfield club had charge of the run from this city to Somerville. The cyclers passed through Bound Brook, Somerville, Hopewell, Trenton and many other points of interest along the line. They are due in Philadelphia this evening at seven o'clock, which will make 103 miles in all. Mr. James Murray of this city also accompanied the "boys."

State Normal and Model School.

Upon the afternoon of June 26, Thursday, the graduates of Normal and Model schools will assemble in Trenton, the occasion being the annual annual meeting of the State Schools Alumni association. The organization comprises a membership of three hundred in all parts of New Jersey. Literary exercises will be held in the Normal school building (Normal hall), where Prof. Austin C. Apgar and Warren C. Platt of New York Mail and Express will be the leading features. Nathan Crowell, editor of the Insurance News, of Philadelphia, will deliver the alumni poem. There will be held in the model.

10,000 Mortgages Recorded.

The record of mortgages placed on file in the Union County Clerk's office for the past few years has just been taken by the United States enumerator. He finds that the total number recorded in that period is 10,000. Owing to the time it will take in making the above tabulations of Middlesex county.

Real Estate Transfer.

The following real estate transfer was recorded in the county clerk's office:

Joseph P. Murphy, assignment of John Tomlin, to Lowell Lincoln, instituted for the benefit of creditors, trustees for the right, title and interest of all the property of John P. Plummer in the city of Plainfield.

—The members of Warren Engine Company, No. 1, will take their apparatus out for "break" on the 27th inst.

Crescents Disclaim Responsibility for R. G. Andrews.

EDITOR OF THE EVENING NEWS:—Your editorial yesterday very properly rebuking your correspondent signing himself "R. G. Andrews," for his disrespectful letter in relation to the Railway club, will commend itself to all right-minded people, but as the article is calculated to do injury to the Crescents that Mr. Andrews is a member of the Crescent League, I beg to enquire for information in this matter. I have not found you on our roll and that neither the name nor language of his letter is such as would be approved by our organization.

Very respectfully,
CHAS. A. RIDD, Pres.

June 14, 1890

"Those who live in glass houses should not throw stones."

Mr. Reed need not reflect on Mr. Andrews, who is a good fellow, if not quite as good as the league members. He need not strain himself to find among the league members one to whom Mr. Andrews' offense is a mere trifle.

Apropos is the following from the Somerset Democrat, published at Somerville, to which it is perhaps unnecessary to add that the paper referred to is not THE NEWS and that the articles objected to were written by a member of the league.

THAT GREEN-EYED MONSTER.

The Crescent Club of Plainfield are still trying to get even with the West End Athletic Club. The committee sent to Somerville a few evenings ago apologized for the action of the club in connection with the 22d inst. of the Plainfield papers, [no Press], against the Somerville Club and the people of Somerville generally. They said that the Crescent Club and all of the best citizens of Plainfield condemned the paper for the uncalled-for attacks.

An extract as a sample of the "ungentlemanly and indecent articles" with which we do not care to pollute our columns, then followed the committee's remarks.

The citizens of Somerville do not consider themselves superior to the people of Plainfield (with the exception of the writer of the above lines), but they certainly are equal to the Plainfielders as far as manners and education are concerned.

We have only to add that the people of Somerville ought not to hold the people of Plainfield responsible for the utterances of such a paper as the one indicated, of which the people of Plainfield are as much ashamed as to be denied the newspaper production generally, the business of which, we are told on class so unprincipled and given to blackguardism.

THE NEWS can assure the people of Somerville that the people of Plainfield entertain none but only feelings of friendship and respect, and any opposition so concretely promote a fraternal spirit generally.

ANOTHER MODEL EMPLOYER.

The Scott Press Works Employees Made Happy.

One of the workmen at the Scott Press Works sends us the following for publication.

"The bulletin board of the Scott Press Works reads, 'No advances made during the week. Monday is pay day.' Mr. Scott gave the cashier instructions nearly two months ago to commence weekly payments on Monday, June 9th, and not to give any notice previous to that time. The bulletin intelligence was therefore somewhat of an agreeable surprise to the men."

A Stolen Watch Recovered.

About a year ago Celia Clark of North Plainfield missed a valuable gold watch. She could find no trace of it anywhere. A few days ago she put the matter in the hands of Justice Hardy and told him that she suspected that a little boy, who is a relative of hers, had stolen the time piece. The justice met the little fellow and succeeded in obtaining a confession from him as to what disposition he had made of the watch and yesterday at noon Mr. Hardy succeeded in recovering the property from the little fellow. Miss Clark has not decided whether or not she will prosecute.

JOTTINGS.

—Ladies' and children's white lawn suits.

—The bald headed eagle can be sent for a few more days at Pierson's hardware store.

—It is pleasing to note that so large a number of our citizens take pride in keeping their lawns in nice condition and their sidewalks good.

—The Cuban Giants defeated the Stars today for the championship of Plainfield, score 5 to 7. Will Perry, pitcher; Oscar Neilson, catcher.

—The Bound Brook Cornet Band will entertain the citizens of Westfield on the Fourth of July by delivering patriotic tunes. A good time is anticipated.

—At the services in the M. E. Church tomorrow evening the Rev. Mr. Mitchell will lecture on the late Temperance Congress held in New York.

—The Pierson Hardware Co. are offering as a special inducements ten per cent. off on hammocks, ice cream freezers, refrigerators, etc., for a few days. Read their announcement.

—Camels Engine Company No. 1 took its apparatus out for a "wash" last evening. The engine was located on the New street well, but did not work satisfactorily and was returned to the house for repairs.

—A committee of the Somerset Board of Freeholders inspected the west bridge on Somerset street on Thursday after-noon and decided to ask for a Middlesex committee to meet with them about building a new bridge.

—A horse belonging to the Plainfield Electric Light Company, which being unharnessed in the stable Monday afternoon started to run away, jumping over the fence and out, causing much excitement among ladies who were passing along that thoroughfare at the time.

—Last evening two young men who live in the vicinity of Grant avenue found a stray horse on West Front street. The animal looked as though it had been hooked from some team. They brought the animal to this city and left it with one Chief Casey.

Miss Kirkner's Long Illness Terminates Fatally.

Elsewhere is the announcement of the death of Miss Carrie Elizabeth Kirkner, of West Eighth street.

A year ago this month Miss Julia R. Bulkley, Principal of the Plainfield public school, Miss Kirkner, youngest daughter of Capt. Jacob Kirkner, President of the Board of Education, Miss Yates, eldest daughter of Hon. Joseph Yates of West Seventh street, and Miss Lillian Fritts, eldest daughter of Dr. J. T. Fritts of Park avenue, formed a party which left Plainfield for a European tour. The party fared well enough until they reached Rome, at which place Miss Kirkner was stricken with what is commonly called the Roman fever, (typhoid). As soon as the serious nature of the illness become known Miss May Kirkner, hurried from Plainfield to nurse her sister back to health. After her arrival the remainder of the party continued on their trip as previously arranged.

The best of medical skill brought Miss Kirkner out of the fever, but unfortunately she had a relapse, and the alarming reports sent home result in Mrs. Kirkner, the girl's mother, unable longer to endure the strain of constant anxiety for her suffering darling, following the elder daughter to Europe. Meanwhile the physicians considered that Miss Kirkner had recovered sufficiently to warrant her removal to Dresden, Saxony, where it was thought the fine, bracing air would quickly restore her to health. But by that time la grippe had begun to rage in Europe, and Miss Kirkner, in her weakened condition, fell an easy victim.

Mr. Richard Irvin, a prominent Wall street broker and a member of the Stock Exchange, New York. The worry about his daughter, whom he almost idolized, made him unable to sleep, and was affecting his general health.

Hon. Joseph Yates through representation to Hon. James G. Blaine, our Secretary of State, interested Minister Phelps at Berlin. Mr. Blaine had instructions issued to the American Consul at Dresden to do everything in his power for the comfort of the Kirkners in their affliction.

Further influential friends of Mr. Kirkner secured the aid of the special physician of the King of Holland.

La Grippe, however, baffled all the medical skill, and developed into what the physicians there termed "catarrh of the lungs"—probably what we know as pneumonia. Then an ulcer formed near the base of the brain. This was the complication of disease which the physicians had to contend with, the patient having been meanwhile removed to a famous hospital at Dresden to insure better attendance. It was all in no avail. The disfigured longing to see Plainfield once again, and especially her father and the other members of the family who were not near. At last, a few weeks ago, Mr. Kirkner himself started for Europe.

It is his family coming home on the steamer Rhein, expected to reach New York Monday, for the vessel bears the dead body of the late Miss Carrie, accompanied by her father, mother and sister.

The death notice is in another column. It is probably unnecessary to add that the family have the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community in their deep affliction.

POLICE NEWS.

Several Persons Arrested for Various Offences.

Albert Sendiker was arrested last night on complaint of his wife who charged him with assault and battery.

Jerry Dugann will celebrate the Glorious Fourth in the county jail at Elizabeth. Policeman Lynch yesterday afternoon arrested him for being drunk and disorderly. Last evening he was arraigned before Judge Codington and given the choice of paying a $15 fine or spending the next sixty days in the county jail. He will board at the county's expense.

On Sunday last Fred Clark returned to this city from Elizabeth, where he had been residing for the past sixty days at the county's expense. Yesterday Freddie again began "loading up" with Jersey lightning, which, it is said, retails for 13 cents a half-pint, and at two o'clock in the afternoon Policeman Lake found him in a helpless condition on Park avenue, with a gash in his face from which blood flowed profusely. Out of pity more than anything else the officer took him to the station house. Last evening he was arraigned before Judge Codington, and that official sent Clark to the county jail for sixty days.

Mr. and Mrs. Clinton gave a progressive euchre party at their residence last Saturday evening, and among those who strove for the handsome prizes were Mr. and Mrs. Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. David A. Sayer, Mr. Stephen Townsend, Miss Townsend, Mr. L. A. Goodenough, Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Nicholl, and Mr. and Mrs. Todd. Refreshments were served after the games. Two small prairie dogs which Mr. Gibson had brought back from a recent trip through the southwest were exhibited to the company.

—Under the new Worts law Judge Hoagland, of the Cumberland county courts, yesterday held a special session to receive applications from the citizens of Downe and Lawrence townships regarding the holder of an election. There was a price to engage for license to sell liquors. The State law says $100 as the minimum fee, but allows the people to fix the amount. Upon the petitions the township will now make the fee $2,000 for a hotel license, $500 for a saloon, and $100 for a grocery license. Judge Hoagland granted the applications, giving the privilege of holding election Tuesday, Aug. 26.

IN THE COURT.

Bernardo Cocheine on Trial for Stabbing George Speidel—An Innocent Boy Discharged—The Shell Game Man Sentenced.

Yesterday morning the Union county court of general quarter sessions met at Elizabeth, and the trial of the criminal cases was continued.

Michael P. Burns was tried on an indictment for an assault. The defendant belongs in Rahway. He was defended by Mr. Gilbert R. Lindsey. The evidence was all circumstantial. The jury went out at quarter to twelve.

The next indictment moved was against Bernardo Cocheine, the Italian shoemaker, accused of Stabbing George Speidel on Washington avenue. On the night of April 14 Cocheine was annoyed by some boys who threw stones at his shop windows. The state's testimony was that he was out into the street and plunged his knife in the back of Speidel, who happened to be passing.

Speidel, according to the testimony of Drs. Turner and Green, was dangerously wounded, and for a day or two his life was despaired of.

There were three wounds inflicted, one cut reaching the bone.

Hon. Foster M. Voorhees appeared as counsel for the Italian.

The defense is still in progress.

In the case of Fred Cessinger, a boy, the Prosecutor entered a nolle pros. The boy was indicted for larceny of coal. Mr. Wilson stated that on investigation the State found the boy was not guilty. He was on his way from school, and Albert Jones, who stole the coal, asked him to watch the bag a few moments. While he was watching the bag an officer happened along and arrested him.

George Whitten, the shell game man, who pleaded guilty to victimizing a woman of $20 at the Linden track, was arraigned yesterday afternoon and fined $200 and costs.

For May the collections of internal revenue amounted to $16,887,772. This is the largest amount collected in one month since 1870. The items seem to show, however, that the American people are souring on oleomargarine. The income from every article included under internal revenue taxation increased except that, proving that less of it is used. Perhaps people are rich enough to buy butter now, and that this is a sign of prosperity. It may mean, too, that butter was cheaper than usual this spring.

Electricity from Heat.

It has been the dream of Edison's later years to discover a method of obtaining electricity directly from heat, or coal, without the intervention of steam. Direct power from heat was the object. Then the costly steam engine which now comes between the fuel and the electric current would be done away. Can it be possible that, after all, he is to be forestalled in this great discovery, and that another is to wrest the honor from him? It looks so, if the story of the Hartford (Conn.) discovery is true.

H. R. Cox, a young man from Maine, made the invention, and he says it is so simple that it scarcely deserves the name of invention. He claims by this method to obtain electricity from live coals as easily as steam is obtained from water, "without the aid of boiler, engine or dynamo." Patents have been issued and a company with a million capital will begin to make the machines, so the story is. The revolution this will work in our industries, should the invention be successful, will be greater even than that hitherto wrought by electricity. "A gas jet will furnish power enough to run a sewing machine. Thousands of things now done slowly and painfully by hand power will be accomplished swiftly and easily by machines.

Evolution of the Family.

That iconoclast Mona Caird, who upset all notions of propriety by startling the world with the question, "Is Marriage a Failure?" is out in the North American Review with another idea no less startling. She declares that all our sentiments, customs, laws and rites are merely the outgrowth of time and circumstance, and that there is no such permanent quality as "Nature" on which humanity seeks to base its likes, dislikes, whims and prejudices.

Mrs. Caird attacks the modern notion that the foundation of society is the family, and that the father is the head of the family. The family, the god of modern society, is not a permanent institution at all, she quotes many authorities to prove. Our present institutions are a development of the patriarchal system, in which a given man was the head and assumed father of the tribe; hence its despotic ruler. But before the patriarchal age there was the matriarchal age, in which woman was the chief factor in the human family. She was the head, and relationship was traced only through her. Previous to this the children knew who their fathers were; a man's children were no more to him than those of another man.

Women were of enormous importance in the days of this population, and men fell into the practice of buying wives. From this practice dates the beginning of the patriarchal system, and the downfall of woman, in the judgment of Mona Caird. If a man bought a wife, she was his property, naturally, and her children were also his. Previous to this the children belonged exclusively to the mother, who had entire right over them. It appears that previous to the beginning of the patriarchal system women "bossed" the men quite as much as, later, men did women, and men naturally took sublime revenge when, in the course of time, it became their turn. The name of Mrs. Caird's paper is: "The Emancipation of the Family. Of woman she writes:

> While she lived in a state of complete freedom the notion that any one but herself could make a claim to her children seems never to have entered a man's mind; but when, under the civilized age to arrive at that culmination of injustice and inconsequence which we now try to abolish, she found herself in love with this sentiment and an appeal to what we call "Nature."

Further, the natural hostility of a man to his mother-in-law in civilized times is regarded by some anthropologists as a survival of the matriarchal age, when the mother was the head of the family, and disposed of it as she saw fit, sometimes and all. "Historically speaking, the notion of kinship through the father is a thing of yesterday." Of fatherhood our writer says:

> The distinctly paternal feeling is not an attribute of primitive man, and its development appears to depend on certain social conditions, which lead to a new set of associations, awakening, among other sentiments, the vanity of the man who inherits that all the good qualities of his children are inherited from himself, while their faults he traces carefully to their mother. For long after the father had become head of the family and possessor of his wife by right of purchase he regard his children as the children solely on the fact that the mother was his property; not upon the fact of his fatherhood. That fatherhood per se has any claims is a purely "unnatural" idea. If by "unnatural" we imply what most people mean by it—insane and aboriginal

HIS DISCIPLINE WAS LAX

Civil Service Commissioner Lyman Severely Censured.

ROOSEVELT AND THOMPSON "O. K."

The Report of the Minet Committee of the House Has Been Submitted—Mr. Lyman's Brother-in-Law Should Have Been Dismissed, the Committee Think.

WASHINGTON, June 14.—The select committee of the house instructed to investigate the charges against the civil service commission has submitted its report. The committee has examined twenty-four witnesses and has come to the following conclusions deducted from the testimony taken. On the first charge, affecting the conduct, retention and promotion of Alexander C. Campbell (brother-in-law of Commissioner Lyman) the committee reached the following conclusions:

Brother-in-law Campbell.

It appears that Campbell copied certain questions of the general examination series for department service, and gave them to their answers, at the request of Mrs. Isabella Smith, to whom he gave them. These papers came into the hands of Mr. Flynn, a person engaged in coaching applicants for office who take the civil service examinations. From the evidence of Miss Dabney it appears that Flynn offered to sell her these questions, she being about to take the examination. She refused to purchase the questions, took the examination and failed. She recognized the questions as the ones being shown her by Flynn.

He should have been Dismissed.

The attention of the commissioners was called to the conduct of Campbell. Mr. Oberly, Mr. Lyman and Mr. Doyle each investigated to a greater or less extent the charges against Campbell, and found him guilty of a breach of discipline and he was reprimanded. If the administration of the civil service law is to be made important, Mr. Campbell should have been dismissed. His retention indicated gross laxity of discipline, and shows that the administration of the regulations was not at that time such as to receive or merit public confidence.

His Promotion Unwarranted.

It is submitted that if the commission had discharged its duty with proper vigor and regard for the public it would have become manifest that Campbell's retention was not defensible, and it would seem to follow that his retention was not proper, his promotion was not warranted.

The committee reports that it cannot accept as satisfactory the answer of Messrs. Oberly, Lyman and Doyle that they believe that the questions Campbell copied were obsolete. The facts disclosed to the committee convince it that the omission to ascertain the truth was inexcusable as to have disregarded it after it had been ascertained and is little less culpable, and whether they failed through indifference or possibility to learn the facts, or knowing them failed to take such action as the public service obviously demanded, is not a matter of great consequence; the neglect of duty in either case is condemned.

Roosevelt and Thompson All Right.

It has been suggested that Commissioners Roosevelt and Thompson are deserving of censure for not having taken action in the Campbell case.

The committee reports that it does not share in that view. On the contrary, there is nothing in their conduct to challenge criticism. When their attention was called to the matter by newspaper reports they called the parties concerned before them separately and without the opportunity of their conferring with each other, and there was a concurrence of statement that the charges were false. They acquitted and Campbell punished; and it being as to them res adjudicata, they did not take further action in the matter, and in that the committee thinks they were thoroughly justified.

They Are Not Censurable.

The committee reports that it has investigated the charges against the commission in relation to the promotion of Edwin D. Bailey, another clerk of the commission, and in relation to the appointment of Thomas Mitchell, of Connecticut, to a position in the pension office, and has found that the action of the commission in both cases was not contrary to the law and rules of the commission and in no way are they censurable.

The Case of Shidy.

A charge was also preferred against the commissioners in relation to the course pursued by them in the case of Mr. Shidy, who was an employe in the postoffice at Milwaukee and discharged by the postmaster for giving the committee such information when they were investigating the affairs of that office. After his discharge the commissioners recommended Mr. Shidy for a position in the consular office, which was given him. In this case the committee reports that it is unable to find anything to criticise in that behalf. They did nothing in their official capacity in the matter of giving or securing Shidy employment; but as individuals, in view of his efforts to aid them, they recommended his employment to Mr. Porter, who gave him a clerkship.

Mr. Lyman Censured.

In conclusion the report says: "With regard to the conduct of the civil commissioners in matters submitted to the committee for investigation, we find, first, that Commissioners Roosevelt and Thompson have discharged their duties with entire fidelity and integrity. Second, that the official conduct of Commissioner Lyman is open to criticism by laxity and indifference in the administration of the affairs of the commission and is therefore censurable. The committee also reports that it will proceed at once to investigate the workings of the system and present a subsequent report. The committee also submits a resolution that a copy of this report, together with a copy of the testimony taken, be sent to the president.

Newfoundland Fishermen Happy.

NEW YORK, June 14.—A special to The Post from Ottawa says: Private advices received by the government state that on investigation the southern limit of the French shore of Newfoundland, supposed to terminate at Cape Ray, only extends to Cape Anage. This contention will be pressed by the Newfoundland authorities, and gives the Newfoundland fishermen twenty additional miles of coast.

Twenty-Nine Horses Cremated.

TOPEKA, KAN., June 14.—Long & Wall's livery stable and twenty-nine horses, R. S. Long's residence, Brooks & Miller's lumber yard, J. W. Walters' blacksmith shop Seery & Morton's farm implement store and P. M. Hughes' paint shop were do stroyed by fire. Total loss, $30,000; insurance, $12,000.

IN SENATE AND HOUSE.

Senators Morgan, Aldrich, Stewart, Reagan and Daniel on Silver.

WASHINGTON, June 14.—The senate agreed to the conference on the bill for a public building at Beaver Falls, Pa., the cost not to exceed $50,000. The senate silver bill was then taken up and Mr. Morgan resumed his argument. He complained that the finance committee's amendment to the house bill did not require the coinage of silver bullion to be purchased by the treasury except at the discretion of the secretary of the treasury. It did say that the secretary should coin enough of it to pay the cost of the bullion at its market price when purchased, but it did not say in what denomination it should be coined, whether dollars or subsidiary coin. This meant the demonetization of silver. He also objected to the provision limiting the continuance of the act to ten years. The purpose of that limitation was to keep up the agitation which had so long distressed the country—the conflict between gold and silver.

If congress was not competent to decide the question now on sound principles of financial policy it should lay the bill on the table and let the country understand its inability to handle the subject. He thought the feature of the bill which would make congress a party to continued strife and controversy upon the metals was indefensible. The policy of other great nations was not measured by decades but by half centuries.

Mr. Aldrich next addressed the senate. There was no substantial difference between senators as to the evil effects resulting from the contraction of the currency. The only question was as to the remedy. He believed a complete remedy could be found only in such action as would open the mints of the country to the coinage of silver. Congress could not make silver an international money; until that was done by the concurrent action of all the great countries the world could be on equality between the two metals. The inflation that would follow the unlimited purchase of silver would unduly prices and induce an era of wild speculation. The natural influx of silver from all parts of the world would drive out all the gold in the country.

At 5 o'clock Mr. Morgan began speaking in reply to Mr. Aldrich, when, under the agreement, general debate should have closed. But by unanimous consent it was agreed that the senate silver bill should be laid on the table, the house bill substituted for it and general debate extended to 3 o'clock Monday afternoon. In reply to Mr. Edmunds' question whether we have now a double standard Mr. Stewart said that we had to an extent, but that we were united to give it up by the house bill. We could now have silver on a parity with gold if the secretary of the treasury had not used his discretion against silver rather than in favor of it. Mr. Stewart said that a compulsory coinage of $4,000,000 would be much more satisfactory than any of the pending measures.

Mr. Reagan advocated the unlimited coinage of silver. In response to questions of Mr. Hoar, Mr. Reagan admitted that rates of interest had declined, and the accumulations of life gone down, while wages had gone up since the demonetization act of 1873. He said, however, that in denouncing that act he was speaking about the purchasing power of money, not about the rates of interest.

Mr. Daniel addressed the senate at some length in support of free coinage. The time, he said, was the only thing that would bring silver to par. Speaking of the act of 1873, Mr. Daniel said that the conduct of the committee in charge of the bill indicated either most dense ignorance or most reprehensible negligence or appropriate committee duties. He read from a letter of ex-Representative Critcher, of Virginia, saying that he was a member of the committee on coinage, weights and measures in 1873, and had never been consulted on the subject of demonetization. During a colloquy started by Mr. Edmunds, the Vermont senator contended that if it were in fact a conspiracy resulting from the pending measure would benefit the rich alone.

Mr. Allison called attention to the fact that when in December, 1889, a resolution was offered in the house in favor of retiring greenbacks and resuming specie payments every Democratic member voted for it. Mr. Daniel said that the question was greater than Democracy—or rather it was greater than Republicanism, and not quite so great as Democracy. Without concluding his speech Mr. Daniel yielded for a secret session, after which the senate adjourned.

The secretary of the treasury has sent to the senate an estimate for additional appropriation of $110,000 needed for the construction of approaches, heating apparatus and elevators for the Chicago, Boston custom house and postoffice at Pittsburg, Pa. Among the bills reported to the senate favorably were the following: Appropriating $15,000 for a public building at Wilkesbarre, Pa.

In the house the sundry civil appropriation bill was taken up in committee of the whole. Mr. Cannon (Ill.) said that the amount of appropriation carried by the measure was in round numbers $25,000,000.

The following amendments were adopted: Appropriating $9,000 for a public building at Cedar Rapids, Ia.; $19,000 for elevator in public building at Peoria, Ills.; $20,000 for public building at Martinsburg, W. Va., and increasing $25,000 to $60,000 the appropriation for the public building at Winona, Minn. Mr. Goodnight (Ky.) moved to strike out the clause relative to the irrigation survey. Mr. Dockery (Mo.) said that the only thing the committee had to determine was whether it would repeal the irrigation law which assigned the arid lands and prohibited them from settlement or make this appropriation. Congress owed it to the western country either to repeal the law or make the appropriation. Mr. McMillan, referring to the present depressed condition of agriculture, said that he was opposed still further to tax the land, to still further add to the bankrupt farmer in order to raise money to be used in surveying lands not at present susceptible of agriculture. After further debate Mr. Goodnight's motion was rejected—45 to 67. Without completing the consideration of the bill the committee rose.

Harvard Males Routed.

BOSTON, June 14.—It is announced that the Sargent prize of $100 for the best rendering of version of the Twenty-ninth ode of the Third book of Horace has been awarded to Miss H. L. Reed, of the Harvard annex. This is the first time that any one of the fair sex has been successful in carrying off the honors which are generally supposed to belong to the students of the sterner sex.

London "Bobbies" May Strike.

LONDON, June 14.—The Pall Mall Gazette says that it is probable that if the resignation of Mr. Munro, chief of the Metropolitan police force, is accepted the superintendents and inspectors who keep the force together will resign within a month. A strike by the policemen, the Gazette says, is by no means impossible.

MIRACLES AT PITTSBURG

The Alleged Remarkable Cures of Father Mollinger.

THE BLIND SEE AND DEAF HEAR.

The Wonderful Stories Told by the Patients—Who Have Experienced Relief at the Physician's Hands — A Paralytic Who Can Dance—The Lame Walk.

PITTSBURG, June 14.—From every section of the country the maimed, halt and blind assembled Friday on Troy hill, Allegheny, to celebrate St. Anthony's day and receive health and blessing at the shrine of Father Mollinger, the all healing priest. By noon there were at least 10,000 people present. The scenes in and around the church were impressive and pathetic. The believers knelt on every available spot. Many persons had slept all night on the church steps and under a big shed in the church yard. Father Mollinger, standing on the stone steps, blessed the assembly before he celebrated high mass. There were women with sick babies, and lame, blind and ailing people whose every movement was one of pain. One lady, 70 years of age, had come all the way from Nebraska to be cured of spinal disease.

Several Alleged Cures.

Some who have been here for several days are reporting cures. Their stories are as follows:

Mrs. Howard, of Brooklyn, says: "I have been blind for two years. I have tried almost every known remedy without benefit. I have been here now four days and can read today."

Mrs. John Hauser, of Bridgeport, O., said: "I have had cancer for years. Several physicians tried in vain to cure me. One year ago I came to Father Mollinger and he partially cured me. I have been here now three days and go home today entirely cured so far as I can tell."

John Lauer, a Western pensioner in reply to Mr. Aldrich, when, under the agreement, general debate should have closed. But by unanimous consent it was agreed that the senate silver bill should be laid on the table, the house bill substituted for it and general debate extended to 3 o'clock Monday afternoon. In reply to Mr. Edmunds' question whether we have now a double standard Mr. Stewart said that we had to an extent, but that we were united to give it up by the house bill. We could now have silver on a parity with gold if the secretary of the treasury had not used his discretion against silver rather than in favor of it. He said, however, that in denouncing that act he was speaking about the purchasing power of money, not about the rates of interest.

Mr. Daniel addressed the senate at some length in support of free coinage. The time, he said, was the only thing that would bring silver to par. Speaking of the act of 1873, Mr. Daniel said that the conduct of the committee in charge of the bill indicated either most dense ignorance or most reprehensible negligence or appropriate committee duties. He read from a letter of ex-Representative Critcher, of Virginia, saying that he was a member of the committee on coinage, weights and measures in 1873, and had never been consulted on the subject of demonetization. During a colloquy started by Mr. Edmunds, the Vermont senator contended that if it were in fact a conspiracy resulting from the pending measure would benefit the rich alone.

Mr. Allison called attention to the fact that when in December, 1889, a resolution was offered in the house in favor of retiring greenbacks and resuming specie payments every Democratic member voted for it. Mr. Daniel said that the question was greater than Democracy—or rather it was greater than Republicanism, and not quite so great as Democracy. Without concluding his speech Mr. Daniel yielded for a secret session, after which the senate adjourned.

The secretary of the treasury has sent to the senate an estimate for additional appropriation of $110,000 needed for the construction of approaches, heating apparatus and elevators for the Chicago, Boston custom house and postoffice at Pittsburg, Pa. Among the bills reported to the senate favorably were the following: Appropriating $15,000 for a public building at Wilkesbarre, Pa.

In the house the sundry civil appropriation bill was taken up in committee of the whole. Mr. Cannon (Ill.) said that the amount of appropriation carried by the measure was in round numbers $25,000,000.

The following amendments were adopted: Appropriating $9,000 for a public building at Cedar Rapids, Ia.; $19,000 for elevator in public building at Peoria, Ills.; $20,000 for public building at Martinsburg, W. Va., and increasing $25,000 to $60,000 the appropriation for the public building at Winona, Minn. Mr. Goodnight (Ky.) moved to strike out the clause relative to the irrigation survey. Mr. Dockery (Mo.) said that the only thing the committee had to determine was whether it would repeal the irrigation law which assigned the arid lands and prohibited them from settlement or make this appropriation. Congress owed it to the western country either to repeal the law or make the appropriation. Mr. McMillan, referring to the present depressed condition of agriculture, said that he was opposed still further to tax the land, to still further add to the bankrupt farmer in order to raise money to be used in surveying lands not at present susceptible of agriculture. After further debate Mr. Goodnight's motion was rejected—45 to 67. Without completing the consideration of the bill the committee rose.

Harvard Males Routed.

BOSTON, June 14.—It is announced that the Sargent prize of $100 for the best rendering of version of the Twenty-ninth ode of the Third book of Horace has been awarded to Miss H. L. Reed, of the Harvard annex. This is the first time that any one of the fair sex has been successful in carrying off the honors which are generally supposed to belong to the students of the sterner sex.

London "Bobbies" May Strike.

LONDON, June 14.—The Pall Mall Gazette says that it is probable that if the resignation of Mr. Munro, chief of the Metropolitan police force, is accepted the superintendents and inspectors who keep the force together will resign within a month. A strike by the policemen, the Gazette says, is by no means impossible.

His Charges Nothing.

Father Mollinger does not claim any miraculous powers, but is a firm believer in faith coupled with work. He is a physician and reads human nature with wonderful accuracy. These qualities, coupled with the unbounded faith of his patients, seem to enable him to accomplish wonderful results if all that is claimed is to be believed. Many claim to have been cured merely by receiving his blessing, but Father Mollinger always prefers to have patients stay a few days and receive medicines as well as prayers. He makes no charges for his prescriptions, but his coffers are always well filled. Whole hatfuls of quarters, half dollars, dollars and even five dollar bills were taken up during the day.

The Cheyenne Rumors Exaggerated.

HELENA, Mon., June 14.—The reports of threatened hostilities in eastern Montana are largely sensational. Accounts received here implicate the Cheyennes in depredations on cattle herds. There has been no murder since May 6, when Robert Ferguson, foreman of the Matagney Cattle company, was killed by the Cheyennes. His murderers are in jail at Miles City awaiting trial. Recent movements of a band of Cheyennes led to the belief that they were making ready to go on the warpath, but the military authorities took prompt measures to check the outbreak if meditated. The opinion here is that there will be no conflict and that the Cheyennes will be kept in control without bloodshed.

The Massachusetts Scandal.

BOSTON, June 14.—The elevated road bribery investigation was continued. Lobbyist Hagar reiterated his denial relative to the alleged offer of $100,000 for bribery purposes. Frederick J. Hutchinson, Dr. Moore's counsel, corroborated Dr. Moore's testimony and said he had often seen Hagar in Moore's office. Hagar asserted he had never seen Hutchinson before in his life. Senator Prescott testified he had never had conversation with Col. Sanderson with regard to elevated roads; never had any conversation at all at Dr. Moore's office, and the alleged $100,000 interview never took place.

An Original Package Decision.

PITTSBURG, June 14.—The jury in the case of Charles Silverman, the Leechburg original package dealer, agent for an Ohio brewing company, whose trial for violation of state and county liquor laws was held at Kittaning, Armstrong county, rendered their verdict as follows: First—not guilty of selling without license. Second—not guilty of selling to minors. Third—guilty of selling to persons of known intemperate habits. This is generally regarded as a victory for original package dealers in Pennsylvania.

SIXTEEN PERSONS DEAD.

The Fatal Work of a Kentucky Cloudburst.

A TRAIN RUNS INTO A WASHOUT.

Three of the Crew Were Killed—A Dozen Persons Reported Drowned—Six Bodies Have Been Recovered—Bull Creek Rose Ten Feet Per Minute.

MAYSVILLE, Ky., June 14.—At Bull Creek, six miles above here, two dark clouds met and burst. The creek jumped over its banks and swept like drift several dwelling houses and their frightened occupants. The stone culvert on the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad over Mill creek was washed out into the river, and about midnight, while the storm was at its height, the west bound freight train ran into a washout, causing a fearful wreck.

The engine and nine cars were piled one upon top of another, almost out of sight in the creek bottom. The killed were:

Baker, Charles, brakeman.
Beasher, Morris, fireman.
Hedges, C. C., engineer.

They were buried beneath the wreck and their bodies have not been recovered. Conductor W. H. Watts and Brakeman W. W. Lee jumped from the hind car and escaped unhurt. The train was made up of twenty cars, fifteen carloads of shoes and cans for Louisville went down in the wreck. A fast wrecking train, on the way to the scene, ran over Frank Scott, a colored employe, and killed him.

A Dozen Reported Drowned.

About a dozen persons living on the banks of Bull creek are reported drowned. The following bodies have been found:

Baker, Miss Hattie.
Baker, Miss Julia.
Baker, Mrs. Lucy.
Baker, two sons of Mrs. Keller.
Hughes, John, a well known fisherman.

Bushed Into Kindling Wood.

The nineteen cars down in the washout were dashed into kindling wood. The train was the first section of Freight No. 33, drawn by engine No. 154, which is one of the largest as well as finest engines on the road. The engine is now out of sight in the creek bed. The train was running over thirty miles per hour. A little later an east bound mixed passenger train would have passed over the fatal culvert, when the loss of life would have been appalling.

Rose Two Feet Per Minute.

James Irwin had a portable sawmill located several hundred yards up Bull creek, above the railroad. This elevation was crossed by a rapid rise in the creek, slowly badly swollen by the storm. Farmers say that the creek rose two feet per minute, and the water looked like a wall twenty feet high when it got to the railroad fill. The sawmill was lifted from its foundings and with over 100 big logs hurled violently against the railroad embankment. This is probably what caused it to give way. Huge stones weighing several tons were carried by the creek long distances. The creek is now ten feet higher than it has been in forty years.

Potted by the Hail.

LANCASTER, Pa., June 14.—This section suffered greatly from the storm of Wednesday, the damage from hail being especially severe in Conoy, East and West Donegal, Mount Joy and Rapho townships, the town of Bainbridge and the borough of Elizabethtown. Hail of immense size was driven with great force and broke down every green thing in its way. Oats, grain and grass will barely be worth the harvesting. Thursday at noon hailstones as large as goose eggs were found underfoot and in other protected places where they had lain since Wednesday night. Lightning caused much damage and killed a lot of livestock.

The Work of the Storm.

The Erie canal overflowed its banks in several places.

The track of the Auburn branch of the New York Central road was submerged. Trains were delayed nine hours.

The eastern portion of Oneida, N. Y., was submerged, and people were obliged to leave their homes in boats.

A washout on the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg road, near West Camden, N. Y., made it necessary to transfer passengers.

The Moravian church at Schoneck, Northampton county, Pa., was struck by lightning Thursday night and the steeple splintered.

At Solsville, Madison county, N. Y., a new paint, planing mill, barn and several sheds were washed away, as was also 20,000 feet of lumber.

The Galway reservoir, which supplies Amsterdam, N. Y., is higher than ever before. Should it give way there would be a great disaster, as the basin is eight miles in circumference.

At Stanhope, Pa., Thomas Anderson, of Port Oram, aged 19, employed as a boatman, was struck by lightning Thursday night and killed. His body was badly burned and the shoes were torn from his feet.

A terrific thunder storm passed over Point Pleasant Thursday night. The residence of Capt. Orley Pearce was struck by lightning. Mrs. Pearce and daughters were in the room where the greater damage was done, but escaped unharmed.

Lightning struck the sawmill of Robert Pelham & Sons, at Noank, Conn., Friday morning and set fire to the structure. The building was completely destroyed. The loss is $15,000. There is no insurance. The local fire brigade worked hard to prevent the flames from spreading to other buildings in the vicinity.

One Year for Illegal Voting.

JERSEY CITY, June 14.—James Dean, who was convicted in the Jersey City court of common pleas for illegal voting at the recent election for mayor, was sentenced by Judge Lippincott to one year in the county jail. The extreme penalty is one year's imprisonment and a fine of $500. Dean was in the employ of the city.

Young Storrs Escaped.

NEW YORK, June 14.—George M. Storrs, the insane son of the late Chicago lawyer, Emory A. Storrs, escaped from the Poughkeepsie insane asylum Thursday morning, but was captured in this city. He was wandering aimlessly about the streets when found. He will be taken back to the asylum.

He Lost It on the Races.

NEW YORK, June 14.—A special to The Evening Post from Louisville says Edwin T. Elliott, assistant passenger agent of the Louisville and Nashville railroad at Louisville, is missing with about $5,000 of the company's money, which he is supposed to have lost on the races.

The Regents Meet.

ALBANY, N. Y., June 14.—The regents of the University of the State of New York met last evening, when Chauncey M. Depew was present for the first time. There was a prolonged meeting, at which increases in salaries were granted to some of the clerks. Hobart college at Geneva was permitted to change its charter so as to permit the alumni to elect trustees. The Devaux school at Suspension Bridge was granted an absolute charter. The question of examinations of medical students made compulsory under the new law was taken up. It was found the law read that students must be examined in arithmetic, geography, English grammar, American history, orthography, English composition, elements of natural philosophy or an equivalent to these. The board decided that any graduate of any college who has a certificate of having successfully completed a year's course of study in any college or institution where the required course or supervision; also any student registered by the regents as having maintained a collegiate standard or a certificate of completion of a three years' course in the normal department of having passed a satisfactory academic examination, or any student who has a regent diploma, pass card of eight studies or a regent certificate in ten studies of any nature.

A New Empire State Railroad.

The road is to begin at the southeasterly terminus of the Chateaugay railroad in Harrolltown, Franklin county, and run to Lake Placid, Essex county, a distance of ten miles. The capital stock is $100,000, and the incorporators are Legrand B. Cannon, of New York; James A. Burden, of Troy; Smith M. Weed, M. F. Parkhurst, Wm. Hinman, George Weed, M. L. Frank, Frank E. Smith, P. S. Palmer, Henry Davis, of Plattsburgh. Smith Weed has 760 shares of the stock, and Hinman 220.

The Amalgamated Association.

PITTSBURG, June 14.—At the session of the Amalgamated Association a new clause (No. 19) was added to the sheet mill scale reading: "All sheet and jobbing mills working sheets over thirty inches wide shall be classed as large double mills." This means an advance to the rollers on this work from $1.55 to $1 per day for pair heating, $1.80 to $1.85 for matching and $1.80 to $1.85 for doubling. The scale for roughing and catching and the scale for rolling muck bar and finished iron for sheet bars were adopted as reported and made to apply to all mills.

PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE.

Weariness of Brain or Body Is Nature's Demand for a Holiday.

Weariness, says The Hospital, is generally a physiological "ebb tide" which time and patience will convert into a flow. It is never well to whip or spur a worn out horse, except in the direst straits. If he needs his peas in obedience to the stimulating reversing to a diet of peas, he loses his blood. Idleness is not one of the faults of the present age; weariness is one of its commonest experiences. The checks that many a man draws on his physiological resources are innumerable, and, as the resources are strictly limited, like any other ordinary banking account, it is very easy to bring about a balance on the wrong side.

One day's holiday in the week and one or two months in the year for those who work according to fully tried principles help equilibrium to a highly favorable condition; and those with care and management physiological solvency is secured and maintained. But physiological wealth or fortune is good a thing, or even a better thing, than a money fortune. Stored resources, well invested, keep the mind easy and the body youthful. If, however, a man has not even these, but only enough of strength to go on steadily from day to day, he should watch carefully against overdrawing his account. A feeling of prostration in the dark thunder cloud that portends a change in the atmosphere. Health, like weather, may "run mild" when the barometer has broken nobody knows when the barometer will mark "set fair" again. Weariness, coming on in the ordinary course of work, without any special and unusual cause, is a timely demand for an immediate holiday. As nothing in the world can properly satisfy hunger except food, so no drug or stimulant of any kind can do you one moment's worth of energy and health. The doctor's tonic is a very good thing in its way, but it will do more harm than good if it be not that a glow worm's light will serve the same purpose as the moon.

The Care of the Hair.

A woman who has been for many years at the head of a large hair dressing establishment expresses the opinion that the average woman drowns the life of her hair by frequent washing. After dressing the heads of customers whom she visits twice a week she uses not a drop of water, but plies her faithful to a good brush, a short bristled, narrow brush, backed with wood, rather than one of the elaborate articles in silver or ivory, and the way she operates is as follows:

"The first thing to do when the hair is unpinned is to loosen it by lightly tossing it about. The operation need not tangle it and at the same time will shake it out of any lingering knots. Instead of beginning at the scalp she first combing should start at the ends of the hair. Gather each lock warm upwards to avoid tangling, breaking and tearing the hair out. This racking of the hair will remove considerable dust. The brush should be cleaned in soap and sections, and a fine tooth comb is indispensable. It is not necessary to draw the comb down through the hair. Dandruff can be removed by combing the scalp, where it has accumulated, and by slanting the fine comb it may be brought from the scalp without having to go to the whole length of the hair. As I said before, the head should be cleaned in spots. When the dust skin has been loosened, a thorough brushing is all that is required to remove it. By thorough I mean to spend a full hour, first brushing the head and then the hair to free it from the scurf and eruptions of skin. Frequently this can be accomplished by shaking out or fanning the hair, and subsequent brushing will give the hair the glossy, silky finish for which so much pomade is used."

Hygienic Effect of Sea Voyages.

Sea voyages are often recommended by physicians to delicate persons, and Dr. Bunney Yeo gives the following common sense reasons why they are usually beneficial to the health. He says their effect due to the following causes: (1) Perfect rest and quiet, a thorough change of scene and perfect and enforced rest from both mental and physical labor. (2) The life in the open air and the great amount of sunshine enjoyed, it being quite possible to spend fifteen hours every day in the open air. (3) The purity of the sea air, no organic dust or impurities—the air of the open sea being the purest found anywhere. (4) The great humidity of the atmosphere and the high barometric pressure, which are considered to exercise a useful sedative influence on certain constitutions. (5) The exhilarating and tonic effect of the sea motion through the air—the sea breezes are constantly blowing over the ship. These breezes increase appetite, help digestion and impart tone to the superficial blood vessels.

SOCIAL ETIQUETTE.

The Street Salutations of Some of New York's Distinguished Citizens.

Raising the hat as a mode of salutation, except to highly distinguished men, is not much in vogue in New York. Half a dozen prominent citizens, says The New York Sun, are scrupulous as to the respect of a raised hat, and they raise their own in return. There is a marked difference in the manner in which a polite man acknowledges greetings from different persons. Mr. Depew has an amiable smile and an inclination of the head for almost everybody. If a man whom he knows to bow, the courtesy returns the salute in a similar manner.

It is evidently mechanical, but the system is perfect. If Mr. Depew's acquaintance rises his hat four inches, the president of the New York Central railroad lifts his own well-polished tile a similar distance from the head. If a man touches his hat brim with a finger only does Mr. Depew. As a man of wide acquaintance in New York is ex-Secretary Whitney, it is interesting to watch the latter looking from an upper window of Delmonico's when Mr. Whitney passed, and he bowed to four persons while passing Twenty-sixth street. The first, who was a Democratic politician of some prominence, Mr. Whitney nodded to in an off-hand manner, and gave a slight wave of the hand. The politician's greeting was precisely similar to this.

A moment later Mr. Whitney bowed with considerable dignity, but without touching his hat at all, to an elderly gentleman who holds the post of librarian in a well known law association. A moment later a dapper little society man, with a pinched waist, tight boots and elaborate attire, pressed by, burst into a series of brilliant bows, and received the secretary by lifting his hat clear off his head. Mr. Whitney barely acknowledged the salutation by an almost imperceptible inclination of his head and passed on to lift his hat politely to a member of the German legation, who was staring very hard through a single glass at the ex-secretary of the navy. Mayor Grant has a stereotyped bow and easy going smile, which are bestowed on millionaire and pauper alike.

SCIENCE AND PROGRESS.

SIMPLE SCIENTIFIC EXPERIMENTS AND ITEMS OF GENERAL INTEREST.

Scientific and Curious Experiments in Optics so Graphically Illustrated by Nature and Fully Explained in Popular Science News.

Take a piece of cardboard or opaque paper, and pierce a small, clean cut hole through it, about the diameter of the head of a large pin. On holding the opening between the eye and looking through it, the first effect noticed will be that the depth of focus of the eye is greatly improved. Objects can be plainly seen which, if viewed in the usual way they would be indistinct. At the same time distant objects can be seen with clearness. The effect of the minute opening placed before the eye is exactly the same as when a photographer puts a "stop" in front of the objective, greater depth of focus and clearness of definition, but a loss of illuminating power.

FIG. 1.—EXPERIMENTS IN OPTICS.

A more curious experiment may be shown by holding the card between the eye and a strong light, say a window shade, the entrance, or a window curtain through which the light is shining. Then hold a pin between the card and the light, as shown in Fig. 1. The head of the pin will be visible, but reversed, as shown in Fig. 1. The cause is explained in the accompanying diagram of the eye (Fig. 2), where I represents the experiment under ordinary conditions; the rays of light from the pin are refracted by the lenses of the eye so that they cross each other, giving a reversed image on the retina. In fact, we really see everything upside down, and it is probably only on account of long experience that we learn objects in their natural position, just as the photographer soon forgets that the images formed on the ground glass of the camera are reversed, but adapts his points of view and poses his sitters without thinking of the inverted position in which they appear.

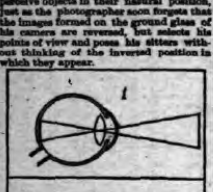

FIG. 2.—EXPERIMENTS IN OPTICS.

In 2, however, the conditions are changed. The illuminated opening in the card acts as an independent source of light, and casts the shadow of the pin directly upon the retina; the head of the pin being smaller than the pupil of the eye, being held but so close to it that the shadow is cast directly upon the retina, without the usual reversal of the image, which therefore, appears to our mind as upside down, whereas it is really in an upright position. This automatic correction by the eye or brain of the images thrown upon the retina is a curious fact, and cannot be said to be fully understood.

Wood Wool.

A machine for making wood wool is being used in England. According to The Commercial Advertiser, wood wool is coming rapidly into favor among manufacturers of glass, cutlery, confectionery, etc., for packing purposes on account of its cleanliness and non-hygroscopic properties, but its adoption is hindered, among other things, by its comparatively high price. The new machine is designed to reduce the price, for it is of such size and design that every manufacturer can have one working on his premises, and can thus prepare his own wood wool. Very little attention is required by the machine, and all the parts are easy renewable. Timber of any convenient length can be cut, and waste pieces can also be utilized.

Mixed Fuel for Engines.

At Spezzia some experiments have just been made on the Italian man-of-war Maseggiero, with a view to ascertaining the speed attainable with coal and petroleum mixed for fuel. They are said to have resulted in solving the problem of obtaining a certain and high velocity at a given moment. The Maseggiero, which never before surpassed fifteen knots an hour, reached almost seventeen with the new process of combustion. The engineers, however, complain that the intense heat generated affects the boilers injuriously.

To Prevent the Slipping of Belts.

One good way to prevent belts from slipping is to paint the face of the pulley. This can be done, says The Industrial World, by using hot asphaltum or white lead mixed very thin with turpentine. It will adhere well if allowed to dry thoroughly. A thicker coat of white lead and oil should then be applied and allowed to dry thoroughly before being used. These coatings will not scale off if properly applied.

Scientific Brevities.

Experiments are said to have proved that where electric lights have been used in place of oil lamps for lighting the compasses of vessels at night, an incandescent lamp brought close to the compass caused a deflection of the needle.

For a water proof glue soak in a cool place half a pound of glue for one night in a quart of good milk, and boil it the next day.

The manufacture of paper from moss is reported from Sweden. The paper is as hard as wood and can easily be painted and polished.

A project for building a canal from the sea coast to Brussels will, if carried out, make that city practically a sea port.

Again it is announced that the photographing of colors has been achieved, this time by an Austrian.

THE CURIOSITY SHOP.

A Collection of Fugitive Facts and Out-of-the-Ordinary Information.

In a recent conversation with a representative of The Pall Mall Budget, M. Rolla gave a resume of his plan of action when preparing a new work, and observed that before he began to write he lived the life of his characters. In the "Roumanille" however, he had drawn simply and solely on the experiences of his youth, but before penning "Germinal" he spent a year among the mines of Anzin, and he had qualified himself for "La Terre" by residing among the peasants of the Beauce and the Perche. After the same conscientious M. Rolla was absolutely confronted by a difficulty when the remarkable question: "How about Nana?" The novelist was equal to the occasion. It was not true that he had spent a day with the notorious demi-mondaine, and that he fell into rapturous about her boudoir. He did lunch once with a lady of facile manners, to whom a friend introduced him for purposes of curiosity, but his chief information was derived from the "green room" of the Variétés, where M. Ludovic Halevy and his set, and where he made the acquaintance of Mme. Judic. All the legends published in the papers about his search of "human documents" for the portraiture of "Nana" were works of pure imagination.

The Princess Bismarck.

If little is known in England of Prince Bismarck's life, still less is known of the lady who for more than forty-two years has shared his home. The Princess Bismarck is described as the very model of a practical, methodical German matron, with an eye for every detail of household arrangement and economy. It was at the wedding of a friend that Bismarck first met with Fraulein Johanna von Puttkamer. She made there an impression which culminated in an offer of marriage three years later. The key to the Bismarck character is to be found, says the same biographer, in her words, "That my husband is a public character is a fact to which I have presented, but I am not fitted for, nor do I feel inclined to undertake the duties which the prince wrote to the princess from Biarritz, he said: "I have a bad conscience, because I am seeing so much that is beautiful without you. If you could only be enabled hither through the air, I would go with you this very moment back to San Sebastian."

The Earliest Flying Machine.

The earliest flying machine that we can trace is that invented by Archytas, of Tarentum, B.C. 400. The historian of the "Dream Age" tells us how the geometrician Archytas, made a wooden pigeon which was able to remain for half an hour in the air for a few minutes, but it came down to the ground after a short time, notwithstanding the mysterious "aura spiritus" with which it was supposed to be endowed. The capability of flying has for centuries been regarded as supernatural. Putting magic cakes, dressed in the skin of bats, under their bats' wings, while witches, etc., possessed the faculty of flying up chimneys upon broomsticks. We even read in childish lore of the old woman who "went up in a basket" (perhaps a balloon car) and attained a most astonishing altitude—an elevation no less than "seventy times round as the moon!" It was not until 1783, however, that the true art of aerial navigation was discovered.

The Horseshoe for Luck.

It is claimed that the origin of the superstition that a horseshoe brings good luck can be traced back to the Middle Ages. The monk Gervaise, of Tilbury, informs us that at that time there was a kind of demon in England which appeared in a horse's shape, with the hind feet turned with sparkling eyes. Whenever this apparition was seen it was a sign that a conflagration would soon break out. Hence, by getting a finally warding, the appearance of one horse was regarded as a friendly agent, and the animal in general was believed to be a benificent mystic power. A horse tooth carried in the pocket prevented toothache; it was a sign of good luck to find a horseshoe, and one was placed under the pillow of a child to cure colic, or nailed against a building to prevent it from catching fire. This led to its general adoption as a protective symbol.

Why a Bush Is the Sign of an Inn.

The ivy being sacred to Bacchus, the god of wine, the ancients indicated a place where wine was sold by hanging an ivy bush over the door. The Romans followed this custom, and the moderns took it from them. Shakespeare's "good wine needs no bush" was a proverb in his time, and one of the Latin "vino vendibili hedera non opus est" (to salable wine no ivy is necessary); the French have the proverb, "au vin qui se vend bien il ne faut point de bouchon" (to wine which sells well, no bush is necessary). The modern proverb is: "A good thing advertises itself."

Purification of Sewage Water.

A discovery, which may be of very great value in a sanitary point of view, has been made by Mr. Webster, of England, who has applied electricity to the purification of sewage water. He found that if a strong current of electricity—such as is now used for lighting purposes in our principal cities—be passed through a sewer the salts of the metals, sodium, potassium, etc., are decomposed, while the nascent chlorine and oxygen are set free, which act as disinfectants. Further researches in this direction will doubtless lead to valuable results.

Wedding Celebrations.

Additions are frequently made to the celebrations of wedding occasions. The following, so far as we can ascertain, is the latest revised and improved list: First days, sugar; sixty days, vinegar; first anniversary, iron; fifth anniversary, wooden; ten anniversary, tin; fifteenth anniversary, crystal; twentieth anniversary, china; twenty-fifth anniversary, silver; thirtieth anniversary, cotton; thirty-fifth anniversary, linen; fortieth anniversary, ruby; forty-fifth anniversary, silk; fiftieth anniversary, golden; seventy-fifth anniversary, diamond.

A State Flower.

Californians favor the eschscholzia, or California poppy, for a floral emblem of their state, says Vick's Floral Magazine; and there is a legend that the name of the golden poppy, after San Francisco, the straits called Golden Gate, was given it on account of the sight of masses of flowers of the California poppy, like sheets of gold, on the foothills.

The Longest and Shortest Bible Verses.

The ninth verse of the eighth chapter of Esther is the long verse in the Bible, containing ninety words. The shortest in the Old Testament is the twenty-fifth verse of the first chapter of I Chronicles. The shortest in the Bible is the thirty-fifth verse of the eleventh chapter of St. John.

ALL AROUND THE HOUSE.

Charming Fancies in Flowers—A Rose Ball Described.

A "rose ball" was the charming and expensive form of decoration chosen for a recent English fancy ball. Roses of every description smothered the house and burdened the air with perfume. Rose lights from the deepest flame to the palest yellow. The staircases was covered with arches of roses. The mirrors in the ball room were surrounded with roses. There were roses for the ceiling, and there were trails of flowers from pillar to pillar. Most of the ladies carried posies of roses, and the gentlemen wore roses in their button holes.

In places of the heavy bouquet there is a pretty fancy for carrying posies from which hang chatelaines of flowers or ribbon picked out with blooms. They drop nearly to the edge of the dress. Women also carry flowers in reference to their names. Thus at a wedding the bridesmaids will carry roses or lilies if the bride's name happens to be Lily or Rose.

In the Dining Room.

In selecting the furniture of the dining room The Decorator and Furnisher advises to avoid the stereotyped and tasteless buffet. There is one made with an oval lower and mirror running the whole length of it as the top, with one narrow shelf above. Under the drawers are three sliding panels, instead of doors, covering as many compartments, which is unique and useful. It costs $40 in oak, and there is no better wood for a dining room. Chairs and a lounge to match may be either covered with leather or simply cane bottomed, but they must be well made and strong.

Where the outlook is dingy and the light poor the dining room is greatly improved by extra sashes of painted or tinted glass, not more than twelve or fifteen inches wide. These can be fitted into the casing without disturbing the other sash, and the shade and window hangings are suspended to its lower edge.

As for the floor, no one who has ever used wood, either hard or soft pine, stained, will ever willingly carpet the entire room. The rug of Indian figures ought to be large enough to prevent the scraping of chairs on the bare floor.

Tea Cakes.

Mix two pounds of sifted flour, one and three-fourths pounds of sugar, one and a half pounds of butter and seven eggs (or half these quantities), rubbing the flour and sugar together first, then the butter, as you would for short bread; then add the whites of the eggs when they are beaten to a stiff froth. Roll out the mixture very thin, and cut into biscuits with a paste cutter. Bake on a hot griddle. These are a delicious afternoon tea cake. Another recipe is as follows: Rub one-half pound of butter into one pound of sifted flour, beat up an egg and mix it with half a pint of new milk, and sweeten with one-quarter of a pound of sifted sugar. Mix the flour and milk into a paste, roll it out thin, and cut into any shape you like. Bake on a griddle, and when done let the cakes stand on their ends till cold.

French Pudding.

Beat up two ounces of butter to a cream, and add the same weight of flour and sugar. When well beaten together add half a pint of milk, a few drops at a time, and keep stirring to prevent lumps, and fill them with the mixture; bake in a slow oven; when done, turn them out, and arrange them one on the top of the other, with jam spread in between. They can then be cut, if desired.

To Refinish a Hard Wood Floor.

A practical woman gives us the following recipe for refinishing a hard wood floor: Melt one pound of beeswax and mix it with a pint of turpentine. When cold it will be of the consistency of hard or axle grease. Apply it sparingly to the floor with a rag; allow it to stand four or five hours, until the turpentine has evaporated, then whip the floor dry with a clean cloth.

A Handsome Work Bag.

The attractive bag here depicted has its base formed of two squares of card board, the corners of which are rounded off; each piece is lined with satin on one side only, and round one is sewn a band of oriental embroidery measuring 23½ inches by 11¼ inches, the extra fullness allowed for the turning of the corners being caught in a few plaits under a mixed cord placed 2 inches from the edge, which is also bound with cord, and likewise the base.

EMBROIDERED WORK BAG.

The band, which is usually made with the borders of Turkish towels, is lined with sateen or soft silk, and inside is inserted the second square of canvas, edged with lining uppermost; it is intended to give more firmness to the foundation and more neatness to the inside. A strip of plush, crushed velvet, or ribbon is added to the top and drawn at the mouth with two mixed cords with tassels at each end; the lifting produced by the drawing of the strings is handily lined with silk of a contrasting color.

Ice Creams.

Ice cream freezers are so cheap and easily managed that many persons would make their own cream if they only knew how. Caldwell's Prattigower gives a few hints which may prove useful:

Coffee extract is used in flavoring coffee cream.

Always cook custards slowly.

In making ice cream if it is to be frozen at once let the cooked mixture cool in the saucepan, otherwise turn it into a bowl.

Too rich cream will not freeze.

Very rich milk will make a fair ice cream but thin cream, such as is suitable for whipping, will not.

In making ice cream from clear cream, heat the cream to the boiling point, add the sugar, and if the flavoring is added at this time it will be better, but a larger quantity will be needed.

For fruit cream the fruit should be crushed, the sugar added and allowed to stand one or two hours, then strained.

For strawberry cream use one quart of cream, one quart of fresh strawberries and one pint of sugar. Crush the strawberries, add the sugar, let it stand two hours and strain.

MRS. DRAKE HELD.

HELD TO BAIL FOR THE ACTION OF THE GRAND JURY.

On the Charge of Assault and Battery on Her Ten-year-old Step-son, Douglas Drake.—To Be Hearing This Afternoon.

The postponed hearing in the case of the State vs. Mrs. Newton P. Drake, on the charge of assault and battery on her ten-year-old step-son, Douglas Drake, the complainant being the boy's grand-mother, Mrs. Drake's mother-in-law, was begun before Justice Henry, at his home this afternoon at two o'clock.

Prosecutor Steele appeared for the State, and Corporation Counsel Marsh for Mrs. Drake.

The child is a pitiable-looking object from cuts and bruises on his head and body, which Mrs. Drake is accused of having caused, though the boy has told conflicting stories about the matter, at first denying that they were caused by his step-mother.

A number of prominent ladies in the borough have, from highly commendable motives, taken up the case in behalf of the child, believing the step-mother guilty, and she had intimated that she would be present to protest her, though she emphatically protests that she is innocent of the cruelty, and declares that she has never known the child any more than necessary for its protection, as any mother would.

Sympathy for her she suffers at the hand from the prejudice against step-mothers, and everybody is ready to believe everything against her, whether she is guilty or not, especially as she seems to have been of an irritable temperament, according to reports, and it is quite certain that no human mortal could be guilty of such a fiendish crime as the one charged—she—if the proof of her guilt is a legal and moral certainty cannot be established and she escape punishment—will have to be hereafter a mother unknown, and she is brought to a realization of the awfulness of the offense, and the penalty on conviction.

If she should be proven guilty, it would be charitable to suppose that she has been suffering from some species of insanity and was not responsible for her acts.

The law requires that innocence shall be presumed until guilt is proven, and that there cannot shall be given the benefit of every doubt. One's indignation is apt to be aroused to the highest pitch against any one who would treat a helpless child with cruelty, and this feeling is apt to be directed against who ever should be even suspected of it, as Mrs. Drake undoubtedly is by her relatives and women generally who hearing of what are ready to believe all.

The case was called at 2:30 o'clock.

Mr. Marsh, in behalf of his client, said: "Mrs. Drake is now in a carriage with her father in such an utter state of nervous prostration as to to be unable to appear in any court. I, therefore, in her behalf, will waive the indictment to await the action of the Grand Jury, as we are unable by reason of her physical condition to proceed at the time we demanded an examination we did so in good faith, and fanticipate that we fully intended to proceed with the case; but cannot, for the reason already stated. There is no ground for adverse criticism on our part against those who prompted this prosecution. They thought they were doing their duty, but they are laboring under a sad mistake. Mrs. Drake is not guilty as she will be able to prove to the satisfaction of all, at the proper time, when she is in proper condition. If the prosecutor sees fit to conduct the examination here all right if not, the matter will have to go to the Grand Jury.

Justice Hardy then held the defendant in $500 bail for her appearance before the Grand Jury.

The room in which the hearing was to have taken place was crowded with prominent citizens of both sexes, a number of whom were summoned as witnesses.

There are ten witnesses in all for the prosecution, including Mrs. Drake's step-children. The latter remained on the sidewalk on the north side of the street, and seemed greatly grieved.

Justice Hardy took the bail bond out to a close carriage at the door, where Mrs. Drake was seated, and she there signed the bond, a near relative and J. P. Hoagan becoming surety for her appearance, after which she was taken to her home. She showed signs of much suffering from the strain upon her, because of the occasion.

—The members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union are to hold a strawberry festival on the lawn of Mr. Richard Garrison from 5:00 to 10 o'clock to-day, on the corner of Park avenue and Sixth street. The following is a programme of the Kitchen Garden, and the ladies most cordially invite their friends to call on them between the hours named: Strawberries, cocoanut balls, boiled cream candy, boiled tongue, hot biscuit, brown bread, cake, ice cream, hot potato chips, lettuce, pickles, rice pudding, baked custard. There will be music from seven to ten p. m.

Mornage, alias Gap. Gap."

ANOTHER VICTORY.

THE CRESCENTS HACK THE CELEBRATED HACKETT NINE.

Saturday's Game at Ball a Brilliant One.—The Large Crowd Which Witnessed It Was Well Pleased With the Result.—The Score 9 to 8.

The most interesting as well as the most exciting game of base ball that has ever occurred in this city took place on the Crescent League Saturday afternoon at 3:45 o'clock between the Crescents of this city and the Hackett-Carhart team of New York.

When the game was called nearly every seat in the grand stands and on the "bleachers" was occupied and the spectators awaited anxiously to hear Umpire Bowman order the nesus to play ball.

Neither side made a run in the first inning, but in the second inning the Hackettites came to the bat first and succeeded in making one run before the inning closed. When the Crescents went to the bat Freddie Jones the catcher also made a run for the home team. This tied the score and the excitement ran high. The Crescents again soon returned to their respective positions in the field but they did not remain their long as the Hackets went out in one, two, three order.

Not another run was made on either side until the close of the fifth inning, when "Billy" Lee, the Crescents' popular third baseman, went to the bat and hit the ball for two bases. Billy finally reached the home plate and thus another run was added to the Crescents' score.

When Lee scored the applause was tremendous and lasted several minutes. This was the run that won the game, for neither team made one afterward, and the remaining innings were a succession of "goose eggs."

Gregg, the Crescents' pitcher, did excellent work in the box, and Jones, the catcher, backed him up well. Martin in his position as short stop had a number of chances which he availed himself of and assisted in putting several men out at first base. McIndoe proved a valuable acquisition to the team and caught several "flys," which were knocked to him in left field. In fact every man played his position for all it was worth and that accounts for such good results.

The Hackett-Carharts also played a splendid game, but the Crescents were a little too much for them.

The teams were made up as follows:

Crescents—Martin, ss.; Lafferty, 2b.; Wiegand, 1b.; Jones, c.; Gillis, c.f.; McIndoe, l.f.; Gregg, p.; Lee, 3b.; Walker, r.f.

Hackett-Carharts—Moorehead, s.s.; Kraus, c.; Hammel, c.f.; Dives, 1b.; Barry, 2b.; Wiley, l.f.; Nugent, 3b.; Carmichael, r.f.; Gough, extra.

Annexed is the score by innings:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Crescents.....	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	8—9

OTHER GAMES.

The Young Crescents of this city defeated a Scotch Plains nine in a game of base ball Saturday morning by a score of 10 to 5. The game was played at Scotch Plains. J. Sutphen and C. Sutphen comprised the battery for the Young Crescents.

The White Caps of this city defeated the Stars of Westfield on their grounds on Spencer avenue Saturday afternoon by the score 11 to 4. Only seven innings were played. The nine were few and scattered. The White Caps' short stop, Mahnke's two legs hit a fence and is home, run as the ball was lost. Burt's high fly was caught by centre fielder Weber of the Stars. The visitor made two double plays. Reichle's umpiring gave general satisfaction. Below is the score by innings:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7
White Caps.....	0	6	1	1	0	3	*—11
Stars.....	0	0	0	0	0	4	0— 4

Batteries, Stiver—Hardiman and Samson. White Caps—Burt and Ragan.

The Corinthian base ball club of New York visited Westfield Saturday afternoon and played a game of base ball with the Westfield Athletics. The game was uninteresting from the start, as the Westfield playing was superior to the visiting team in every way. At the conclusion the score stood 13 to 1 in favor of the home team.

The Metropolitan base ball club of New York will cross bats with the Crescents next Saturday afternoon.

Fourth of July Celebration.

The committee having in charge the arrangements for celebration the Fourth of July on Washington's Camp Grounds, near Bound Brook, held another meeting on Wednesday evening. The work is progressing nicely. The work of improving the Camp Ground is being rapidly pushed by Mr. Le Monde. Another flagstaff was planted on top of the mountain, at Table Rock, last week. This makes the third flagpole on the Camp Ground, and the three flags are displayed by Superintendent Reinhart Ramer every Wednesday and Saturday.

Injured by a Fall.

A boy named Scribner was thrown from a wagon on Somerset street about nine o'clock this morning, by the sudden starting up of a horse. In the fall the little fellow's head came in contact with the hub of the wheel and a gash was inflicted from which the blood flowed profusely. He was carried to his home near by, but when he arrived there he was so weak from loss of blood that he could scarcely stand.

Injured at Pond's.

Thomas Smalley, an employe of the Pond Machine Tool Works, while engaged at the works yesterday afternoon caught one of his fingers in a belt and had it severed and badly mangled it. A physician dressed the wound.

From there the party went to the boarding house at Continental Hotel. Yesterday was devoted to runs through Fairmount Park and out on Lancaster Pike. The Plainfielders speak in glowing terms of the hospitality shown them by the Philadelphians. This run is called a century on account of the distance being 100 miles. Along the line great crowds turned out to welcome the cyclists, especially at Trenton, Holmesburg, Frankford, and at the finish in Philadelphia.

Prof. Cornwell of Nebraska occupied the pulpit of the Methodist church last evening, at the request of the pastor, Rev. C. B. Mitchell, as his substitute to speak about the recent Temperance National Congress, to which the professor was a delegate, and which Mr. Mitchell was to have made the subject of his remarks. Prof. Cornwell spoke eloquently on the necessity of a general awakening on the question whether we are to submit as slaves to King Rum, whether wives must mourn and children and cast disgraced be ruined, homes demolished, and all the fruits of our industry given to enrich the rumseller. They were fighting a great battle in Omaha against the saloons, and hoped even against great odd to win. In the course of his remarks the professor said he had travelled over thirty five States, and considered Plainfield unrivalled in beauty. "It was, he thought, a veritable heaven on earth. "Unfortunately its beauty is marred," interjected Mr. Mitchell, "by saloons."

A vote was taken in the Bound Brook Presbyterian church recently for a pastor to supply the vacancy caused by the resignation of Rev. H. R. MacCauley, Revs. Messrs. Davis and Long were the candidates, and the former received the majority of the votes cast, but, as he had previously been called by the congregation three times and the latter only once, it was agreed (in order that all might be satisfied in the final choice) to postpone the election until Mr. Long should have had an equal chance to represent himself before the people.

Original Packages.

The "original package" excitement does not die down. Starting in Maine soon after the prohibitory law was passed the original package device spread to Iowa and Kansas, after the same kind of laws were enacted in those states. Considerable of a mix our state and national laws have made of the original package business. First there is a law that forbids any parcel shipped from one point to another anywhere in the Union shall not be stopped or broken till it reaches the person to whom it is sent, if its contents are anything lawful to be shipped by the statutes of the United States. It is not unlawful to ship liquors under those statutes, consequently "original packages" of such may be sent to anybody in any state of the Union. The receiver alone is entitled to take that parcel and break it. Packages have thus been shipped into Iowa made up of bottles containing no more than a gill of whisky. Even in a prohibition state the authorities could and can do nothing. If the receiver sell the contents of the package he is amenable to the laws of the state, but not till he himself opens and disposes of it can the law lay hands on him. In this way any amount of intoxicating liquors can be conveyed into a state.

The last report of the United States has decided that under the interstate commerce law whatever goods are not forbidden to be forwarded under the United States laws or under those of any of the several states may lawfully be conveyed into or through any of the states. Thus it will be seen that of all the devices invented for evading the temperance laws, the original package trick is the most adroit. Moreover it has been remarked that certain rockribbed United States senators, who are unalterably opposed to federal interference with the affairs of the different states, are enthusiastic advocates of this provision of the interstate commerce law.

A Cigarette Law.

Since the death of a little boy in Brooklyn, whose fatal disease was plainly traced to cigarette smoking, public opinion has been attracted anew to this subject. Convulsions, a wasting away of the body, with loss of memory and breaking down of the nervous system, are some of the results of the consumption of cigarettes by boys.

The New York legislature has passed a law on the subject that might be taken as a pattern by other states desiring to stop this ruinous practice. That is to say, as far as law can stop anything. Time and again it has been proved that public opinion must enforce a law or it is no good. So ignorant are parents themselves of the deadly effects of cigarettes that in many cases they permit their boys to smoke them at home. Later, when these fair, handsome boys turn out drunkards or opium eaters, or grow into stunted, pale little men, the parents may or may not remember the cigarette smoking.

The New York law is as follows:

No child, actually or apparently under 16 years of age, shall smoke or in any way use any cigar, cigarette or substance in any form whatsoever, in any public street, place or resort. A violation of this subdivision shall be a misdemeanor, and shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $50 and not less than $10 for each offense.

It may be remarked that dealers, when asked by a boy who comes under the specified age for cigarettes, will tell the boy to send some one older than himself, and then he can let him have the goods.

An interesting sign of the times is the fact that the Harvard authorities have practically decided to shorten the college course three to three years. President Eliot indorses the new idea heartily. The reason for the change is that technical and professional studies now take so much time that if a student should in every case pass through the full college course, and then occupy in study the years afterward required to fit him for his special occupation, he would spend about a third of his lifetime in school. It is a wise argument. "When I became a man I put away childish things," said Gen. Butler on a noted occasion, referring to the Latin he had learned at school and forgotten.

The general assembly of the United Presbyterian church include in their resolutions on reform a request that in his Thanksgiving proclamation the president of the United States incorporate a recognition of Jesus Christ as the supreme ruler of the nation. But how will that strike our half million Jewish fellow citizens, and the equally large number of Unitarians, agnostics and Buddhists?

In the manual training instruction of the Cleveland public schools is included a course in electrical mechanics, which is full of interest to the pupils.

Electric traction for long distances is now the problem over which the engineers are laboring, and they will solve it sooner or later.

WATCHED BY YANKEE WARSHIPS.

The United States and Great Britain May Block the Czar's Little Game—Tokio Students Apologize to a New Jersey Missionary They Had Severely Beaten.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 16.—Advices from Japan state that there are many rumors concerning attempts by the Russians to take Corea. There is some trouble in Corea, but the Japanese officials know nothing definite as to its nature. All that is surely known is that all of the British men-of-war are lying in the harbor with steam up and under orders to sail at a moment's notice. The American naval force, under Rear Admiral Belknap, is also expecting orders to sail for Corea. An officer of the British ship Severn said to the United Press representative that he had seen dispatches and orders which would astound the foreigners in Japan.

Our New Minister Arrives.

The dispatches from Corea say that the new United States minister, Augustin Heard, has arrived there and that the retiring minister, H. A. Dinsmore, is about to depart. The latter was presented with a testimonial of esteem by the foreigners of the country.

They Apologized to the Rev. Dr. Imbrey.

The Japanese advices state that the students of Tokio have apologized to Rev. Dr. Imbrey, the New Jersey missionary who was severely beaten by them some weeks ago. Mr. Imbrey has entirely recovered, the excitement is subsiding, and it is believed no more will be heard of the matter. The foreigners, however, feel outraged that the guilty parties have not been punished. They were simply required to apologize. The abuse of native students now becoming bolder every day, the insults to foreigners are increasing. The settlers coming from Yokohama are armed with revolvers, Winchesters, Henry rifles and show of violence. The government seems to be doing all possible to deal with the students as a class, but as incivility can be defined them as individuals because of their desperate character.

Thousands Starving in Tokio.

In the meantime the distress among thousands of the starving people of Tokio and other large cities is being ameliorated to a great extent by the foreigners as well as by the Japanese noblemen. One nobleman is feeding a thousand people a day out of his own funds. The price of rice is higher than ever before both in Japan and Corea and this is probably only the forecast of the suffering that is to follow. The outlook for the growing crop of rice is not good, owing to continuous rain.

Changes in the Ministry.

As a result of various changes in the Japanese ministry, Mutsu Munemitsu, formerly minister to the United States, becomes minister of agriculture and commerce, Count Oyama is minister of war, and Count Aoki minister of foreign affairs.

ON A FALLING BRIDGE.

Eight Persons Seriously Injured at Cleveland.

CLEVELAND, June 16.—There was a serious accident last evening at Beverle's park, a summer resort in the southern part of the city. At least 5,000 people had assembled to see a man jump from a cable stretched across a miniature artificial lake. People stood all around the lake, and a hundred or more were on the bridge. The bridge about ten feet above the ground and extending across the lake.

The jumper made the descent about 6:30 o'clock. He struck the water near the shore, and the people on the bridge made a rush for the place. Nearly all of them were precipitated from a short span adjoining the bluff. The structure fell with a crash, going down in the middle. The footpaths under the bridge were crowded with people, and upon them the timbers fell, while those on the bridge were thrown in a heap in the center of the span where it struck the ground.

At least twenty-five persons were injured more or less seriously, but only eight were hurt so badly that they had to go to a hospital. Following is a list of the seriously injured:

James Sanford, 32 years, right leg fractured and internal injuries—probably fatal.

Rudolph Woodrick, 28 years, right leg fractured and head bruised.

Mrs. Rudolph Woodrick, spine and shoulder bruised.

Jesse Caldwell, 17 years, ankle fractured and arm badly bruised.

Bertha Hunter, 15 years, right hip fractured and internal injuries.

Annie Thoman, 14 years, right ankle broken.

Mary Thoman, 22 years, back and head injured.

Unknown one legged man, leg broken.

Had the bridge broken over the lake the list of deaths would have been large.

Drowned Near Rochester.

ROCHESTER, N.Y., June 16.—Three young men from the city—John Hirschman, of 66 Calvin street, Emanuel Smith and another named Dergle—took a carryall and drove to the bay Sunday afternoon. They rented a boat on the west side and rowed across the bay to a picnic. All went quite freely and started back about 4 p. m. When about half way over the boat was capsized. Hirschman, who was sitting in the middle of the boat, was drowned. The other two men managed to keep afloat until help reached them.

Knocked Out with a Brick.

PHILADELPHIA, June 16.—Isaac Sampson (colored) quarreled with his wife at Angors, Delaware county, Pa., and slashed her about the head with a razor. Citizens attempted to arrest him, but he held them at bay with his razor until a well directed brick thrown by one of the crowd brought him to the grass and he was secured. The wife was brought to the University hospital. Her wounds are serious. Sampson was locked up.

The Grand Prix de Paris Race.

PARIS, June 16.—The race for the Grand Prix de Paris, of 100,000 francs, was run and resulted in a victory for Baron A. de Schickler's b. c. Fitz Roya; Mr. F. Schickler's b. c. Fitz Hampton, second, and Mr. N. Peck's b. c. Odd Fellow, third. Time, 2:37. There were thirteen starters. Wanderer and Le Nord, the favorites, ran unplaced.

WHAT CONGRESS WILL DO.

Forecast of the Week's Business in Senate and House.

WASHINGTON, June 16.—The general silver debate which has been prolonged for so many weeks will come to an end today, and by dark Allen will conclude one of the five minute rule until a vote is reached. The pending measure is the house bill as amended in the committee on finance.

It will then go into conference, the chief point of difference between the two houses being the proposition to make the silver certificates legal tender and to make them redeemable in bullion at the option of the secretary of the treasury on demand of the owner. The matter is not likely to be disposed of finally for some time.

Following the silver bill, Mr. Platt, the chairman of the committee on territories, has arranged to call up the bill for the admission of Idaho as a state. It is thought after that the Idaho admission bill. Senator Allison, the chairman of the committee on appropriations, has promised that the appropriation bills with any of the appropriation bills. It is the intention of the Democrats to offer an omnibus bill admitting Idaho, Arizona and New Mexico) as a substitute for the Wyoming bill, and the debate will be on that measure. Mr. Platt has said that he will present the report of the committee in favor of the bills and make no further argument. In this event the debate on the two bills is likely to be brief, and they are likely to be disposed of finally for some time.

Mr. Frye, chairman of the committee on commerce, will have the river and harbor bill before the senate by that time, and he has the assurance that Senators Allison and Aldrich, of the committee on finance, will not call up the tariff bill, which will by that time have been reported, until the river and harbor bill is out of the way. Senator Morrill's agricultural college bill is down for consideration on Thursday. It may be crowded out by some other measure.

Before the end of the week the house will probably have passed the new federal election bill by the Republican caucus. The bill will probably be introduced in the house early this week, and after the committee on the election of presidential and vice electors has made its purely perfunctory report on it the house will take it up for consideration.

The senate thinks the house bill may run into the following week. The consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill will take the place on Monday of general appropriation bills, which the

Sam Kee Abducts a Pretty Providence Girl.

RESCUED BY A CAB DRIVER.

They Went to New York on a Fall River Boat—The Girl Was to Have Been Taken to Sam Yee's Former Prison on Mott Street.

NEW YORK, June 16.—The big Fall River boat Puritan, which reached here early yesterday morning, had two very mysterious passengers on board. One was a sorrowful looking Chinaman, whose face did not tell whether he was 20 or 40, and the other was a blue eyed little girl of 15. Both traveled on first class tickets, but on the forward deck the sound they kept aloop from each other.

An Ill Assorted Pair.

When the Puritan was fast to her dock the Chinaman was among the first to land. He waited on the pier a moment until the little girl came tripping down the gangplank dressed in a neat gown of dark brown and a jaunty black straw hat over her brown hair. She seemed to be on good terms with the Mongolian and chatted merrily with him as they walked down the pier. The loungers and hack drivers on the wharf eyed the ill assorted pair, but the girl didn't seem to mind it a bit.

It Was Sam Yee's Prison.

At the door of the shed the Chinaman met Steward Garkin, who was waiting with his hack for a fare, and began to bargain with him on the spot. Garkin thought things looked mighty queer, and when the Chinaman told him he wanted to be driven with the girl to 11 Mott street Garkin remembered that that was the house from which the Chinese girl, Suen Yee, was rescued. He agreed to carry the body for $2, but when he got on his box he drove to the Prince street police station, and rushed upon the sergeant at the desk and told him of his two passengers. Capt. Thompson took the pair to Jefferson Market court, where the whole story came out before Justice White.

The Chinaman's Promises.

The Chinaman said he was Sam Kee, the proprietor of a laundry at Page and Broad streets, Providence, and the girl said she was Annie Lawrence, and lived in Providence, too. But by bit she told Justice White how she had come to make the trip to New York with Sam Kee. She met him, she said, about a month ago when she was working in a wire factory on Stewart street. He went to his laundry first with a friend of hers who introduced her to Sam, who was very polite to her. Annie made some other visits after that to the laundry alone. Then Sam proposed that they come to New York and promised her silk dresses and a diamond ring or two. She showed the judge a fancy gold ring on her finger which she said Sam had given her. On Saturday night Sam Kee left his laundry and took a Fall River, where he got two state rooms on board the Puritan.

Held for Abduction.

By this time Sam Kee had got hold of a lawyer, who advised him not to say anything and to ask for an examination. Justice White accordingly held him in $1,500 bail for examination on the charge of abduction, and set the case down for next Friday. Sam Kee gave his pedigree to the court in very good English. He is 28 years old and a native of the Celestial Empire. He is in this city. Agent Schultess, of Mr. Gerry's society, took the girl up to the society's rooms in Twenty-third street. It is possible, that if she had once got within the walls of the Mott street tenement she would never have been heard from again.

That is the place where Lee Kui succeeded in keeping Suen Yee imprisoned for a year after he had bought her for $600 from Ah Hoon, a Chinese gambler. All the tenants of No. 11 were looks of ignorance when they were asked about Sam Kee, and said they didn't know him.

Was She a Willing Companion?

PROVIDENCE, June 16.—Annie Lawrence, who accompanied Sam Kee to New York, was employed formerly at the American Electrical works, E. F. Phillips, manager, on Stewart street. Annie, it is feared, has been rather wayward and headstrong for several months. She is an orphan. Sam Kee has been a shining light at the "Round Top" Sunday school. It is believed that Annie was a willing companion in the escapade.

To Commemorate Cornwallis' Surrender.

WASHINGTON, June 16.—This afternoon a select party left the Baltimore and Ohio depot, for a visit to Yorktown, Va., to inspect the monument erected there to commemorate the surrender of Cornwallis at that place. The party is made up of companies from the thirteen original states and a few invited guests, who are under the care of Col. J. E. Peyton, a gentleman who has figured in every large event of this character. From Baltimore the party will take a York river steamer at 5 o'clock and will be met at West Point by the government steamer Dispatch. Tuesday morning they will be entertained by Mr. Cruikshank, the present occupant of the Moore house, in which the treaty capitulations were prepared.

The Cloak Makers Will Hold Out.

NEW YORK, June 16.—The striking cloak makers met Sunday and received assurances of sympathy from the fishmen and operators. The cutters who went out in sympathy with the strikers were also present. The meeting was secret, but it is understood that it was decided to hold out indefinitely. A committee was appointed to wait on the bosses and discuss their grievances.

John Wanamaker Will Speak.

CHESTER, Pa., June 16.—The baccalaureate sermon to the corps of cadets at the Pennsylvania Military academy, Sunday, was delivered by Rev. Merritt Hulbert, D. D., of Philadelphia. The annual address will be delivered Wednesday evening by Hon. John Wanamaker, and on Thursday the closing military and literary exercises will take place.

A Postoffice Looted.

MAY'S LANDING, N. J., June 16.—Burglars broke into the postoffice at Pleasantville some time after midnight and blew open the safe. They secured a large amount of stamps and money and also took the contents of a number of registered letters. The burglars left a kit of tools behind them and are supposed to have come from Philadelphia.

Fugitives Captured by the Sheriff.

WATERBURY, Conn., June 16.—Ed McDonald, better known as "Pakie," and Jack Rooney, of New Haven, said to be Jack Dougherty, went to the old stone mill at Union City early Sunday morning to fight for $100 and the gate receipts. Just as Referee Henry Murphy stepped into the ring Sheriff Sweeney and a posse appeared with drawn revolvers and captured the pugilists. They moved quickly to Bridgeport, followed by Dougherty, who escaped from the officers. McDonald is in the Naugatuck station house and Dougherty is in the woods clad only in his tights.

That Albany Bank Rumor True.

ALBANY, June 16.—It has been learned that the rumors of trouble in another banking institution were well founded. The Albany County bank has just changed its cashier, the former one dying. It is now admitted that at the time of his death Mr. Templeton owed the bank $20,000. It is thought that this may be recovered, but it is also stated that the bank has lost $20,000 through transactions of Michael Gillies, a cattle merchant. Gillies is the deposed assemblyman from this district. The bank hangs on by its eyelids. The Cunningham was being towed by the Gen. Siegel. The fireman of the Siegel, William Hart, tried to cut the hawser attached to the tug's stern. He was struck on the head by the deck house of the Cunningham, knocked overboard and drowned.

A Boy Fatally Kicked.

PHILADELPHIA, June 16.—Neill O'Donnell, 15 years old, kicked Joseph Mullen, about the same age, in the stomach on Monday last, and the latter is dying at the Presbyterian hospital. The operation of laparotomy was performed, but little hope is entertained of the boy's recovery. O'Donnell says that Mullen took some liberties from his (O'Donnell's) brother, and in a quarrel that followed Mullen received his injuries. O'Donnell is under arrest.

Honoring American Riflemen.

BREMEN, June 16.—The Schutzenfest committee assembled Saturday and marched to the hotel where the American riflemen are quartered, conducting them to the Schutzenhof. The greatest enthusiasm prevailed along the route. In the rifle hall of the Schutzenhof the visitors were entertained at a banquet, after which, in the afternoon, the shooting contest began. A ball was given in honor of the visitors.

Gibbons and Mahan Matched.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 16.—The Occidental club of this city has matched Billy Mahan, the coast champion light weight, against the celebrated Newark (N. J.) pugilist, Austin Gibbons. The purse will be one of $1,000, of which the loser's end is $300, and the battle will probably come off the latter part of July.

AMUSEMENT AND INSTRUCTION FOR BRIGHT BOYS AND GIRLS.

Marjorie's Pet Dolly and the Ode Dedicated to Her After Time Had Destroyed Her Charms—"Marjorie Loves You Just the Same."

Dolly dear, last year, when you were new,
You were quite pretty, that is true,
Though now you look so queerly.
Your cheeks were red, and your eyes were blue,
You'd arms and legs, and feet you had, too.

HOW YOU LOOK SO QUEERLY.

There were few in the city so pretty as you,
Dolly dear, last year, when you were new;
And Marjorie loved you dearly;
But now your cheek's no longer red;
Your nose is broken, so's your head;
You've lost, and lost, and lost some;
You've—But Marjorie loves you just the same,
Dolly dear. —St. Nicholas.

A Vagabond, but Good Friend.

A lady tells this story of two four footed vagabonds says The Examiner:

"One day at a railway station I met a wretched little white cur, and I said: 'Come on, and I will give you something to eat.' We went together into the dining room, and after he had eaten a good meal off he went in a hurry. 'He is not very grateful,' I said to my friend. But much to my surprise in a few minutes there was a little pet sitch at the door, and when it was opened he walked my small friend, accompanied by a dog that looked as much like a mongrel himself. He seemed to say: 'Allow me to introduce my friend, Mr. Black, and if you will provide him with as good a dinner as I had, I shall be very much be much obliged.' Needless to say, they both had a meal which doubtless they remember to this day; after which they trotted away together, wagging their tails, as happy and contented as dogs could be."

What Are Orchids?

What is an orchid? A plant whose home is in the tropical forests, and yet a plant which is not dependent for its sustenance upon the earth or water in their vicinity. Such it is a family of the vegetable world, which, perched in the air, sends out its long, searching roots and draws its nourishment from the atmosphere. So much real in its nature, so far as this characteristic is concerned, it is very substantial in the valuation which its owners and admirers place upon plants of rare varieties.

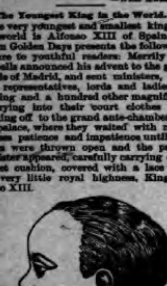
According to The Boston Advertiser, experts in this branch of horticulture say that some the rarer are well worth $5,000 each, and have been held at even higher figures. Their rarity, the difficulty with which they are propagated, the exquisite delicacy, coloring and great variety of bloomers are the reasons given for these extraordinary values.

Funny's Reply.

"With four such soft and lovely paws,
You never ought to show your claws.
You naughty—"
"That your red lips, without a doubt,
Were made to kiss and not to pout,"
Said puss, "you know quite well."
—Wide Awake.

The Youngest King in the World.

The very youngest and smallest king in the world is Alfonso XIII of Spain, of whom Golden Days presents the following picture to youthful readers: Merrily the joy bells announced his advent to the good people of Madrid, and sent ministers, foreign representatives and ladies-in-waiting and a hundred other magnificos, scurrying into their court clothes and dashing off to the grand reception hall in the palace, where they waited with more or less patience and impatience until the doors were thrown open and the prime minister appeared, carefully carrying on a velvet cushion, covered with a lace veil, his very little royal highness, King Alfonso XIII.



ALFONSO XIII OF SPAIN.

Gravely, and with true Castilian decorum, was the baby monarch presented to the noble assemblage, and then the Duchess Medina de las Torres took him in her arms and bore him to his mother, bidding her, "Give his majesty, the king!" Five days later there came the christening, when the ceremonies were of regal magnificence, and all the grandees flocked to do honor to the baby Bourbon. Indeed, this tiny king seems to have been born to ceremony, and in his four years of life has assisted at nearly public affairs.

That little Alfonso is not a strong child, and the past winter he has been so ill that great fears were entertained for his life. His high forehead, however, bespeaks intelligence, and he is well guarded and tended, while each summer he goes with his mother and young sisters to the beautiful palace of "La Granja," among the forests, where the sea inhale the fragrant, spicy odors of the pine forests and lead a free country life. Should he live he will become in the hands of nurses and governesses until he is seven, at which age he will be turned over to a tutor and masters to receive a thorough education, while at eighteen he is to be presented to the people, the queen regent will retire and he becomes ruler in fact as well as in name.

Shaken Milk.

Milk is a perfect food. The testimony of nations upon this point is confirmed by the analysis of the chemist. Yet cow's milk is in bad repute for infants, and thousands of adults cannot drink it without harm.

This is a serious matter. Multitudes of infants are shut up to the use of cow's milk, while it is precisely what many invalid adults seem to require for the building up of the wasted tissues. The manner is all the more important because physicians of the present day, instead of withholding food, as was formerly done in by-gone days, in the case of fever diseases, tend to maintain the patient's strength by the use of milk.

Dr. John C. Morgan expresses the opinion that the trouble with cow's milk is that it undergoes unwholesome chemical change prior to its use.

When fresh from the cow it is a perfectly homogenous fluid. Within a few hours it separates into cream and common milk, with a tendency to a still further separation into whey and curd. This final separation takes place rapidly after the milk is received into the stomach, and the curd, in weak stomachs, hardens into a solid cheese-like mass, as difficult of digestion as cheese itself.

The original condition and digestibility of milk can be restored by vigorously shaking it for a few minutes. It then the stomach, and he milk should be sipped, and not taken in large swallows.—Youth's Companion.

An Instructive Exercise.

About two years ago a wealthy New Yorker brought to London with him a story of the wonderful proficiency detectives attain by practicing their powers of observation.

A famous Scotland Yard officer had been interviewed, and it was said that he was able, after one sweeping glance at any store window, to tell everything displayed therein. He said that he practiced this trick in the streets, so that whenever he went into the house of a criminal or a suspect he was able to see everything around him at a glance.

Whether the published interview led to anything in London I do not know. But the New Yorker came home and applied the principle into his dining room, and after he had eaten a good meal off he went in a hurry. 'He is not very grateful,' I said to my friend. But much to my surprise in a few minutes there was a little pet sitch at the door, and when it was opened he walked my small friend, accompanied by a dog that looked as much like a mongrel himself. He seemed to say: 'Allow me to introduce my friend, Mr. Black, and if you will provide him with as good a dinner as I had, I shall be very much be much obliged.' Needless to say, they both had a meal which doubtless they remember to this day; after which they trotted away together, wagging their tails, as happy and contented as dogs could be."

What Are Orchids?

What is an orchid? A plant whose home is in the tropical forests, and yet a plant which is not dependent for its sustenance upon the earth or water in their vicinity. Such it is a family of the vegetable world, which, perched in the air, sends out its long, searching roots and draws its nourishment from the atmosphere. So much real in its nature, so far as this characteristic is concerned, it is very substantial in the valuation which its owners and admirers place upon plants of rare varieties.

According to The Boston Advertiser, experts in this branch of horticulture say that some the rarer are well worth $5,000 each, and have been held at even higher figures. Their rarity, the difficulty with which they are propagated, the exquisite delicacy, coloring and great variety of bloomers are the reasons given for these extraordinary values.

Funny's Reply.

"With four such soft and lovely paws,
You never ought to show your claws.
You naughty—"
"That your red lips, without a doubt,
Were made to kiss and not to pout,"
Said puss, "you know quite well."

WHAT MARRIAGE COSTS.

EXPERIENCE OF A MAN WHO BEGAN HOUSEKEEPING ON $500.

How the House Was Furnished and What the Various Articles Cost—A Careful and Prudent Wife an Essential to Success—Pointers for Young People.

I have been married one year, and have been keeping house during that time.

The problem of finance is always a difficult one to solve in the mind of the bachelor married man, and there is no man who is married this problem is uppermost, at least for the first and second years.

To gauge the furnishing of a home satisfactorily one's income and savings, and to determine how well one may live and still keep his head above water, and even to lay by something, is no easy thing to do, and my first year's experience with the financial part of married life may be of interest, and perhaps of material value, to those men not to live in mind to take unto themselves wives.

When I first met the lady who is now my wife it was in the spring of 1888, and I had about $500 saved. I was then earning $3.00 per day, which had been increased to that figure gradually from $2.50, and was afterward further increased to $3 per day.

From that date until my marriage, in the summer of 1889 I saved enough from my salary to amount to about $900, which, after figuring and figuring again and again, I considered would be sufficient to marry with and furnish a home.

To furnish my home, which is a tenement of five rooms, as a rental of $25 per month, cost as follows:

Kitchen—Table, $2.25; three chairs, $1.20; seventeen yards oilcloth, $1.36; No. 7 range, one coal, $9.50; groceries necessary to start with, including a barrel of flour, which lasted ten months, $10; other furniture, not including dishware, which was received as a wedding present by the bride, $21; refrigerator, $14. The above includes a small oil stove, a most useful article, making the total for furnishing the kitchen $66.35.

Chamber—Twenty-eight yards wool carpet at 75½ cents, $14.70; one pair portieres, $6.00; two shades, $1.50; one pair of mattress, pillows, springs and comforters, all the best, $13.36; total, $64.95.

Spare Chamber—Sixteen and one-half yards tapestry carpet at 75 cents, $12.75; one pair lace curtains, $3.00; one shade, 90 cents; one antique ash set, $20; mattress, pillows, comforters, springs, all the best, $13.50; total, $50.30.

Sitting Room—Twenty-seven yards tapestry carpet at 77 cents, $20.79; one pair portieres, $6.45; two shades, $1.50; lounge lounge, $9; bronze mirror, $9; extension table, $9; sheet iron stove, $18; four chairs, $8; making a total of $83.04.

Parlor—Twenty-seven yards tapestry at $1, $25; three pairs lace curtains, $10.95; mantel mirror, $10.50; center table, $6; plush set, five shades, $2.40; making a total of $121.35.

In the above furnishings all the curtains and shades were put up at the figures given, and the carpets were made, laid and lined.

Wedding expenses, including valuable gift to the bride, tour, clothing outfit, etc., $225.

Insurance of $600 on goods for five years, $8.75.

It cost me to get married, furnish my home and scrip into it all ready to live, $623.12.

By allowing $20 for tour, $10 for gift to bride, $20 for kitchen, $20 for sleeping room's fee, and $10 for wedding ring, the wedding expenses might have been reduced $98.12, in which case the total cost would have been $525.07.

Then I find by experience that my wife and I can live well on $5 per week, and then, after paying house rent, I will allowing $2 per week for clothing and the necessary gradual additions to household goods, and after paying a certain reasonable amount for papers, magazines, church, matinee, etc., I can lay by about $5 per week.

Hence my conclusion is that a man may get married on a salary of $13 per week, if he has $525 or $600 saved to furnish his home, or, if he earns a salary of only $12 per week, he can furnish his home as well as I furnished mine, and get married, provided he has saved $1,000.

Why save so much? I will tell you. On a salary of $13 nothing will be saved to meet extraordinary expenses that are naturally liable to be met with. For instance, you are liable to have an addition to your family, and if so it will cost at least $50, and how can this expense be met if nothing has been saved unless there is a balance in the bank?

And besides these if life are often times financially the hardest, for there are so many small articles to buy that to save much out of one's salary is almost impossible, hence the importance of having a reserve fund with which to meet these expenses, or else meet them with a good salary.

If a young married man will carefully guide his financial matters, with the aid of a careful wife, and keep a strict account of expenditures for awhile, and live within his income, he will prosper.—Boston Globe.

Brilliant Mrs. Eddy.

I met the daughter of Nathaniel P. Willis. Mrs. Imogene Eddy is a slight, delicate looking woman, somewhat gray eyes. She is engaged in astronomical observations at the observatory in Cambridge, Mass., and by this work supports herself and her daughter Hallie, who is already on the stage. Mrs. Eddy is an interesting conversationalist and a keen observer. She told me that her old home, "Idlewild," on the Hudson river, is now occupied as an insane asylum. The daughter is a plump brunette, with a wild rose color and big, bright, dark eyes. She is a pleasing pupil of Rachel Noble.—Cor. Chicago Herald.

Why It Is Called "Thimble."

Shaped somewhat like a ball and worn upon the thumb, it was called at first a thumb ball, afterward a thumble, and finally a thimble. Sometimes, as the word had changed before it, and so many a word will change in time to come.—Harper's Young People.

Origin of Agues.

This name is said to have originated in a strange manner, viz: "A nightgown, converted into an agnoun, or agnoun," in French for a napkin, from nappe (cloth in general). Some English consider still another the word appears.—Dry Goods Chronicle.

A large limb of a tree, a genuine curiosity, taken from the old Chickamauga battlefield, has been received by Dr. J. C. Reynolds, of Oil City, from his brother, of Chattanooga. The limb is inscribed with figures cut with bullets balls, and is a rare and valuable relic.

A "Warrior Bold."

A lawyer gave a dinner party, after which the gentlemen retired to smoke and chat. All at once he got up, took down a sword which formed part of a trophy, and, brandishing it in the air, exclaimed:

"Ah! gentlemen, I shall never forget the day when I drew this blade for the first time!"

"Pray, where did you draw it?" said an inquiring guest.

"At a raffle," was the lawyer's rejoinder. —Le Figaro.

He Had More Than a Hair.

"Hair cut, sir?"

"I'll have my hairs cut. I'm not so bad off as all of that, young man!"—Harper's Bazar.

He Caved.

About 10 o'clock the other night a watchman at the foot of Griswold street saw a man acting so queer that he approached and demanded what he was doing there.

"Going to jump into the river," was the reply.

"Men?"

"Right off."

"Not here!"

"Yes, right here."

"What for?"

"Nothing to live for."

"See here," said the watchman, as the man pushed off his coat, "I'vlah you'd do me a favor. I never hit a man a good stout punch in my life. If you are bound to go in I wish you would stand with your back this information to a game with his children. He brought home all sorts of queer things and emptied his pockets on a table, covering the objects with a cloth and then offering a reward to the child who, after looking at the table while he counted three, could name the greatest number of objects seen. I understand that this is now a means of entertainment at parties called "Observation Parties" and gotten up entirely for the practice of this interesting exercise.—Julian Ralph in Chatter.

She Found Out.

"I was never so flustered and perplexed as I was the other day," said a lady to me. "I was coming from Chicago, and in the car I met an old friend of my school days. I was very glad to meet him; so was I, I think, for we talked and talked and we indulged in a host of reminiscences. But I was uncomfortable from the very first, because I could not remember his name. I did remember that at school we used to call him 'Dumpy,' because of his somewhat diminutive and stocky appearance, but I couldn't address a middle aged gentleman, a wealthy financier, by such a name. His last name I couldn't remember at all.

"I wanted to find out his name—you know how awkward it is to keep on saying Mr. or Sir to a man. How to get it out of the man I tried to think. I supposed my brain would unfold attending to several matters at once, for at last I said: "Let me see—what was your name before you were married?"

"The look of astonishment on that man's face I shall not soon forget. I discovered his name, but it did not make me much more comfortable."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

An Onion Tart.

But the German cooking averages well. It is essentially heroic. The German viands appear to be compounded, not for the purpose of ravishing the eye, nor for the purpose of soothing the palate, but for the man made simply for the stomach. Who but a German would have invented the savory thing known as the onion tart? Pt! Then, no mouth! this is really too much! Execrable viand. You shake it in this wise: The pastry must be exceedingly "short" and light; spreading this crust over the baking tin or dish, you cover it with very thin slices of raw onion, plentifully sprinkling these latter with pepper and salt. Then baking the whole in a hot oven you will find that the onions are as soon done as the pastry, and this fragrant delicacy should be eaten as it comes from the oven, further seasoned (as to taste shall suggest) with butter. Many who dislike the onion served in any other way are reconciled to that homely, modest vegetable especially when coming to them in a tart.—Eugene Field's Letter in Chicago News.

Marvelous Power of the Moonstone.

"Where is my moonstone ring?" said a young married woman. "I haven't had it for a year. It's been passing about among my girl friends. Do you know, there is something very strange about that ring. When it was given to me I laughed at the faintest idea of marrying. In less than six months I was Harry's wife. In fact, one day, I gave it to Clara S——— to wear. In three months she married a man she had not met then. After that I gave it to a young woman from Philadelphia, who was here on a visit from New York, and in less than a week she was married. It was as the fancies of a New York man. Just for mischief one day I coaxed Belle M——— to wear it for a while. You know what an unaccountable splasher she has always been. In two months she married the man that had been waiting for years to have her say 'Yes.' Positively I'm superstitious about the thing. It seems to have induced a mild matrimonial epidemic wherever it has been worn, and by this time I really feel like a regular matrimonial bureau for the promotion of matrimony."—New York Evening Sun.

Knockers Again in Vogue.

The old fashioned knocker is being restored to its former prestige. Ultra fashionables are having their names upon their big front doors. Happy the people who possess an heirloom in the shape of an old colonial knocker—a lion's head with a ring in its mouth, or a pair of clasped hands. Such a knocker will be a social certificate akin to that of old china and mahogany sideboards. Remark your friends and see if you can't find grandfather's knocker, and have it at once take the place of that abomination, the front door bell.—New York Letter.

Recuperative Sor Butter.

Butter should be kept wholesale in white pine caddie or tubs, and those casks or tubs should never be used a second time. White pine is so cheap that the empty packages can be used as fire wood, if not needed for other purposes. Butter, by reason of hard wood, and even white pine, will have more or less bad odor, and this will contend with good and wholesome odor unknown with sage.

A SMALL MASS MEETING

AT MUSIC HALL LAST NIGHT.

To Protest Against the Bill to Legalize Foot Selling Awaiting Gov. Abbett's Signature.

Sunday evening while Dean Rodman was at St. John's church, Elizabeth, he was impressed with the intense public feeling against Gov. Abbett signing the bill legalizing post selling, and decided to have a protest framed at once, although the notice was extremely short, since the Governor was to decide the matter this morning.

After a hurried conference with the ministers of other churches here it was decided to call a mass meeting. Advertisements were issued in the local papers and hand bills distributed, but the notice was too short, and there was in consequence a very small attendance last evening at Music Hall where the meeting was held.

Dean Rodman called the meeting to order and stated its object, and Mayor Hale was on motion chosen to preside.

Remarks were made by Rev. Drs. Lewis and Turton, and Rev. Mr. Richards, emphatically denouncing the bill as an outrage against the respectable citizens. It was plainly shown by these that there were those outside interested in pushing the bill, hence it increased travel by those who frequented race-tracks.

The following preamble and resolution were then unanimously adopted as the sense of the meeting:

"At a public meeting of the citizens of Plainfield, held in Stillman's Music Hall, on Monday, June 16, 1890, it was resolved that the most solemnly protest against the proposed legislation of post-selling and pool-selling, and that the bill now before the Governor for his approval be vetoed by him."

Pursuant to the resolution the gentlemen named on the 4.30 train this morning for Trenton, to which they were met by delegations from other cities, including Newark, Elizabeth and New Brunswick, and proceeded in a body to the executive chamber at the State House, where Ex-Governor Leon Abbett and Private Secretary Joe Hale, Chairman.

A remarkable record was that of Jacob Fisher, who died lately in Kutztown, Pa. He was 100 years old, he had voted for nineteen Democratic candidates for president and was never ill in his life. Moreover, he had used tobacco and whisky ever since he was a young man. Does it prove that tobacco and whisky and voting for Democratic presidential candidates are conducive to long life and health?

The Baptists are preparing for a great university at Chicago, and the Methodists for one at Washington, where the Roman Catholics have already one. Thus we shall have in this country something else new in Europe, denominational universities. Let us hope the new institutions will not neglect the courses in manual training, for that is now a necessary part of a complete educational establishment.

The Eiffel Signal Station.

The summit of the Eiffel tower at Paris is 1,102 feet above sea level. At the very tip top, upon a platform 5 feet square, is a meteorological station, from which interesting and important observations are made. Owing to its position out in the free air, with no surrounding objects to break currents of air or weather, these observations vary from the mountain tops and in other elevated stations.

It has been found, for instance, that the average velocity of the wind is three times as great at the top of the tower as in a station below it, which is 60 feet above the ground. Wind currents vary periodically. At the surface of the earth the greatest velocity of the wind is at 1 o'clock in the afternoon in Paris. On the top of the high tower the wind is strongest at 11 at night.

Sometimes, too, a cold wave passes over the observatory, and continues a day or two before it is felt at all below. Observations taken from the Eiffel meteorological station are constantly compared with those taken at the other station in the neighborhood, 60 feet from the ground. The results will add to our knowledge of weather conditions.

Pan Religion.

Rev. David Utter, of Chicago, has a proposition for the World's fair which is as novel as the Eiffel tower at Paris, but in a totally different way. Mr. Utter recommends that there be built by subscription a vast tabernacle, capable of holding 20,000 persons, and that it be used as a place of worship for all religions during the World's exposition.

Every faith, Christian or Pagan, should have opportunity to be heard at stated intervals in that temple to all the creeds—Roman Catholic, Unitarian, Jewish, Greek church and Pagan. All should be represented by the ablest orators belonging to each. Mr. Utter says of his scheme:

"It would be a great pity if the speakers were all to be from the ranks of so called orthodox Christians. The Brahmins do not preach much, and the disciples of Confucius do not preach much, but there are undoubtedly Buddhists capable of presenting the doctrines of their creed interestingly. We might hope to hear from intelligent Mohammedans, certainly from Parsees and the new religion of the Brahmo-Somaj, which is to Hinduism what Unitarianism is to Christianity. The Brahmo-Somaj has some powerful preachers. Mozoomdar, one of their ablest, preached in my church. It would be not only interesting but instructive to hear from the representatives of other faiths than ours, but it would also help together the hearts of the various people by showing them that, on the one hand, we now we are all striving to effect substantially the same results in the human heart, and how we are all striving to reach Him who has made of one blood all the nations upon earth."

Atkinson on Taxation.

Edward Atkinson contributes to The Century a paper on the tariff and revenue question. He lays down this principle, that taxation should be placed, not upon necessities, but on articles of voluntary consumption. In this way the burden of taxation will be made lightest.

Carrying this principle into effect, Mr. Atkinson says that about 60 per cent. of articles taxed under our present tariff would be placed on the free list, and this would reduce government revenues only 35 per cent. Less than $50,000,000 revenue is raised from the combined duties on all imported raw or partly manufactured materials used in our industries, and all imported necessary food products except sugar under our present tariff. On the other hand a revenue of $130,000,000 is derived from the tax on liquors and tobacco. Mr. Atkinson says that 5 or 6 per cent. of the work of the nation must go to the support of the government. He would take taxes from raw materials and food necessaries and place them upon articles of voluntary consumption, such as beer, wine, whisky, etc. The effect that he believes would follow releasing raw materials he illustrates thus:

For instance, no country in the world possesses such advantages for the production of condensed milk as this country, for which there is a large and constantly increasing demand. If the taxes were taken from sugar and the plates the home market for condensed milk would be increased in a measure which no one can well estimate, because we could then supply all other countries at the lowest possible cost; or, in other words, we could exchange condensed milk in constantly increasing measure for sugar and tin plate free of duty.

DEATH IN A COAL MINE.

Frightful Work of an Explosion Near Dunbar, Pa.

THIRTY-ONE MEN WERE KILLED.

Foul Gas Was Ignited by Patrick Hayes' Lamp and a Terrific Explosion Followed.

The Unfortunate Miners Were Cut Off by the Flames and Perished.

DUNBAR, Pa., June 17.—Thirty-one miners have been killed by an explosion of gas in the coal mines at Hill Farm, owned by the Dunbar Furnace company, and located one mile west of this place. The explosion occurred at 10:20 a. m. The bodies of two of the unfortunates were taken out. The others are still entombed in the mine, where a fire is raging. Desperate efforts were made to clear the way to recover the bodies, but without avail. A rescuing party of 100 men, headed by Miss Inspector Kaigley, of this district, spent many hours in the pit, but were able to rescue only the two bodies mentioned. These men died from the force of the explosion and their bodies were badly burned. Their features were distorted and disfigured and could only be recognized by their clothes.

The Story of the Holocaust.

Fifty-seven miners were at work about 5,000 feet from the mouth of the slope when the explosion occurred. Near the point at which the heading started an air hole had been drilled recently. Gas and water had accumulated in it. A miner named Patrick Kerwin penetrated this air hole six inches in diameter with his pick, whereupon a strong stream of water gushed out. Kerwin alarmed, sounded the danger signal. His assistant, Patrick Hayes, started hurriedly for the main entrance, and had scarcely moved when the foul gas was ignited from his lamp. The explosion that followed was terrific. What little air there was in the place drifted to the heading to the right of the main entrance.

Cut Off by the Flames.

The fire followed swiftly and before the thirty-one men could be warned all hope of escape was shut off by the flames. The twenty-six men employed in the left heading were notified of the danger in time to save their lives, although their escape was thrilling and was accompanied by the wildest confusion. At a point near where the explosion occurred the bodies of Daniel Sheiran, fire boss, and David Hayes were found. They had evidently attempted to escape through the flames.

A List of the Missing Men.

Following is a full list of the missing miners: Joseph Brigner, married; Richard Brigner, Milt Feeney, married; Barney Feeney, married; Peter Kairon, 44 years old; Robert McGuill, single; Martin Cavaner, John Cope, married; Andy Cope, his son; Pat Devlin, married; John Debanney, married; Jerry Debanney, single; John Debanney, Jr.; David Davis, married; Thomas Davis, his son; Pat Cahill, married; William Cahill, single; Pat Courtney, married; John Courtney, his son; Dan South, married; James Shearn, single; Danny Shearn, single; David Hayes, William Hayes, his son; James McCleary, married; Thomas McCleary, married; Elmer Dewey, single; Joseph Bigley, aged 20, leaves wife and two children; Barney Maust and Emanuel Maust (brothers), and John Mitchell, aged 40, married.

Relatives Mad with Anguish.

Thousands of people gathered at the mouth of the mines in the afternoon. Among them were the parents, wives, children and sweethearts of the unfortunates, and a strong guard of police was necessary to prevent many of them, mad with anguish, from rushing into the deadly hole. Wives, widowed by the horror, stood about ill clad and sore footed, lulling to sleep their babes in arms. Mothers wrung their hands and cried aloud for their boys, while children from eight to fifteen years of age hurried about, looking into the blackened faces of the rescued miners in the hope of finding their fathers or brothers.

The Horror of Suspense.

Their suffering was pitiable, and while the authorities of the company were exerting all their energies to recover the bodies the total absence of information regarding the fate of the missing men made their distress more severe. Women and grown people went up unconsciously from many of the pinched lips in the unhappy crowd. These words formed the motto of the Dunbar Furnace company. George Parish, of Wilkesbarre, is president of the company. Samuel Hoscomb, one of their officials, preached in my church. It would be not only interesting but instructive to hear from the representatives of other faiths than ours, but it would also help together the hearts of the various people by showing them that, on the one hand, we now we are all striving to effect substantially the same results in the human heart, and how we are all striving to reach Him who has made of one blood all the nations upon earth.

SHE IS "HIS MARY" NOW.

Miss Mary Anderson and Antonio Navarro Married at Brompton Oratory.

LONDON, June 17.—The London public can no longer refer in affectionate terms to Miss Mary Anderson as "Our Mary," for the brilliant and beautiful young actress has transferred the sole right to the use of that long cherished term of esteem and endearment to Mr. Antonio Navarro, of New York. For a number of years past Miss Anderson has been at the feet of this young woman, but she seemed entirely wedded to her art. All efforts to thaw out her indifference to the allurements of domestic life were unsuccessful, and the beautiful and talented girl, America's pride, became almost as noted for her coldness to the opposite sex and the neighborhood as she also did for her pre-eminence in the legitimate drama. It was bluntly asserted that she did not possess a heart, but her acceptance of young Navarro puts these reports to flight and shows conclusively that when the right man crossed her path, Miss Mary's feeling of indifference melted as readily as the similar indifference of any other young woman.

ANTONIO NAVARRO. MARY ANDERSON.

The marriage of Miss Anderson and Mr. Navarro occurred this morning at the Brompton oratory in London. The wedding was a very quiet affair, there being no bridesmaids or best man, and no display whatever. Only persons present be sides the contracting parties were Dr. Grifen and his wife (the latter is the mother of the bride); Joseph Anderson, her brother, and his wife, who is the daughter of Lawrence Barrett; Alfonso Navarro, and the Hon. Miss Lytton, daughter of the present British ambassador at Paris. The two latter officiated as witnesses.

The ceremony was performed by Cardinal Manning. The groom was clad in full dress and the bride wore a pretty wedding costume. For some reason Miss Navarro, who was the chaperone of Miss Anderson while traveling through the south of Europe, was not allowed to be at Rome. After the ceremony the couple took the train for Dover, where they will stop one night, thence proceed to Calais for Venice. The couple intend to return to America in September and take a residence in New York.

BALFOUR GIVEN THE LIE.

An Exciting Scene in the House of Commons.

LONDON, June 17.—There was an exciting scene in the house of commons last evening, following out of a Parnellite demand for an explanation on the part of Mr. Balfour of the maltreatment of the people of New Tipperary by the police on the occasion of the celebration of Mr. O'Brien's marriage by parades, bonfires, etc. Mr. Balfour denied the charge that the people had been maltreated for celebrating Mr. O'Brien's marriage or that they had been maltreated at all. The police had extinguished the bonfires, but only for the reason that they obstructed the streets.

Messrs. Gill and Clancy questioned Mr. Balfour in regard to the system of "shadowing" prevalent in Ireland and asked their acknowledgment to prevent meeting. Mr. Balfour said that no one in Ireland had been shadowed unless he was engaged in intimidating others. When intimidation ceased, he said, shadowing would be stopped. Mr. Balfour then alluded to the crimes which had been committed by the Irish, his remarks having the effect to excite the Parnellites.

Mr. Dillon demanded in a violent manner an apology from Mr. Balfour for the use of the word "coward" by Mr. Gill given Mr. Balfour the lie. Mr. Gladstone challenged Mr. Balfour to prove his assertions that the Liberals had engaged in, encouraged or abetted crime. Mr. Balfour then substituted the words "boycotting and intimidation" for "crime," and on appeal to the speaker the subject was dropped.

To Escape the Whisky Trust's Yoke.

NEW YORK, June 17.—About forty of the largest wholesale liquor dealers of New York and Philadelphia met here to discuss ways and means of freeing themselves from the yoke of the whisky trust, especially as regards the five cents per gallon rebate scheme, which, it is claimed, gives the trust the perpetual use of about $1,500,000 of the dealers' money without interest, in addition to making the dealers a good deal of trouble in various ways. About $40,000,000 capital was represented at the meeting. Some of those present favored a conference with the trust, but more scoffed at this idea as useless. The sentiment of the majority seemed to be in favor of building one or perhaps two distilleries to supply the requirements of an association to be formed by those present. It was finally decided, however, to appoint a committee of ten to report a plan at a future meeting. Peter McQuade was made chairman and J. P. Smith secretary of the committee. They will meet Wednesday at 3 p. m.

Immigrants Illegally Landed.

NEW YORK, June 17.—The Cunard steamship company is again in trouble. On Sunday the officers of the company or their employes allowed the immigrants on the Etruria to land and go where they pleased. In this way about a hundred immigrants landed without passing examination at the barge office, many of them taking their baggage with them. Many of those who went away were not found and returned to the barge office by men sent out to look for them. When a comparison of the registry books and the ship's manifest is completed it will be definitely known how many have landed and escaped examination.

PHILADELPHIA, June 17.—A preliminary agreement has been signed for the reorganization of the firm of Hood, Bonbright & Co., to conduct a wholesale dry goods and notion business. The new firm is composed of Col. Thomas G. Hood, J. J. Miller and M. G. Fox, of the old firm of Hood, Bonbright & Co.; W. W. Faulkrod and Barton F. Blake. Mr. John Wanamaker says he is a partner of the new firm, contributing $1,000,000.

LODGE'S ELECTION LAW.

The Bill Adopted by the Republican Caucus.

BRIEF SYNOPSIS OF THE MEASURE

It Will Pass the House by a Party Vote, Sections and Registrations Both Locked After by Federal Inspectors—States Can Still Adopt the Australian System.

WASHINGTON, June 17.—The national election bill which was adopted by a Republican caucus, and which Mr. Lodge (Mass.) has introduced in the house, is entitled "A bill to amend and supplement the election laws of the United States and to provide for the more efficient enforcement of such laws and for other purposes." The bill in all probability will be taken up for consideration this week, and will pass the house by a party vote. The first section of the bill provides that the chief supervisors of elections now in office, their successors and the chief supervisors to be appointed under the provisions of the bill shall be charged "both in person and through the supervisors of election who may from time to time be appointed, with the supervision of elections at which representatives or delegates in congress are voted for, with the enforcement of the said election laws and with the prevention of frauds and irregularities in registration."

To Supervise Registrations.

By the provisions of the bill, not only elections but registrations are to be supervised by the federal supervisors. Supervision is to be had in a congressional district when 100 qualified voters in a city of more than one inhabitants, whether wholly within a single district or not, and in any such district no part of which is within a city of the population named, or when any two towns in one or more counties or parishes forming only a part of a congressional district, make application to the chief supervisor of elections for the judicial district in which these places are situated. The circuit judges are to appoint the supervisors of election on the recommendation of the chief supervisors, and three supervisors are to be assigned to each voting precinct or district. In each assignment only two of the supervisors are to be of the same political party.

The Holding of Elections.

Elections are to be conducted according to the laws of the several states and territories, but they are to be counted at each voting precinct by two—first by an inspector (state or local officer), then by a federal supervisor, then by another inspector, then by another supervisor, and so on. The tallies, when compared, must agree with tallies kept by poll clerks. When the count has been completed the inspectors are to deliver to the clerk of the circuit court and the supervisors to the chief supervisor for the district. The supervisors are also to send the actual ballots cast to the chief supervisor. Safeguards to insure the correct certificates getting to the chief supervisor are provided for.

The Board of Canvassers.

On application of the chief supervisors the circuit courts are to be opened on or before the 1st day of October preceding an election. Each judge is to appoint three persons to serve as a board of canvassers for each state within his judicial district. Not more than two of these are to be of the same political party.

The board is to declare and certify the result of the election in each congressional district. They are given power to subpœna witnesses, compel their attendance to testify before them, etc. Their determinations are to be made in triplicate and are sent to each chief supervisor of the district, of which triplicate one is handed, have authority to act, another to the person found elected and the third to the clerk of the house of representatives at Washington. If no person is found duly elected certificates in triplicate are to be sent to the governor of the state, to the clerk of the house and to the proper chief supervisor.

To Punish Fraud.

When there are two different parties certified as elected from any one district, one by the state officers and the other by the board of canvassers, the clerk of the house is required, under a heavy penalty for neglect, to place the name of the person certified by the board of canvassers on the roll of the house.

A large part of the bill is devoted to prescribing heavy penalties for the punishment of bribery, fraud, intimidation, failure of supervisors and inspectors to to prevent fraud, etc. The laws of the several states concerning voting are not changed, and states are permitted to adopt the Australian system or any other method of voting they think best. The appointment of special United States marshals to preserve order, and the payment of all United States officers and expenses concerned under the law are provided for.

Governor Beaver's Appointments.

HARRISBURG, June 17.—Governor Beaver has made the following appointments and reappointments: Gideon A. Shoop, Timothy O. Van Allen and Thomas Chalfant of Harrisburg; Edward W. Jackson and Dr. Oliver Z. Harvey of Wilkesbarre (vice Stephen Jenkins), to be trustees of the Danville Insane hospital; Harry B. The Zedwitz-Caldwell Marriage.

WASHINGTON, June 17.—Baron Zedwitz, the affianced of Miss Caldwell, has arrived at Washington from the City of Mexico. He took rooms at Welckers. The Misses Caldwell have also arrived from New York, accompanied by Bishop Spalding, of Peoria; Mrs. Edward C. Donnelly and Miss Donnelly. They took possession of the suites which had been prepared for them at the Arlington. From the high social and official position of the contracting parties the wedding will be one of the most notable events of the season.

Cal McCarthy Challenged.

NEW YORK, June 17.—Charley Smith, the 118 pound champion of England, called at The Police Gazette office and left a challenge to Cal McCarthy to fight for a purse of $500 and an outside bet of $200 a side. In case McCarthy does not accept the challenge is open to any 118 pound man in America.

MULDOON'S MAN WINS.

Smith, of Denver, Defeats Daly, of Philadelphia.

STEVE BRODIE'S ODD TACTICS.

He Repeatedly Broke Into the Ring to Help Daly and Was Threatened with Death by Mike Cleary—The Philadelphian Seemed Greatly Overmatched.

BUFFALO, June 17.—A large crowd of representative sports from New York, Philadelphia and Chicago visited the Arlington Athletic club last night to witness the glove fight between Ed Smith, of Denver (Muldoon's latest protege), and James Daly, of Philadelphia. Smith ruled first choice in the betting. Smith weighed 178 pounds, and had William Muldoon, Mike Cleary and Frank Bosworth, of Providence, back of him. Daly weighed 160 pounds, and Steve Brodie, Tom Manning and P. J. Griffin, of Philadelphia, were behind him. Jake Kilrain was also present to challenge the winner. The fight was for a $1,500 purse, of which $300 was to go to the loser.

The Battle Begins.

First Round—The men sparred for an opening. Smith began rushing and smashed Daly hard twice. Smith knocked Daly down with a blow on the neck. Daly lay quiet for a few seconds, but got up and went at Smith savagely. Smith had it all his own way, however, and hit Daly when and where he pleased.

A Foul Claimed.

Second Round—Daly landed hard on Smith's neck. Smith returned the blow savagely on Daly's neck and again knocked him down. Just as the round closed Smith landed on his stomach. A foul was claimed, as Smith struck after the gong had sounded. It was not allowed.

Third Round—Smith landed on Daly repeatedly on the jaw and continued to hammer him like a punching bag, but was caught napping as the round drew to a close and Daly hit him a hard one on the nose, drawing the claret. This enraged Smith and he went at Daly like hammer and tongs, with such savage blows that Daly was forced to fall to the floor to escape further punishment. At the end of this round Brodie rushed up to Smith and blew water in his face, whereat Muldoon claimed a foul, but it was disallowed.

Brodie's Peculiar Tactics.

Fourth Round—Smith hammered Daly right and left, until the latter went down under a stinging blow on the neck. Brodie rushed into the ring again, but was quickly ejected. Daly staggered to his feet only to receive another crusher in the neck, which floored him.

Brodie repeated his tactics and Cleary, unable to control his anger, made a rush for him and threatened to kill him if he did not keep out of the ring. Brodie promptly left and Daly went down five times in succession. Daly was rushed to his corner when the gong rang, and was treated to liberal doses of massage treatment, but it seemed almost cruelty to send him in for another round.

Brodie Again in the Ring.

Fifth Round—Daly led with his left. Smith countered heavily with his right on the jaw and Daly went down. The first possible Brodie broke into the ring again. The referee succeeded in getting him out with much trouble and cautioned him against coming in again. The warning had no effect, for a minute later, when Smith knocked Daly down again, Brodie was in the ring working over his man. Connors was on the point of giving the fight to Smith when Daly recovered his feet and Brodie retreated. Again Smith punished Daly most severely in the neck and knocked him into the ropes. As fast as Daly got on his feet Smith knocked him down.

Blows Like Cannon Balls.

Sixth Round—Daly seemed to freshen up a trifle, but was too exhausted to stand much punishment. Smith drew himself together and raised in face, jugular and body blows like cannon balls. Daly got up each time, but with a great effort, and tried to clinch. In a clinch Smith pushed Daly down. Daly was so weak that Brodie, who had come in his man completely knocked out, rushed in the ring and pulled Daly back to his corner. He claimed the fight on a foul because Smith shoved Daly to the floor. The claim was not allowed and the referee told Daly to fight or throw up the sponge. Daly himself seemed dazed and oblivious to all that was going on around him. Ten seconds were quickly counted and Connors gave the fight to Smith.

An Ex-Senator Attempts Suicide.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., June 17.—Samuel Newell, a large stock owner of this town and formerly a senator in the New Jersey state senate from Clifton, attempted suicide by hanging himself in an attic. He was cut down when cut down, and physicians say he will either die or become an idiot. Melancholy is the cause of the attempted self destruction. He is a brother of John Newell, president of the Nickel Plate railroad.

BABY.

One little head of golden hair,
Two little cheeks as round and fair,
Two little lips with fragrant sighs,
Two little eyes and two little noses,
Two little hands as soft as a peach,
Two little feet with five toes each,
Two little ears and two little noses,
Two little legs and two little arms,
One little heart with all its charms,
One little chest and one little stomach,
One little back, but no little chin,
Plenty of skin and lots of bones,
One little cloak and plenty of frocks,
One little hood and two little socks,
One little bib to keep it clean,
One little stomach that's never full,
One little mouth of the rose's tint,
Which is by no means stinted,
Plenty to eat and lots to wear—
And yet this baby is as cross as a bear.

NAMES OF WOMEN.

They Change with Fashions Quite Often and Name a Gaped Event.

It would not be at all surprising if, in the centuries to come, the students of the social life of the Nineteenth century should classify this great cosmic century into shorter periods according to the fashions of given names among women. Fashions in men's names change somewhat, but not as women's. John, Charles, George and William are the same in 1890 as in 1790. But the fashion in women's names changes every ten or fifteen years. It is possible that the sociological New Zealander will find that the fashionable lady names of this century, so to speak, are about as many in number as the decades. Just what was the favorite woman's name at the very opening of this century is hard to guess offhand, but the listener may venture to say that the Nancy epoch was about the first worthy of the land in the century. Among octogenarian ladies the name of Nancy seems to have a very prominent place. Further on down the century came the fashion of double names—possibly an old fashion revived—and we find Martha Anne, Mary Janes and Ann Elizas in nearly every family. Perhaps this epoch would be hard to define as the Mary Jane epoch of our feminine nomenclature.

It is a little hard to locate these things in years, but the Lucy epoch just passed the year 1830 and was closely followed by the Helen epoch, which left the name of the beautiful daughter of Leda scattered over the land in every direction, though after the reign of Helen came the most singular, unaccountable epoch of all, the Ella epoch. The use of the name Ella goes back to about the year 1800, though there may have been earlier examples. Where the name "Ella" came from is a mystery. The authorities put it down as a corruption of the name Isabella, which in its turn was corrupted from Helen. It appears to have no recognized place either in history or in song, though the name is now borrowed from a fourth rate popular novel. It is, at any rate, without meaning, without any associations in the past, without any other reason for existence than its singularity, except that it pleased many people's fancy. Now it is no doubt has a recognized existence, since beautiful and good women have borne it, and it has filled other names that women ever bore, it is sanctified with that other name of mother. The real Ella epoch dates from 1850 to 1875, probably it was at its height about the year 1855. People thought it so pretty! But it is sadly out of fashion now.

There an Ida epoch that came in somewhere along there, probably just after the Ella epoch, though the two names ran pretty closely together. The name of Ida is a good and sonorous one, though one of the people who took it up doubtless thought they had hit upon something quite new. Most of the Ida's of the time about 1865 were named for a character in a popular story or for one another. But following the Ella and Ida period there came another epoch, one which attained to a most extraordinary rage, the Edith epoch, indeed, survives almost to the present day. Between 1865 and 1875 about half of the girls baptized were named Edith, and the orgy is ripening fast now as a matter of course. Look at the high school catalogues and see how this article with Edith.

An ancient Saxon name, and a pretty one, disused for centuries and revived all at once—a happy revival if it had not been overdone. There came the Maud-and-Mabel epoch—these names have to be hyphenated because neither ever seemed able to stand up without the other. They were a great rage in that time. The main crop of Maud's and Mabels will hardly mature before another five years, though the earlier sowings are ripe already. Since then we have had the Marjorie revival—an outstanding pretty name that, and better and more English than either Maud or Mabel—and now we are threatened with a Gladys epoch. Here we have another name out of the story books, and an awkward one at that. But fashions in names had much better be revivals of old, distinct names than new ones. Gladys, Ethel, Edith, Barbara, than more inventions or importations. And a great deal more than depends upon the woman anyway, than on the name.—Boston Transcript.

Wait on Yourself.

There is one lesson which every young person ought to learn. It is a duty.

Wait on yourself.

Do not grow up to depend on others. Make it a rule to do whatever you can yourself.

Don't call on your mother, or your sister, or the servant, for service which can just as well be performed by yourself, without calling on anybody. If you have lost your slippers, find them. If the world is wide, and if they are to be found in it, why cannot you find them as well as anybody else?

We are continually hearing the cry among young people, when any of their belongings are lost: "Oh, I can't find it! I ask mamma, or call Hannah."

What is the reason you can't find it? Have you lost your eyesight that you cannot see, or have you lost your reason that you do not know when you have found what is lost?—New York Weekly.

The Faithful Reporter.

Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster tells a good story on herself. Some years ago a reporter sensitive of a Brooklyn paper called on her one day and asked for a few facts about herself, to be included in an article on "Brooklyn's Literary Women." It happened to be Mrs. Sangster's busy morning, so she said, suavely looking up from her work: "Oh, I am only an ordinary, commonplace woman; there is nothing to say about me." The reporter bowed and withdrew. In about a week the article appeared, and at the head of the list of Brooklyn's famous blues appeared these words: "Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster is only an ordinary, commonplace woman; there is nothing to say about her."

A lively Maine young woman has developed much skill in snaring Maine song birds, and does quite a business at caging and selling them.

STATESMEN AT HOME.

RESIDENCES OF FOUR WELL KNOWN CONGRESSMEN DESCRIBED.

Representative McComas Has an Old Fashioned Dwelling Place at Hagerstown, Md.—The Homes of Messrs. Wilson, Banks and Breckinridge.

[Copyright by American Press Association.]

In the heart of the quiet old city of Hagerstown, Md., one of the earliest settlements in the country, is the unpretentious dwelling of Representative Louis Emory McComas. It is a plain, old fashioned brick structure, with square, wide door ways and windows and a long extension in the rear. It and the house next to it, which is occupied by Mr. McComas' brother-in-law, are the only ones in the center of the town which stand in ample grounds of their own. A latticed porch over the entrance to the drawing room on the side of the house leads into the grass plot and flower garden which adorn the sides and rear of the old home. The main entrance from the street is through a wide, old fashioned hall, wainscoted in dark oak, and at the head of the stairs leading to the upper part of the house is one of the first clocks ever made in this country. It has told the time of day for six generations of Mrs. McComas' family, and is now performing the same duty for the seventh. The house was built over seventy years ago, and stands on the main street, which used to be also the most fashionable part of Hagerstown. It is comfortably furnished inside, and used to be the residence of the Beattys, a well known family in that section of Maryland.

CONGRESSMAN M'COMAS' HOUSE.

The handsome home of Congressman William L. Wilson, LL. D., is situated on a small hill just outside of the city of Charlestown, W. Va. It is built of frame on a stone foundation, and stands in a pretty little yard some three acres in extent. The original building was a plain two story frame house with an L attachment, but a few years ago Mr. Wilson connected the two by erecting the handsome tower which forms the central and most conspicuous part of his residence. From this tower can be seen a stretch of picturesque country which he claims surpasses any similar scenery on the continent. There is the fertile valley of Virginia, with its prosperous farms and broad acres. On one side are the famous Blue Ridge mountains, and on the other the North mountain, which is the first outlying spur of the Allegheny range. Harper's Ferry lies in a valley, but the position of the historic town can be defined, and the Shenandoah river traced from its confluence at that point with the Potomac. Nothing is wanting to make the view from Mr. Wilson's tower beautiful in the extreme.

The grounds surrounding the house are filled with trees, shrubs and flowers. The drawing room on one side of the entrance and the dining hall on the other both open on the front porch. Mr. Wilson's library is in the rear, and is stocked with the finest and largest private collection of books to be found in West Virginia. When first built the house was quite a distance from the city, but it is now within the corporate limits, and is surrounded by other fine homes.

Gen. Nathaniel P. Banks lives at Waltham, Mass., and his house is one of the most interesting residences in that thriving town. He has been a factory hand, a newspaper editor, a lawyer, and speaker of the Massachusetts Legislature; he received the presidential nomination at the hands of the North American convention in New York in 1856; he has been a major general of volunteers, governor of his native state, speaker of the national house of representatives, United States marshal, and is now a member of congress again. Through all his varied career he has occupied the plain, old fashioned home which is pictured here, and which he loves because it has been the birthplace of his children.

THE RESIDENCE OF GEN. BANKS.

It is a square, two-story frame house, over one hundred years old, and was one of the first residences to be erected in Waltham. The only decoration on its exterior is a Corinthian portico over the entrance, overgrown with vines. Nothing would induce him to change the exterior appearance of the main building during his own and Mrs. Bank's lifetime, but he has built an extensive library in the rear in the Queen Anne style of architecture, which forms a handsome addition to the house. The old coach road from Boston to Worcester runs in front of the dwelling, and a mile further down forms the principal street of Waltham. About twenty acres of fine lawns surround the house, and in the rear is the tennis court used by the younger members of the family. Inside, the rooms are large and high, and all connect with one another. The room to the right of the porch, which is now used as the dining room, was the scene of the first Methodist prayer meeting ever held in Waltham, when there were no churches, and the house belonged to the Gale family, who built it. Every room has in it a fine, old fashioned, oaken fireplace, with high, wooden mantels all carved and fluted by hand. It is a fine old place, and Gen. Banks in his declining years would consider it a desecration to make new fangled alterations about it, or to bring within its venerable portals any of the modern furnishing gewgaws.

Mr. William Cabell Preston Breckinridge, the silver haired, silver tongued congressman from Kentucky, has no fixed place of residence. He used to own a pretty home in Lexington, Ky., but on going to Washington he sold it, and has since been living just as his fancy and that of his charming wife dictates. One year he occupies furnished rooms in some private establishment, another he tries hotel life. Just at present he is housekeeping on Grand terrace, a few blocks east of the Capitol. His home is one of a row of buildings all exactly alike. It stands back some thirty feet from the street on a small terrace, and is built of brick with brown stone trimmings on a white stone basement. The entrance is reached by a flight of stone steps, lighted on either side by a handsome bronze lamp. The drawing room on the left of the hall is ornamented with a wide bay window. The "camp furniture" of the house, as Mr. Breckinridge calls it on account of his frequent movings, is of the most elegant description and is arranged with great taste.

Mr. Breckinridge's home life is very simple. His particular chum is his little 13-year-old daughter, who climbs to him like a chestnut burr. The greatest delight of the year to the pair is on New Year's day, when they both go visiting together. Miss Breckinridge wears a costume of pure white, and her face is one broad smile of delight as she shakes hands on to her father's hand. They first pay their respects to the president. Then they go to the few houses where Mr. Breckinridge calls. The little maid gets her pockets full of candies, is petted by all the men and kissed by all the ladies. Her mother remonstrates at this unique performance, but Mr. Breckinridge declares he will have his way about this, as he has to give it up in everything else. HENRY E. ELAND.

A Crematory Urn.

FOR ASHES OF THE DEAD.

That cremation has not lost its hold upon the minds of certain classes of people is amply shown by the fact that leading jewelers throughout the world find it profitable to employ some of their best artists in the manufacture of dainty receptacles for the ashes of the departed. The illustration given herewith is of a crematory urn recently finished and exhibited in London. The bowl is made of the finest cut crystal glass, mounted in beautifully decorated silver. A crest tops the urn, on which there are also shown Masonic emblems and two shields for inscriptions. A depository of this sort is valued at $2,000.

Very Slow Consumption.

Dr. Mortimer Slocum, who died at San Antonio, Tex., recently, had a rather novel experience once. He was supposed to be hopelessly ill of consumption, and a life insurance company with which he had a policy of $20,000 paid him $5,000 for a release. He removed from his then home at Chicago to Texas, grew well and wealthy and lived for twenty-five years.

THE CORRECT VERSION.

The Story of the "Sweethearts" as Told by a Later Day Novelist.

"So this winds the thing up, does it, Miss Pankey?"

"It does, Mr. Swackhammer."

"And you haven't any explanation to give?"

"What explanation do you want? I have told you I refused to break off the engagement because it has become irksome to me. Isn't that enough?"

The young man unorossed his legs, got up, and reached for his hat.

"Emma Pankey," he said, as a yearning look came into his eyes, "that the engagement didn't become irksome to you until the oyster season was over."

Miss Pankey did not deign any reply, and Algernon Swackhammer, with a low bow, turned upon his heel and walked out.

When the door had closed upon his receding form the young woman sank nervously into a chair.

"The stupid wretch," she exclaimed. "He ought to have had more sense than to take me at my word!"

Suddenly she stooped to the floor, picked up a small ivory tablet that had dropped from Algernon's pocket, pressed it passionately to her lips, kissed her hand upon her hands and sobbed aloud.

Years had passed. The afternoon sun was gilding the pretentious spires and cupolas of an ambitious western town, and the soft, weird music of the fish peddler's horn was heard in the street, when a middle aged man with a valise in his hand came to the gate in front of a modest but neat and well built cottage, walked briskly up the steps and knocked at the door.

A lady answered the knock—a lady well preserved but no longer young.

The stranger bared his head. His hair was beginning to turn gray, but time had evidently dealt with him leniently, and care had left no deep traces on his brow. He spoke:

"Is the gentleman of the house—am I dreaming?—isn't this Cassimere Pankey? Or rather"—and he smiled—"isn't this the lady who was once Miss Cassimere Pankey?"

"I am Miss Pankey," she answered, "and you are Algernon Swackhammer. I recognized you as soon as I saw you. Won't you come in?"

"Well, well," said the middle aged traveler, as he sat in an easy chair in the front parlor a few moments later and looked with interest at the face of the lady. "Who would have thought of meeting you here! And you tell me you are still Miss Pankey! Isn't this your home?"

"It is my brother's. He is a widower. I keep house for him."

"And you have never married?"

"No."

"How have you prospered?"

"I have no reason for complaint. And you?"

"I have had a great many hard knocks, Cassimere—Miss Pankey—since we met last. By the way, we parted rather unceremoniously, didn't we?"

"I think we did."

"And I have always felt that I owed you an apology," he continued, "for not sending your photograph back after you had returned mine; but the fact is," he went on, awkwardly, "I—er—couldn't find it. It got lost somehow."

Miss Pankey sighed again.

"That reminds me," resumed Mr. Swackhammer, "that I lost a little book slate the last evening I was at your house. I must have dropped it out of my pocket as I went out. It wasn't of any particular value, and I don't know when I have thought of it before, but the recollection of it happened to occur to me just now. It was a little black book slate, with"—

"I think it was an ivory tablet."

"No, I am quite positive it was a little black book slate."

"I am sure it was a white tablet."

Going to the mantel she opened a plush lined jewel casket and took out a little ivory tablet.

"Here it is," she said.

"And you have kept it all these years!" exclaimed Mr. Swackhammer.

"Yes."

"I see I was mistaken. But to change the subject. Do you consider yourself—called in life? Have you no—no plans for the—for the future?"

"Why, I"—

She paused, and her visitor proceeded:

"In a sense, I suppose, you are a fixture here? Your brother's children are to some extent dependent upon you?"

"Of course, but"—

"Then I must tell me, Miss Pankey, for the sake of old times," said Mr. Swackhammer, rapidly, as he opened his valise and took out a manuscript, "to call your attention to the fact that life is uncertain, disease and death stalk abroad in the land, fatal accidents may happen at any time, and it is the part of wisdom to provide against contingencies by securing those who are or may be dependent upon us against want. In the policies of the Limpheimer Life Insurance company, which I represent, and for which I have traveled for the last seven years, you will find the most perfect system, the surest guarantee, the most absolute security offered by any company in the field, and either on the ten year, the endowment, or the life plan, as you may survey, you will find the premiums smaller in proportion to the gilt edged character of the insurance afforded than in any that has ever come under your notice, while the non-forfeitable feature of the policies, peculiar to our company alone, together with the dividends that accrue after the third year, thus steadily decreasing the annual premiums, while at the same time"—

"Was this your object in calling, Algernon Swackhammer?"

"It was, Miss Pankey. I've just begun to work this town."

Opening the little ivory tablet he began jotting figures down in it with great rapidity.

"Now, here you will see," he said, "that on the ten year plan—let me see, what is your age?"

"You will please excuse me, sir. I have some bread in the oven that I must go and look at, and I don't want any life insurance. Neither does my brother. I wish you success, Mr. Swackhammer. Good afternoon."

Miss Cassimere Pankey sat in pensive silence a minute or two after her caller had departed, then picked up the little ivory tablet, put it back into the plush covered jewel case, took them both out to the kitchen, tossed them into the stove, and went about her work with a firm and decided expression on her face.

The next day Miss Pankey married a baldheaded dentist 37 years old, who had been making love to her unsuccessfully for about eight years.—Chicago Tribune.

PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS.

ESTABLISHED 1884. PLAINFIELD, N. J., "THE COLORADO OF THE EAST," WEDNESDAY, JUNE 18, 1890. PRICE TWO CENTS.

SUBSCRIBERS GOING AWAY FOR THE SUMMER MAY HAVE THE NEWS MAILED TO THEM WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

THE OLD MAN RESENTS

HIS WORSTS LAWYER HETFIELD AND TWO ITALIANS.

Accused of Getting $100 From Mr. Scribner, the Lawyer—Besides Getting Defeated in Three Suits—Must Himself Pay the Costs.

On a large tract of land on Maple avenue, North Plainfield, the brick yard of Mr. Isaac Scribner is situated, and a portion of this is occupied by the commodious dwelling of Mr. Scribner. On the opposite side of the road is what is known as the Lon De Camp property. A shanty thereon was formerly rented to an Italian named Lawrence Christi, and later to another Italian named Jannuzzi, who accumulated about the premises certain very objectionable to Mr. Scribner. To get rid of the nuisance in a quiet way Mr. Scribner bought the property, served a writ of ejectment on Marconi, and as he was soon remove the manure heaps and other rubbish.

The writ of ejectment was returnable before Justice Hardy one Saturday a few weeks ago. Mr. Scribner did not suppose the matter would be contested, and was at home taking his afternoon nap when Lawyer Hetfield called. He is seventy-five years old. Marconi and Jannuzzi Lawyer Hetfield as his counsel and both were on hand. Mr. Hetfield's request that the case be dismissed on account of the non-appearance of the plaintiff was of course granted.

The Italians—Marconi and Christi—were persuaded to bring suit for damages, at $50 apiece, Mr. Scribner, doubtless with the idea that he would rather pay tribute than be annoyed and annoyed at his time of life. So the old man's built that way. He thought it was a bluff, and what his opponent owe better.

Mr. Hetfield decided that an action in tort was the proper way to proceed and had such a notice of suit served on Mr. Scribner promptly Monday morning. Then he concluded that he had made a mistake in the form of action, discontinued the suit, and re-served it in another form—a suit for trover and conversion. Again he discontinued his action, deciding that his first form of action was the proper one, and renewed it.

Meanwhile Mr. Scribner retained Corporation Counsel Marsh to begin suit again to eject Marconi. It was decided to try it before Justice Hardy without a jury. The suit was sued by Mr. Scribner. Mr. Hetfield was ready and declared that he would have a jury to try the cases—actions in tort—against Mr. Scribner.

Before issuing the summonses in the next case Justice Hardy wanted the costs of the previous one paid, and security for those to follow. Lawyer Hetfield said he would be responsible for them.

The Justice then allowed him to proceed. The result in each of the two succeeding cases was against Mr. Hetfield's clients, and yesterday Constable Baumeister had a bill of some $20 sent from Justice Hardy for Mr. Hetfield to pay, and add to the mortification of three successive defeats, which in themselves would have been enough to make one sick, after so much trouble. The case is unique, in that it is very rare indeed that a lawyer gets himself caught in such a scrape, leaving no matter of paying the bills to the client.

Mr. Scribner acted on the principle of the patriots of the revolution, when they declared "millions for defense: Not one cent for tribute."

The Clerks' Meeting.

The Clerks' Society of this city which recently completed its organization held another meeting last night. Three new members were admitted which swelled the list of membership to sixty-seven. The various committees appointed at a previous meeting to confer with the various merchants in reference to closing their stores early, reported progress. After the transaction of some further business the meeting adjourned to meet again on June 25th, in the Jr. O. U. A. M. rooms. Previous to adjourning however, the association adopted a constitution and by-laws.

Reduced Rates on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

In pursuance of its usual liberal policy the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will this year sell excursion tickets for the Fourth of July holidays between all stations on its lines at reduced rates. The tickets will be sold on July 3d and 4th, valid for return until July 5th, 1890. This reduction in rates does not apply to tickets sold between New York and Philadelphia, nor New York or Philadelphia and Baltimore and Washington. By the use of these tickets one can make a very pleasant holiday trip at small cost.

A Peculiar Accident.

When the 5.20 p. m. train arrived at the main station in this city last evening Mr. R. J. Miller arose to leave the car. Just as he got on his feet the train gave a sudden start and threw Mr. Miller forward. In falling the arm of the seat struck him on the left side just above the heart. The blow almost rendered him unconscious. Kind friends assisted him to alight from the train. A hack was then secured and Mr. Miller was sent to his home at the corner of Grover avenue and Park place. He suffered intense pain.

Sunday School Convention

The Mid-Summer Convention of the New Jersey Sunday School Association Convened at Asbury Park this morning. There is a large number of delegates present from all parts of the State. Mr. M. M. Dunham of this city is in attendance. Mrs. Dunham accompanies him. The session will last several days.

A FLAG PRESENTATION.

The Jr. O. U. A. M.'s, Gift to Franklin School.

At a meeting of Franklin Council, No. 61 Jr. O. U. A. M., held a few weeks ago, the members decided to present a flag to one of the public schools of the city. In a communication to the Board of Education, the council asked permission to present the flag to the Franklin school, as that was the name of their lodge. The Board accepted the gift and this morning was the time set for presentation to take place.

At nine o'clock when the scholars had assembled in the chapel, Mr. William A. Coddington, in behalf of Franklin Council, ascended the platform, and in a patriotic speech which was listened to with much interest presented the flag to the school.

Dr. J. B. Probasco, a member of the Board of Education, responded to Mr. Coddington's address in a fitting manner and accepted the flag in behalf of the school at the same time thanking the Council for their gift, which he believed them would be highly appreciated by the scholars.

Railroad Notes.

Work of the Pequack extension of the Passaic and Delaware road has so far progressed that the first iron girders of the series of bridges to be built have been laid.

An experimental engine was a short time ago built for the Baltimore and Ohio Company by the Baldwin Locomotive Works of Philadelphia, was a guarantee from the latter that it would haul seven passenger coaches up a grade 117 feet to the mile at the rate of twenty-five miles per hour. The actual work of this engine not only shows that, but also that she can haul an additional car up the grade at the speed specified. The Company is well satisfied with her. She is a ten-wheeled engine with cylinders 21x26.

It is estimated that the expense to the Pennsylvania and Central Railroad of New Jersey in elevating and depressing their tracks through the city of Elizabeth will foot up close to $1,000,000, the greater part of which expense will fall on the Pennsylvania.

—The order of arrest of Justice Hardy issued by Justice Dodyne upon which he was arrested last Saturday, on the charge of fraud in the contraction of a debt, due Mr. Samuel McCullough, was set aside to-day by Supreme Court Commissioner McClure, on application of Borough Counsel Reed, as counsel for Mr. Hardy, on the ground that there was not in his judgement any proof of fraud.

—People who intend to be absent during the Summer should not only secure their houses, but should notify the Chief of Police of their absence that he may have the premises looked after. Force is given to the necessity for caution by the fact that a burglary occurred in this vicinity in every visited his home the other day and discovered that thieves had carried off the back kitchen and contents.—New Brunswick Home News.

—It is stated that the number of persons killed by the railroads in the county during the year ending June last was 1,823, and the number injured 2,070. During the year the railways of the country carried 675,171,243 passengers, so that one passenger in every 1,503,126 was killed and one passenger in every 260,024 was injured. This shows a much higher percentage of casualty than prevails upon the English railways, where it appears that one pass was killed and one passenger in 2,067,226 injured. In 1889 there were 6,942,226 killed and one passenger in 287,971 injured.

OUR READERS' COLUMN.

Recreation for Young Men.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—In view of the fact that a large number of young men are now thinking how they will spend a few days of vacation, I have been asked to say a word or two about Northfield, and the encampment of young men which is soon to be held there under Mr. Moody's supervision. Northfield is a beautiful spot, and, aside from the interest centered in the Bible study, is a most delightful place to spend a few holidays. Almost everything in the way of athletic diversion are indulged in there, many of them under the direction of Mr. A. A. Stagg the famous college athlete. The meetings are of absorbing interest because of the gifted and inspiring men who will lecture and teach, but they take up only a portion of the day, the rest of which is taken up with the recreation which is most congenial to each person. Besides the games and sports there are the mountains to climb, the river to row on and swim in, and the roads to drive on.

One comes down from there with his body refreshed, and his heart and mind elevated and inspired with noble thoughts. I attend this encampment for two successive seasons and know where of I speak.

J. A. ROBINSON.

The Canopy Tea.

The Kitchen Garden connected with the W. C. T. U., gave a canopy tea in a tent at the corner of Second street and Sixth street, from three to ten o'clock last evening. The affair was in charge of the young ladies who are connected with that branch of the W. C. T. U., and was largely attended. On the lawn in front of the tent an orchestra delivered the occasion by good music, which was heartily enjoyed by all present. The tea was undoubtedly a success, financially, as well as otherwise.

The following is sent us for publication: The ladies in charge of the tent entertainment yesterday on Park avenue desire to extend their thanks to every one who in any way contributed to rendering their efforts to bring their work before an appreciative public a success. They hope it will materially improve to have been. The results, financially and otherwise, cannot be determined, but considering that this was a first experiment, and their accommodations necessarily contracted, they feel satisfied to have succeeded so well.

Charged With Gambling.

Some time ago Captain Grant and Policeman Laine raided a gang of young men who were in the habit of gambling near the Berckman street railroad bridge every Sunday. Several of them escaped at that time but were caught later and gave bonds to await the action of the Grand Jury. Yesterday John Deady, the only one who had thus far evaded arrest, was arraigned before Justice Hardy and furnished bonds in the sum of $100 for his appearance when wanted.

Lawyer Hetfield appeared for Deady on the street, and not knowing that he had appeared before the Justice, went to arrest him. The result was quite a distance and then turned around and began laughing at the officer. The incident caused a large crowd to congregate.

Deputy Deputy Grand Master Herring paid an official visit to Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. & A. M., last evening and conferred the degree of Grand Master. A very enjoyable evening was spent.

The soiree given in the Seminary last evening in honor of the closing exercises of that institution was a grand success. A large number of young people attended and all had a most enjoyable time.

The remains of the late Miss Carrie Kirkner arrived in this city on the 7:12 p. m. train, last night. The funeral will take place from the Congregational church to-morrow evening at five o'clock.

Prof. Conwell of Nebraska was dined today by Mr. Chas. Potter of Seventh street, an old friend of many years standing. The professor was formerly the pastor of the Seventh-Day church, but resigned to accept a professorship in a college in the State where he has since become so distinguished.

Commissioner Charles D. Sebring has traded his handsome brick store property on North avenue, opposite the depot, to Mr. Samuel Q. Lawson of New York, for the dwelling on Prospect place he now occupies, and a certain amount of cash, and has purchased the property on North avenue formerly occupied by Mrs. Bruggler.

At the commencements of the University of the City of New York, on Thursday, the degree of doctor of philosophy was conferred upon Israel C. Pierson, who was a graduate of the University in 1885, and made M. A. in 1888. Dr. Pierson is the well known actuary of the Washington Life Insurance Company, and resides on Crescent avenue. Burglars at Fanwood.

Burglars broke into Johnston's coal office at Fanwood last night and after ransacking the office and obtaining nothing of value, they decamped with a gun valued at $50. It was rumored this morning that they had also effected an entrance to the Fanwood station, and stole a number of railroad tickets, but the rumor proves to be groundless, as do so also the one in reference to a horse and buggy being stolen. Mr. Johnston has placed the matter in the hands of Captain Grant.

"Prof. Cornwall and Joe Eaglish."

These gentlemen and other distinguished speakers will discuss the Battle of Nebraska, at Reform Hall to-morrow evening. All are welcome to enjoy the exercises and enter into the spirit of the meeting. No admission fee.

—The Soldiers' Monument Committee, according to the statement of one of them, volunteered to a NEWS reporter, have not yet adopted any design for a monument yet though a sub-committee has been appointed by Gen. Nagley, and said to have been drawn by Archibald Forbes, the war correspondent, was very favorably considered at a meeting last Saturday evening by a portion of the committee. Some of the committee suggested that it be photographed, but Gen. Nagley objected, preferring that it be kept secret until all the committee had seen it and had prepared such public announcement as they deemed proper to make. As an extra precaution he took the design away with him from the post room, where he says it was first laid. He has doubtless been deceived into loaning it to some dishonorable person who has made surreptitious use of it in the only publication office in this locality where honor seems unknown. The member of the committee referred to was very indignant last evening when he heard of the deception practiced. When, something is decided upon THE NEWS will give the particulars, and co-operate to promote the success of the theme if necessary.

LATEST NEWS BY WIRE.

THEIR ARGUMENTS HEARD.

Gov. Abbett Gives an Audience to the Objectors to the Pool Bill.

TRENTON, June 18th.—A delegation numbering over one hundred persons waited on Gov. Abbett yesterday afternoon to urge him to veto the bill legalizing pool selling fifty-five days in each year, and requiring a tax of 5 per cent. on the gross receipts, to be paid to the State. The delegation included citizens of Newark, Elizabeth, Plainfield, New Brunswick, Long Branch and other cities. It was headed by Rev. Dr. Kempshall, of the First Presbyterian church of Elizabeth, who made a strong speech pointing out the demoralizing effect of the race-track on the youth of the State.

Major-Gen. Plume, cashier of the Manufacturers' National Bank, speaking for the Park Presbyterian church, followed in the same strain, and ex-Assemblyman Corbin, of Elizabeth, then made an argument to prove that the bill was in violation of that clause of the State Constitution which prohibits lotteries.

Rev. Dr. Rodman, of Plainfield, was one of several who spoke. Almost every denomination in the several cities named above was represented. Secretary Deaves, of the New Jersey branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, also spoke against the bill, as did L. B. Miller, superintendent of the Singer Sewing Machine Works, which employ 4,000 persons at Elizabethport. A petition, said to contain 5,000 signatures, was presented to the Governor asking him to withhold his signature.

The Governor seemed to be impressed by the movement against the bill, but he gave no intimation of his intentions. Just before the hearing was adjourned Congressman Lehlbach came in and said a few words against the bill.

Happiness on Nothing a Year.

"I can see nothing so holy as unrelazed play and frolic in this bower God has built for us." This sentence from Thoreau Mr. Philip G. Hubert quotes on the title page of his book, "Liberty and a Living." Mr. Hubert, a tired newspaper man, who worked from 9 in the morning till 12 at night, suddenly resolved to break away and regain man's primitive freedom—the freedom of the woods, the sky, the waters and the sunshine. He resolved to go to the country.

Everybody warned him against it, for the world is full of croakers and people who have lost their enthusiasm and become like putty, staying where they are stuck. In the city it was toiling one's life away between walls. In the country the farmer drudged the same way, a slave chained to the soil. Our newspaper man believed there was a middle ground, whereon a man might work just enough to make a good living, and be free, healthy and joyous. In such a way work would become a joy and a pastime.

It must be said that Mr. Hubert had already an income of $50 a month. This represents bloated luxury to the average farmer, but to the city man it is a starvation income. But with this certain sum to fall back on, the journalist gave up his situation on the newspaper and took a house with one acre of ground on Long Island, fifty miles from New York, and proceeded to enjoy paradise.

He has found it all his fancy painted, and more. He himself raises all the vegetables needed. The family sailboat is ready for a sail or a fishing trip, as the case may be. Every day from June till October the whole family have a surf bath. He grabbles all the oysters they can use from the bed of salt water with their own tongs. And in the glorious life of the sea air and sunshine, with the constant, ever changing occupation, the overworked journalist has found that work may be indeed made play. It is the true secret of life.

Mr. Hubert keeps chickens, which supply all the fresh eggs and poultry required, and more too. The luxuries of dress and fashion that city dwellers require this family do not need, and are better off for it. The luxuries they do have a millionaire could not get for himself and his family. Hubert chops wood, cultivates cabbages and "tonga" for oysters like a common fisherman. The $50 a month enables them to have all the music and books they need, with enough left to make trips to the city when any special attraction offers. It will be enough, too, to educate the children if properly handled, in addition to what the father can do with his pen, for he still plays at writing, as he does at everything else. After they are educated the children can make their own way in the world, as their father did.

To sum up the gains: Mr. Hubert and his family have found perfect health and enjoyment. He works at severe labor enough hours in the day to give him physical exercise and keep the family in vegetables, poultry, eggs and honey. He writes for the newspapers too—enough to keep from sinking into a dull drudge like too many farmers. He is at home with his family. All dress plainly, but they miss the frightful bother of clothes.

Mr. Hubert says he would not recommend this isolated life to anybody who does not love physical exercise and plenty of it, or who have not intellectual resources in themselves enough to be happy without gadding the streets of an evening to see a crowd. But those who are fond of physical exercise and have resources in themselves can find paradise on the country on a small income, as he has done. He even thinks he could find paradise there if he had no income beyond what he wrested from the earth and water.

Unlike prize fighters, baseball players who take care of themselves seem able to retain their athletic powers many years. Capt. Anson, of the Chicagos, is a good example. He is now playing his twentieth season of baseball. His hand is as strong and steady, his eye as sure as it was twenty years ago, with every prospect of remaining so. He himself says he will play ball till he is 50 years old, and there is reason to believe he will do so. He has made a success financially of baseball, being worth perhaps $50,000. But he never had to be paid a large sum of money in addition to his salary for keeping sober, as has happened with other famous players. Anson is what he is today because of a temperate life and a shrewd eye to business.

One of the most unique of the reunions of this festive season was that of the New York newspaper men who reported the Johnstown flood disaster in 1889. As Johnstown they were in some cases unable to get food, and in commemoration of this one of the mottoes at their banquet read: "We starved together, now we dine together."

A SILVER BILL PASSED.

Many Important Amendments Adopted by the Senate.

A COLORADO REPUBLICAN ANGRY

Senator Wolcott Criticises President Harrison and Senator Edmunds Compliments Ex-President Cleveland—Bullion Deposited to Be Coined if Owners Wish It.

WASHINGTON, June 18.—The senate passed the house bill constituting Irondequoit bay, N. Y., a navigable water of the United States and house bill to amend the act for the erection of an appraisers' warehouse in New York, and agreed to a conference report on the senate bill for a public building at Salina, Kan. The limit of cost is $75,000. The house silver bill was taken up, and Mr. Wolcott (Colo.) addressed the senate. He protested against the intimation made on the floor of the senate that senators life long in the silver producing states held sordid and unpatriotic opinions. The country seemed (particularly in the north) to have fallen on days when politics were rated as a commercial value alone. The people of the west, who depended chiefly on the products of their mines, were asked at every session to stand by the tariff formulated by the east, and when they asked that silver should be protected they were called sordid and unpatriotic.

Mr. Harrison Attacked.

Mr. Wolcott, who is a Republican, criticised the unfriendly attitude of the administration on the silver question, and said that when Mr. Harrison was nominated his record was searched in vain for any noteworthy act or saying. The Latin sentence, "Stat magni nominis umbra," applies to him. The Republican leaders of the west had secured the success of the ticket, and their reward had been rain or rule. He ventured the opinion that if the president's position on silver had been announced before the election not a state west of the Missouri river would have given him a Republican majority. An open foe was to be preferred to a secret enemy. Mr. Wolcott said he thought the act of 1878 was infinitely preferable to the bill recommended by Secretary Windom. He criticised the ten years' limitation recommended for the bill by the finance committee. Mr. Wolcott's speech was loudly applauded. At its conclusion the senate voted on the amendments reported by the finance committee. The proposition to strike out the provision making the treasury notes issued for the purchase of silver a legal tender was rejected—14 to 30.

Free Coinage Rejected.

The amendment to strike out the bullion redemption clause was rejected—27 to 7—the nays being Messrs. Chandler, Frye, Hale, Hiscock, Hoar, Morrill and Sherman. The proposition to strike out the free coinage when the price of silver was $1 for 371¼ grains pure silver was rejected—16 to 48. The amendment to limit the act was rejected—8 to 56—the yeas being Messrs. Chandler, Edmunds, Morrill and Sherman. Mr. Blair offered an amendment to limit the amount of silver coinage to $5,000,000 a month. It was voted down—12 to 46. Mr. Plumb submitted the following amendment as a substitute for the first section of the house bill, which after some debate it was adopted—43 to 34.

The Units of Value.

"That from and after the date of the passage of this act the unit of value in the United States shall be the dollar, and the same may be coined of 412½ grains of standard silver, or of 25 8-10 grains of standard gold; and all coin which shall be legal tender for all debts, public or private, that thereafter any owner of silver or gold bullion may deposit the same at any mint of the United States to be formed into standard dollars and bars for his benefit and without charge, but it shall be lawful to refuse any deposit of less value than $100, or any bullion so low as to be unsuitable for the operations of the mint."

The Yeas and Nays.

The vote was as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Bate, Berry, Blair, Blodgett, Butler, Call, Cameron, Carlisle, Cockrell, Coke, Colquitt, Daniel, Eustis, George, Gibson, Gorman, Harris, Hearst, Ingalls, Jones (Ark.), Jones (Nev.), Kenna, Manderson, Mitchell, Moody, Morgan, Paddock, Palmer, Pugh, Ransom, Reagan, Sanders, Squire, Stewart, Teller, Turpie, Vest, Voorhees, Walthall, Wolcott—34.

Nays—Messrs. Aldrich, Allison, Blair, Blodgett, Carlisle, Chandler, Dawes, Edmunds, Evarts, Frye, Gray, Hale, Harrison, Hawley, Hiscock, Hoar, McPherson, Payne, Sawyer, Spooner, Stockbridge, Washburn—28.

The Option to Receive Coin.

Mr. Plumb moved to insert an additional section providing that the owners of bullion deposited for coinage shall have the option to receive coin, and such bullion shall be subsequently coined. Adopted. The bill was then reported to the senate, and all the amendments agreed to in the committee of the whole were agreed to in the senate—yeas, 40; nays, 26.

Mr. Chandler then moved the following amendment: No gold or silver bullion shall be received by the treasury department under this act, except such as shall be shown to be the product of mines within the United States. Mr. Teller moved to lay the amendment on the table. Agreed to—yeas 42, nays 25.

The Bill Passed.

The bill as amended was then passed—yeas 43, nays 25—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Bate, Berry, Blodgett, Butler, Call, Cameron, Cockrell, Coke, Colquitt, Daniel, Eustis, George, Gibson, Harris, Ingalls, Jones (Ark.), Jones (Nev.), Kenna, Manderson, Mitchell, Moody, Morgan, Paddock, Pasco, Payne, Pugh, Ransom, Reagan, Sanders, Squire, Stewart, Teller, Turpie, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Walthall, Wolcott—43.

Nays—Messrs. Aldrich, Allen, Allison, Blair, Casey, Chandler, Cullom, Dawes, Edmunds, Evarts, Frye, Gray, Hale, Hawley, Hiscock, Hoar, McPherson, Morrill, Pierce, Sawyer, Sherman, Spooner, Stockbridge, Washburn, Wilson (Md.)—25.

The following pairs were announced: Messrs. Dixon and Hampton, Dolph and Brown, Stanford and Wilson (Ia.), Higgins and Penrose, McMillan and Blackburn, Pasco and Farwell, Quay and Faulkner.

Mr. Plumb moved a formal amendment making the provisions of section 4 of the act of 1873 applicable to this act, which was agreed to.

Senator Edmunds Waxes Warm.

During the discussion of the substitute offered by Mr. Reagan for three of the sections in the bill providing denominations of certificates to be issued, etc., Mr. Edmunds took occasion to disclaim all responsibility for the pending measure, and said he was willing to deliver the management of the finances of the country to the Democratic party if they chose being. During a sharp debate which followed Mr. Edmunds said that the Democratic party, which was now entirely without responsibility, is endeavoring to lead the Republicans astray, as they had done in 1877-8, when by appeals to the worst instincts and unhappy addictions of the people of the United States they had passed through the Democratic house of representatives a free coinage bill.

He Compliments Mr. Cleveland.

He spoke of Mr. Cleveland as brave enough to tell his Democratic supporters "that that sort of delusion could not be carried into practice." Mr. Edmunds said further that during the four years of the Cleveland administration the Democratic party, for a wonder, had remained quiet. This statement was denied by Mr. Reagan and Mr. Vest, and allusion was made to the anti-administration silver speech made in the senate by the late Mr. Beck at the beginning of the Cleveland administration. Mr. Plumb spoke of Mr. Edmunds' speech as the "last effort" the senate had heard from him in 1878 when the silver coinage bill was passed.

Silver Certificates a Legal Tender.

Mr. Reagan's amendment was adopted, and Mr. Teller offered an amendment declaring the silver certificates to be issued a legal tender. Mr. Teller's amendment was opposed by senators Blair, Gray and Evarts, and defended by Senators Morgan and Daniel. It was modified, at the suggestion of Mr. Eustis, by adding the words "and all silver certificates already issued," and as so modified, it was agreed to—yeas, 34; nays, 28, as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Allen, Bate, Berry, Butler, Cameron, Cockrell, Coke, Colquitt, Daniel, Dolph, Eustis, George, Hearst, Ingalls, Jones (Ark.), Jones (Nev.), Kenna, Mitchell, Moody, Morgan, Paddock, Pasco, Pugh, Ransom, Reagan, Sanders, Squire, Stewart, Teller, Turpie, Vest, Voorhees, Walthall, Wolcott—34.

Nays—Messrs. Aldrich, Allison, Blair, Blodgett, Carlisle, Chandler, Dawes, Edmunds, Evarts, Frye, Gray, Hale, Harrison, Hawley, Hiscock, Hoar, McPherson, Payne, Sawyer, Spooner, Stockbridge, Washburn, Wilson (Md.)—28.

Mr. Chandler then moved the following amendment: No gold or silver bullion shall be received by the treasury department under this act, except such as shall be shown to be the product of mines within the United States. Mr. Teller moved to lay the amendment on the table. Agreed to—yeas 42, nays 25.

The Bill Passed.

The bill as amended was then passed—yeas 43, nays 25—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Bate, Berry, Blodgett, Butler, Call, Cameron, Cockrell, Coke, Colquitt, Daniel, Eustis, George, Gibson, Harris, Ingalls, Jones (Ark.), Jones (Nev.), Kenna, Manderson, Mitchell, Moody, Morgan, Paddock, Pasco, Payne, Pugh, Ransom, Reagan, Sanders, Squire, Stewart, Teller, Turpie, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Walthall, Wolcott—43.

Nays—Messrs. Aldrich, Allen, Allison, Blair, Casey, Chandler, Cullom, Dawes, Edmunds, Evarts, Frye, Gray, Hale, Harrison, Hawley, Hiscock, Hoar, McPherson, Morrill, Pierce, Sawyer, Sherman, Spooner, Stockbridge, Washburn, Wilson (Md.)—28.

The Wyoming bill was then taken up and made the unfinished business.

In the House.

The house went into committee of the whole on the sundry civil appropriation bill. The committee after adopting an amendment appropriating $41,000 for an electric light plant at the Watervliet arsenal, New York, arose and reported the bill to the house, and it was passed.

Nipped by Inspector Byrnes.

NEW YORK, June 18.—On June 11 the jewelry store of C. D. Norton, of Gloversville, was broken into, the safe blown open and $25,000 worth of jewelry and watches stolen. The burglars put their booty in a bag and jumping into a light wagon drove twenty-eight miles to Ballston Spa, where they took the train to New York. An investigation showed that there were three men in the burglary. Inspector Byrnes' detectives took occasion to disclaim all responsibility for the pending measure, and said he was willing to deliver the management of the finances of the country to the Democratic party if they chose being. During a sharp debate which followed Mr. Edmunds said that the Democratic party, which was now entirely without responsibility, is endeavoring to lead the Republicans astray, as they had done in 1877-8, when by appeals to the worst instincts and unhappy addictions of the people of the United States they had passed through the Democratic house of representatives a free coinage bill.

SEARCHING FOR BODIES.

Vain Attempts to Reach the Dead Miners.

PITIFUL SCENES ABOUT THE PIT.

One Man's During Attempt to Reach the Fatal Chamber—He Crawled to Within One Hundred Feet of Where the Bodies Are Supposed to Lie.

DUNBAR, Pa., June 18.—The people of Dunbar are still in suspense. The rescuing of the miners is slow work, dreadfully slow for the anxious hearts of those who for the last twenty hours have been hoping against hope that the fifty men who were buried in the burning Hill Farm mine are still alive. The most experienced mine bosses in the region are at the scene devising ways to get at the unfortunates, dead or alive. They are now trying to force an entrance into the right wing of the Hill Farm mine, where the men are, from the Ferguson mine, which is only a short distance away, and from which there was several years ago a connection which had been closed lately by a fall of slate. The rescuers think they can soon force their way through this and thereby reach the entombed men.

The Coal Is Afire.

The mine is still on fire and by the appearance of the smoke, which rushes from the mouth of the pit in huge volumes, it is believed that the coal has caught fire, which means that it will continue to burn until flooded. The mine is 400 feet and probably 5,000 feet from the main entrance. Some claim that they have all perished, while others equally as good authority say that unless the men were suffocated by the fire they are now in that part of the mine they are still living, although exhausted by starvation and impure air.

Fresh Air Cut Off.

It was determined to cut off all fresh air and let the mine burn itself out. At the first drift a solid wall of brick, well plastered, was built across the opening. Material was wheeled down the entrance to where the men were at work, and an air fan was set at work supplying fresh air to the rescuers.

Markey's Heroic Attempt at Rescue.

Early yesterday morning Martin Markey, pit boss of the Anchor mine, made a daring attempt to reach the right driftings of the Hill Farm mines from the Mahoney entrance, one and one-half miles away across the hills. He crawled over drifts and fallen slate to within 100 yards of the fatal chambers, and sounded again and again, but received no response. Many of the men were either smothered or were fighting the fire that was now steadily encroaching on their narrow territory, and Markey, not daring to proceed alone, hopeless quest of seeking an answer from 100 yards of solid slate.

Dead Near His Boy's Body.

They found the dead miner about the mine today, and one of the most touching is that of a man named Kelley and a man named Hays. The latter, it seems, had safely carried Kelley from the pits in Lancashire, England, three successive times.

When Hays rushed into the mine after the explosion to find his son whose unguarded lamp had set the damp on fire—

Be fell dead within a stone's throw of his boy's body. Then there came crawling in after him a gaunt, blackened specter, who gathered his scorched form tenderly in his arms, and Kelley carried all that was mortal of his three times savior to the open air and fell burned and blind.

Who Was to Blame?

It is claimed that the unfit condition of the pit is due to the negligence of the company. This is a question that will be settled at the coroner's inquest, which will be held as soon as the other bodies are recovered. Nearly all of the miners employed at Hill Farm were foreigners of Irish and Scotch descent. Many had their sons with them.

This is the first mine explosion that has ever occurred west of the Alleghanies. It is said that there are other mines in the Connellsville coke region that are equally as poorly ventilated and that it is only a question of time until the dreadful calamity will be repeated.

Miners on the Jury.

Coroner Holbrook has appointed three miners and two citizens on the jury. He placed the miners there because they were the greatest sufferers and because they wanted a show if the remedy could be applied. The jury so located that flooding the fire is impossible, and smothering it means certain death to the most below, providing any are living. Nearly all the mines in this region are closed down and men, money and provisions are pouring in on every train.

SALVATOR THE WINNER.

He Nabs the Suburban Handicap by a Neck.

CASSIUS WAS IN SECOND PLACE.

And Tenny Came in Third—Forty Thousand People Witness the Greatest of All Races—Raceland Was Hardly "In It"—The Spectators Were Frenzied.

NEW YORK, June 18.—Fully forty thousand people saw Salvator, our greatest horse, ridden with a will forward home by the matchless Murphy, win the greatest of all Suburbans at the beautiful Sheepshead bay course yesterday. The starters, weight, jockeys and betting were as follows:

Salvator, 127 (Murphy), 3 to 5; Cassius, 127 (Lamley), 5 to 1; Tenny, 126 (Garrison), 7 to 2; Castaway, 116 (Taylor), 30 to 1; Firenzi, 126 (Hay), 10 to 1; Raceland, 126 (Hamilton), 4 to 1; Longstreet, 123 (Anderson), 25 to 1; Longchamps, 99 (Bergen), 15 to 1; Montague, 126 (Martin), 40 to 1.

"They're Off" Went Up.

It was 4:30 p. m. when the bugle called the horses to the post. There was considerable delay and two false starts were made. When the eager equines came to the post the third time and sprang to their task urged by nine jockeys, the flag was dropped and a great chorus of "They're off" went up. It was an admirable bit of work on the part of the starter. Cassius, Prince Royal, Tenny and Salvator were in the first flight, the others all up and as close as they could with safety be.

Taral at once made his policy evident. With a cut of the whip and a prick of the spur he jumped Cassius in front and made for the rail. As they came by the grand stand all were running freely under heavy reins, Cassius a length and a half before Castaway, who was a neck in front of Longstreet. Salvator on the rail was as good fourth, while beside him, rattling along and keeping any one from crowding him, was the beautiful Firenzi. Just before the judges' stand was reached Garrison took Tenny back. The pace was a terrific one.

Tenny's Friends Anxious.

Light weighted Cassius was running like a wild horse, increasing the distance between himself and the others with every stride, and, hugging the pole, went around the turn like a cyclone. Longstreet was quitting hard, with Strideaway two lengths and a half away, while on the quarter hung Salvator. Firenzi and Prince Royal were lying next and on the outside was Tenny.

Raceland was finding the pace too hot. He seem to get tangled up on the turn, and, though running gamely, his efforts were comparatively ineffective. Here it was, however, that the friends of Tenny became anxious. He was running just as freely as was Salvator, but away on the outside had lengths the worst of it. If Garrison when handled him back after the start, had any idea that he could get through when he wanted or that the race would be made a waiting one, he concealed a grievous error. He was endeavoring to remedy it, but everything was against him. He was on the outside of two horses in the race.

Murphy His Nemesis.

Straightened on the backstretch Taral took one look behind him. Taylor was riding Strideway and Bergen was at work as Longstreet. From these he had nothing to fear, but Murphy, his Nemesis, was sitting perfectly still on Salvator. That was enough for Taral, and he asked Cassius to go on. His only hope lay in setting a pace that would kill the heavy weight division. Garrison had handled Tenny well on the turn, and was now letting her begin to move his colt up. Longstreet was beaten for all purposes at the three-quarters, and Murphy made up Salvator. He seemed utterly indifferent as to everything but his own horse. He had not touched him with either whip or spur. Rounding for home Garrison put the Hyperion colt on his back and he made a demand on Tenny. The latter responded, but it was not in his usual brilliant style.

Tenny Was Done For.

He seemed to lack the vim that characterized his earlier races of the year. Half way round the turn the "Snapper" drew his whip and the grand stand stood still. Could it be that Tenny was beaten? It seemed so. Salvator was not being punished and Tenny was. "Cassius wins!" yelled an excited man who hung over the upper deck of the stand, and the cry was taken up and echoed over and over again, only to meet a counter deafening yell that came from toward the upper end, of "Tenny wins!" And so it momentarily seemed, but at the sixteenth pole he faltered, and the struggle was between Cassius and Salvator.

An Exciting Finish.

Garrison, pale but determined, was vigorously at work on the little sway back horse Tenny, who was making a gallant fight, but without avail. Tenny was beaten, and Murphy knew it. The Beverwyck colt was the persimmon he was after, and a lurking fear came to rouse the evil head of the noble Cassius, who had the pole. Murphy, as his wont in all races, looked straight ahead, but at the same time he had a surprise in store for young Taral that metamorphosed his cake into a veritable lump of dough. On the leaders came, every nerve and sinew in horse and rider being taxed to their utmost. Garrison was working might and main, but he could not catch the leaders, and Salvator passed under the wire a neck before Cassius, who was three lengths the best of Tenny. Then came Strideaway, two lengths further back, with Firenzi, Raceland, Prince Royal, Longstreet and Montague. Salvator's time was 2:05 4-5.

It would be hard to tell how much money really changed hands on the several events, but $2,500,000 would not fall far short of the grand total. Including yesterday's winnings Salvator has won $65,000 in stakes and purses.

A History of Salvator.

Salvator is owned by J. B. Haggin, of California, and is a chestnut colt by Imported Charles, out of Salina. As a yearling Mr. Haggin paid $4,500 for him. He won the tidal stakes at Sheepshead on June 18, 1889, with McLaughlin up, carrying 124 pounds, 1 mile, in 1:44 3-5. On July 3 he took the realization stakes, worth $24,150, at Sheepshead, with McLaughlin up, 122 pounds, defeating Terra Cotta, Dance, Eric and others, at 1¼ miles, in 2:01. On July 9 he captured the Lorillard stakes at Monmouth in 2:07¼, 1¼ miles, I. Murphy up, carrying 118 pounds.

The Suburban Described.

The Suburban won by Salvator is thus described: A handicap sweepstakes of $100 each, $50 forfeit, and only $25 if declared, the association to add the amount necessary to make the value of the race $10,000; the second to receive $2,000 and the third $1,000 out of the stakes; closed, winners, after publication of weights, of a race of $1,00, 4 pounds extra; of two of $1,000 or of one of $2,000, 8 pounds extra; of three of $1,000 or two of $2,000 or of one of $5,000, 12 pounds extra; in the case of horses handicapped at 115 pounds or over these penalties shall apply to the extent of one-half, and in the case of those handicapped at 122 pounds or over to the extent of one-quarter only, and in the case of those handicapped at 126 pounds or over they shall not apply at all; one mile and a quarter.

Sixteen Sophomores Suspended.

LEWISTON, Me., June 18.—Bates college sophomores buried analytics with the usual noisy ceremonies. During the night the doorsteps of several members of the faculty were painted. President Walker's Plan.

AURORA, N. Y., June 18.—President Francis A. Walker, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, delivered an address at Wells college, Aurora, in which he made a strong and elaborate plea for normal school instruction in women's colleges.

DIVIDING UP AFRICA.

England Takes Uganda, and Germany's Sphere Is Extended to the Congo State.

LONDON, June 18.—Lord Salisbury's dispatch to Sir E. B. Malet, the British ambassador to Berlin, containing the agreement with Germany concerning Africa, declares that Germany's claim that where one power occupies the coast another may not, without consent, occupy unclaimed regions in the rear, cannot be allowed in cases where the country is already occupied by Englishmen; but where there are no English settlements England has no title to advance against the German claims.

The agreement is as follows: England retains the Stevenson road, which will be the boundary between the English and German spheres. The line stretches from the mouth of the Bokuru, on the west shore of Lake Nyassa, to the mouth of the Kiloo, on the east shore of Lake Tanganyika. Northward Germany retains the region as far as the Congo state and along the first degree of south latitude, the boundary diverging around the western shore of the Nyanza to include the mountain Mfumbiro in the British sphere, in order to make the frontier coincide as nearly as possible with the region covered by Stanley's treaties.

With the view of securing the freedom of future commerce, the passage of German subjects will be equally exempt between Lake Tanganyika and the British sphere. It is further agreed that in all east African territories subjected to their influence equal rights of trading or traffic shall be conferred by the two powers respectively on their subjects. Other missions are to have freedom of religious teaching.

Evading the Bait Act.

BOSTON, June 18.—A St. Johns (N. F.) special gives a description of the newest evasion of the bait act. A Newfoundland fishing premises has a license to carry a cargo of herring to Boston under the false pretense of stress of weather and she calls at St. Pierre. She is there attached under process of the French court for an alleged debt to a St. Pierre trader This debt is purely fictitious. Under order of the court the cargo of herring is sold in St. Pierre at public auction and a large price is realized. The ship is released from the attachment and the captain pockets the spoils and the law is successfully evaded.

Charges Against a Clergyman.

MANSFIELD, O., June 18.—The Rev. S. A. George is about to leave this city for Baltimore to accept a call to preach in that city. Grave rumors have been going the rounds the past few days in regard to certain acts of the Rev. George with certain lady members of his congregation. These rumors gained such circulation that the trustees of the church held a meeting Tuesday evening. The trustees present were W. P. Clarke, S. H. Garrett and Mr. Jordan. They found that the minister had been at least indiscreet and will investigate further before reporting to the church to which Rev. George has been called. The rumors or charges which the trustees inquired into were those of kissing and hugging some of the lady members. Even graver rumors are afloat and the outcome will be anxiously awaited. Rev. George has been a resident of this city for thirty years, and for thirteen years pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian church, and his friends hope to see him come out from this investigation unscathed.

New Haven's Rejected Legacy.

NEW HAVEN, June 18.—Some months ago Philip Marot, a well known New England philanthropist, left a legacy of $130,000 to the city of New Haven, the income to be devoted to the relief of worthy poor, a provision being inserted to divide the money under certain contingencies among local charitable institutions. The city council voted not to accept the $130,000, this action finally being held as the result of some artistic wire pulling of the agents of the interested institutions. Councilman Hugh Daily and State's Attorney Doolittle have been active in the opposition compelling the city officials to show cause why the money should not be accepted.

Like Unto Old Rome.

NEW YORK, June 18.—A system of public baths similar to those of ancient Rome will soon be established in this city. A number of prominent men have interested in the scheme, and plans for a building have already been accepted. It will cover nearly a whole city block and accommodate a very large number of persons. It embodies all of the principles of the ancient Roman baths of Caracalla, but will be fitted with all the modern appliances. The baths are intended to be open at all times of the year, and the cost of a visit will not be more than six cents.

Chautauqua Lake Railroad in Trouble.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y., June 18.—A notice has been issued that owing to unexpected embarrassment the running of all trains has been stopped and all operations suspended on the Chautauqua Lake railroad. The principal officials of the road are interested in some southern mining schemes, and it is said they failed to respond to some urgent financial calls.

He Killed "Kate the Rebel."

NEW YORK, June 18.—The jury in the trial of George Spence for the killing of his wife, known as "Kate the Rebel," found a verdict of murder in the second degree.

Not Married, but Locked Up.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., June 18.—Arthur J. Pollachek, of this city, was to have married Miss Waldman, of New York, yesterday, but he is now locked up charged with grand larceny. Some time ago he bought a gold watch of Morris L. Mantel on the installment plan, but only paid $4, although he had long ago agreed to settle. He left a lucrative position here a week ago and was arrested on Sunday on complaint of Mantel. Pollachek was tried in the police court and placed under bonds to appear before the next grand jury.

She Stole His Diamonds.

BUFFALO, N. Y., June 18.—Annie Enright, a chambermaid at the Genesee house, was arrested on suspicion of stealing between $800 and $1,200 worth of diamonds and jewelry belonging to Frederick St. Louis, of the firm of Bell, Lewis & Yates, who was a guest at the house. There is said to be very strong evidence against the girl.

THE LIME KILN CLUB.

The Professor Makes a Few Thrilling Remarks on "What Was We?" Etc.

When the meeting had been duly opened Brother Gardner announced that Professor McAfoy Johnson, of Florida, was in the ante-room and waiting to deliver his celebrated address on "What We Was! What We Is! What We Shall We Be! or, What's de Use of All Dis Fussin'?"

"De professor arrove heah two days ago," explained the presiding officer, "an' she run my washuss at one meal dan ine an' de ole woman could eat in a week. I has had to lend him a white shirt, a pair of socks, two paper collahs an' forty cents in money, an' I won't conceal de fack from you das I hope he will leave town right away arter de lectuah. In case he shows a disposition to linger I trust that Olvestaus Jones will take it upon hisself to see dat he moves along. While I does' wish to discourage talent, we cannot support one race. I can't afford to foot all de expenses out of my own pocket. As fur de essay, I does know what it is. We will give him a fa'r show, an' when he retires Brudder Jones will retire with him an' drop a broad hint das it is only half a mile across de water to Canada."

THE PROFESSOR.

The professor was then escorted in. He was a tall, cadaverous man, with a hollow voice and sunken eyes, and the first impression made was that he could eat meat and potatoes all day long without filling up. He was received with much applause, which continued for a minute or two after he had bowing to the right and left, and with every bow his pants pulled up on his boot legs a full six inches.

HE LEADS OFF.

Having arrived at the platform, the professor put down two goblets of water, slipped off his coat, unbuttoned his vest, and removing his necktie and collar, he led off with:

"My comfidin' friends, whar was we? Jump backwards wid me to de Garden of Eden, an' you find a man wanderin' up an' down among de pansies an' de hollyhocks. He was a bery handsome fellah—you see me. Outside of de flowers an' shrubs, dar was watermelyons an' peaches an' grapes an' persimmons till you couldn't rest. All dese comforts he had to buy, no taxes to pay, an' chickens roasted an' low down dat he didn't hev to use no ladder. You hev probahly hyeh tell dat Adam was a white man, but dat is anybody final you. I hev looked into de subjick as close as a passon kin, an' all de facks go to show dat he was of our color. [Great applause.]

"I hev his 'sputation 'dat he probably resemble de passon who now stands befo' you. [Patint applause.] As to dat, it makes no difference, an' I am not de man to try an' build myself up at any one else's expense. Dat's whar' we was, my comfidin' friends—right in de Garden of Eden, gittin' fat eb'ry day an' hevin' de whole blame kit of a time. We reckoned we have strock a job dat would last foreber, an' we was puffed up accordin'. We felt dat we owned de airth, an' nobody could reach us wid a ten foot pole. [Applause.]

"My next subject," said the speaker, after waiting a large quantity of silence, "is, 'Whar' Is We?' While we was walkin' on our high heels about dat garden, feelin' ourselves de aristocracy of de airth, 'long come de hebenly sarpint an' we was lifted right out a cent in our pockets or a shirt to our backs. We has clumb to de top limb of de penitentiary tree to fall backwards. [Agitation.] From enjoyin' free board an' lodgin's 'wid nuffin to do but hunt rabbits an' go fishin', we was bounced out to live on grass an' made our beds in de bull rushes. [Move agitation.]

"We got it bad, an' we has his down on our back ebber since. Dat's why we dead' speak nuffin but de truth. Dat's why we is at de bottom an' de whites man at de top. He didn't git no rich soft snap to begin wid, an' we follers in his track. He has now had bad about. What is we? We am de under dog. We am down. We has got to take de pastin's an' let de whites man hev de 'vantuhs. Dat's whar' we is.

"My next subject disqualifies de imputashun of 'Whar' Shall We Be?' While I realizes dat de pashunless dat we has gathered upon it, de fuchee has an imputashus distinctashun. I sometimes feel like givin' up de struggle fur impasterability an' submittin' my cookwuss to proving de sensi've shun. [Yells.] Five centuries hence de susceptibility may professionally espouse de svaricdcumseas, but what will we be den? In consequence wid previous exposetlashuns, I feel dat we orter relinquish de asslinity of de hemisphere an' seek to arriquonte de hallucination which combats our solarity.

"Gem'len, wid dese few remarks, an' thankin' you from de bottom of my heart for de indifference wid which you hev silentlassled de frigidity of my salutashun, I hev de honor to bid you good night, an' to add dat for de nex' fo' weeks I shall make my headquarters at de cabin of Brudder Gardner, whar' I shall be prepared to remove co'ns and bunions at de rate of twenty-five cents a removes."

A great storm of applause greeted the speaker as he retired.—Detroit Free Press.

MAIDENS ARMED WITH GUNS.

Military Drill as a Means for Successful Physical Training.

Bangor is known as the Queen city of Maine, and she now deserves the title in a double degree, for a number of the princesses have of late been learning the use of guns in times of war as well as in days of peace.

The Chilcothians is the name of a military company composed entirely of comely young women who "drill" under the command of a physical training. was a good thing, and that the best results in that direction could be obtained through the use of the army drill. Having settled preliminaries the maidens secured for instructor Capt. L. Chilcott, the handsome commander of Company G, Second regiment, and amply recompensed him for his services by the organization in his honor. Throughout winter and spring the willing young warrior devoted himself to his congenial task. But he made of the drills no holiday or society affairs, and the recruits were worked as hard as if they were members of the regular army. The privates carried Springfield cadet rifles weighing seven and three-quarter pounds, and the officers were equipped with swords of the regulation United States army pattern.

A FAIR DEFENDER.

The other evening the Chilcothians invited their friends to witness a drill at Norombega hall. Those present were amply rewarded for their attendance. They saw thirty lovely damsels in tight fitting waists and kilted skirts, trimmed handsomely with white, high laced boots with tops fastened after the hussar style, and wearing jaunty cadet caps on well poised heads. Capt. Blanche Louise Hellier was in command and gave her orders with the confidence of a veteran. The manual of arms and the company evolutions were performed without a mistake, and the wonderful proficiency of the Chilcothians elicited well earned applause. The young ladies were showered with floral tributes and a ball ended the event. On behalf of her comrades Capt. Hellier presented Capt. Chilcott with a sword and belt, and Lieut. Mitchell, his assistant, with a gold watch.

THE FOURTH EXERCISE.

The military drill as a means of physical training seems to be a success, in Bangor anyway.

Statistics About the Echo.

Some one has recently figured out the exact distance that a person may be removed from a reflecting surface and yet hear the echo of his own voice. Five syllables a second is said to be the limit both of distinct pronunciation and distinct hearing. This gives one-fifth of a second for each syllable. When the atmospheric temperature is 61 degs. sound travels 1,130 feet a second. In one-fifth of that time it will cover a distance of 224 feet. Hence, if a reflecting surface is 113 feet distant the initial sound of an uttered syllable will be returned to the ear just as the next syllable starts on its journey. In this case the first fifth of the second is occupied in the utterance of a syllable and the next fifth of the second in hearing its echo. Two syllables would be echoed from a reflecting surface 224 feet distant, three syllables from 336 feet, and so on within the limits of audibleness.

"Great the Citizen."

Mr. H. H. Kohlsaat, of Chicago, has arranged to erect at his own expense a statue of Gen. Grant in civilian dress, which is to stand on an appropriate site at Galena, Ills. The figure will be of bronze, eight feet tall, and will surmount a pedestal ten feet high. The statue will be unveiled some time next spring in the presence of a distinguished company of invited guests.

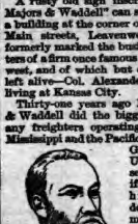
THE ACCEPTED DESIGN.

THE FAMOUS PONY EXPRESS.

One of Its Originators Still Alive—The Wonderful Work Done.

A rusty old sign inscribed "Russell, Majors & Waddell" can still be seen on a building at the corner of Shawnee and Main streets, Leavenworth, Kan. It formerly marked the business headquarters of a firm once famous throughout the west, and of which but one member is left alive—Col. Alexander Majors, now living at Kansas City.

Thirty-one years ago Russell, Majors & Waddell did the biggest business of any freighters operating between the Mississippi and the Pacific coast. "Duke" Gwynn, then a United States senator from California, thought his constituents deserved a better mail service than that afforded by the regular coach route, and there came into his mind the idea of a pony express. The wiseacres at Washington dismissed the proposition with a sneer, but the Leavenworth freighting firm thought the plan feasible and with "Duke" Gwynn in getting for it official recognition and government aid.



COL. ALEX. MAJORS.

Col. Majors still delights to recall those "brave days of old" when the hardy little ponies of the plains made nearly railroad time between St. Joseph and Sacramento. The post houses were ten miles apart, and as a messenger dashed up to one of these he jumped from the back of his panting steed, bestrode another fresh and impatient for the race, and was off again. Five seconds only were allowed for a change of mounts. But a single order was given to messengers—"Ride and stop for nothing." So ride they did, storm and darkness they hastened on, occasionally scurrying at full speed through bands of hostile Indians, with a revolver crack to the right, another to the left, a duck of the head to the pony's neck to escape the whistling arrows, but never a swerve in the onward rush toward the destined goal. The riders got $100 a month each in gold and the company received $5 for every letter sent over the pony route. "The most noteworthy piece of work performed," remarked Col. Majors the other day, "was in the delivering of one of President Buchanan's messages in a few hours over eight days. The message was received in St. Joseph by wire, immediately placed upon light steamfield paper and given to the messenger. The pony was off like the wind. Forty of the little fellows were required to do the work and it was done to the queen's taste. But the telegraph came soon," he added sadly, "and that broke the pony's back. Later the railroads came and we had to stop our wagons and close up our business."

Col. Majors, although now over 70 years of age, is nearly as able and active as in his prime.

A MONUMENT TO RED JACKET.

The Splendid Memorial to Honor the Savage Chieftain.

A monument to the memory of Red Jacket, the famous chief of the Senecas, will be erected some time next fall on a site yet to be selected within the boundaries of the state of New York. Sculptor James E. Kelly, of New York city, has already completed the designs, which, when perpetuated in bronze and granite, will form a noble and striking addition to the art acquisitions of the country. The base is to be of granite, on which will rest a bowider, either of syanite or granite, twelve feet in diameter and of equal height. At the lower angles of the bowlder will appear four bronze turtles. Over all will rise the blasted trunk of a tree in bronze, bearing about its roots the tribal totems of the Six Nations. The bas relief appearing in the illustration here given represents Red Jacket addressing a council. On the opposite side will be a companion bronze typifying the life of the Senecas before the advent of the white man.

THE RED JACKET MONUMENT.

The artist who designed this monument is not yet 35 years of age, but he has long held high rank in his profession. He first became known, when only 21, as the sculptor of Sheridan's Ride.

How to Tell the Day of the Week.

Here is a formula for telling the day of the week of any date, which is said to be the discovery of a Rhode Island mathematician: Take the last two figures of the year, add a quarter of this, disregarding the fraction. Add the date of the month and to this add the figure in the following list, one figure standing for each month; 3-6-6-2-4-0-2-5-1-3-6-1. Divide the sum by 7 and the remainder will give the number of the day of the week, and when there is no remainder the day will be Saturday. As an example, take March 19, 1890. Take 90, add 22, add 19, add 6. This gives 137, which, divided by 7, leaves a remainder of 4, which is the number of the day, or Wednesday.

UNION COUNTY COURTS.

Egel and Ramsberger on Trial for Larceny.

Yesterday morning at the opening of the Union County Court Judge McCormick stated that there were several appeal cases set down for trial without juries, but owing to the jury list they could have to go over. He accordingly said July 31 for the hearing of these cases.

Timothy Carmody was then arraigned on an indictment for an assault and battery on Dr. James McCran. The Defendant had as counsel Mr. James C. Connolly. Mr. McCran testified that he saw Carmody going to his neighbor's apartments with beer, and he went in to remonstrate, when Carmody threw a pail of beer at him.

Carmody denied this assault and McCran's story is corroborated him. The jury rendered a verdict of acquittal.

Charles Ramberger and Bernard Egel were next placed on trial for larceny. The case has excited much interest in Plainfield where the parties all reside. The complaining witness, A. L. Cadmus, the miller, said he notice that grain and flour were taken out in bags and packages from his mills by Egel in terms of orders, and that Ramsberger, the latter, was in league with the driver. Mr. R. Vi Lindabury, Mr. Joseph C. Garrison and Hon. Foster M. Voorhees are counsel for the defendants.

Bernard Cochoine was yesterday convicted of simple assault in the Union county court yesterday.

Cochoine was alleged to have feloniously stopped a stockrider in the boy's back, but in his trial it was shown that the assault was provoked by Spaniard and other boys who mocked the Italian. These facts had a tendency to mitigate the verdict. On Saturday he will be arraigned for sentence.

THE PRIDE OF NEBRASKA.

A 13-Year-Old Maiden Who Wins Gold Medals.

Daisy Stoddard is the pride of Nebraska, and the inhabitants of the state think she can "knock out" any one of her inches and sex in the country as a speaker. Recently during the Miss Stoddard is still too young to do up her gracefully waving hair or wear long dresses her success is little short of phenomenal. She is 13 years old and won her first medal for oratory last August. At a contest in Republic City she secured another, and followed this up by getting a third one of gold at the Hastings elocutionary tourney.

MISS DAISY STODDARD.

But her greatest triumph was scored outside the state. Hearing that a national oratorical contest was to take place at Chicago she urged her parents to allow her to compete. They consented and the child returned after the struggle to her farm house home bringing with her the first prize—a medal of gold set with diamonds. Miss Daisy has been "speaking pieces" of a temperance character since she entered on her third year.

What localizes the foregoing is that Nebraska is the State from which comes Prof. Cornwall, who speaks at Reform Hall tonight, whom Rev Charles Bayard Mitchell, the pastor of the Methodist church in this city, said at the service last Sunday evening, was the most eloquent speaker at the recent National Temperance Congress in New York, and was years ago pastor of the Seventh Day Baptist church in this city, whence he departed for the State he now hails from.

JOTTINGS.

—To-morrow will be the longest day—14h, 59m.

—To-day the New Jersey Editorial association started on its pleasant ten days' Canadian trip.

—Men are engaged grading the new road leading from Park avenue to the Hillside cemetery.

—The Police Committee of the council held a meeting last night, but transacted only routine business.

—Policeman Lynch this afternoon arrested William Kenny, a well known character for drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

—The annual strawberry and ice cream festival of the young people of the Holy Cross church is taking place this afternoon.

—The closing exercises of the North Plainfield public school will occur in the Warren Mission chapel one week from to-night.

—The committee of the council appointed to purchase five new horses for the use of the fire department, have imported a number of horses, but as yet have not purchased any.

—Another fraud on farmers! The scamps offer to buy anything the farmer has to sell, and then tender him a counterfeit bill of large denomination, receiving in change good money.

Pepper on Strawberries.

Strawberries are still in the market, and probably some of our readers will like to try the innovation suggested below by the Philadelphia Ledger:

"Pepper on your strawberries?" said a dusky waiter at Donner's Hotel yesterday.

"What?" exclaimed the astonished guest, trying to think what day it was, lest there might be some reason for playing a joke on him. "No, thank you. What do you mean by that?"

"Well, boss," said the other, "all gentlemen now take pepper on strawberries. Just try one."

The guest did as directed and to his surprise found it delightful and soon sprinkled the whole saucer with the condiment.

"Do I now call for salt, mustard and vinegar?" said the guest, "I want to be up to the times."

"No, sah, take 'em just that way, you'll find 'em elegant."

The guest investigated and soon found that a gentleman from the Orange Free State in South Africa was stoping at the hotel recently and insisted on treating his berries with pepper. This set the fashion which is rapidly coming into favor.

—The Dorcas class of the M. E. church is to entertain its friends in Reform Hall on Tuesday evening next.

Dr. Smith, a former pastor of the former Congregational church on Second street, Plainfield, now the Reformed church, died in Brooklyn, Wednesday morning, at the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. William Cameron, of pneumonia, in the seventieth year of his age. Deceased had been ill but a week. He leaves many relatives in Plainfield, some of whom, including Mr. and Mrs. Bushnell, of East Second street, were among those in years gone whom the beloved divine united in wedlock.

We are informed that Mr. Marion Ackerman, of the P. Bt. C., rode from the Crescent avenue church in this city, to the end of the county road in Westfield in seventeen minutes, and returned in eighteen minutes, making the whole distance in thirty-five minutes without a disconnect. JURORS OUT SINCE TUESDAY.

Little Prospect of an Agreement in the Barber's Case.

The trial of the Elizabeth barbers for violating the Blue Laws by shaving customers Sunday excites much interest in Elizabeth. Charles Miller's case, heard Thursday, is still in the hands of the jury. Miller was ably defended by Alderman Connolly, of Elizabeth, and Abner Kalisch, of Newark. Prosecutor Wilson, assisted by R. V. Lindabury, appeared for the State.

A large number of witnesses testified on both sides, but many of them were affected with sudden lapse of memory, not being able to recollect that they were shaved in Miller's place Sunday.

The case was given to the jury at 4 p. m. Tuesday, and last evening, after twenty-six hours' discussion, the jurors were still out and remained out until this morning. There is little prospect of an agreement. All sorts of rumors are afloat about how the jurors stand. The one most accepted is that there are four for conviction and eight for acquittal.

Miss Mabel Martindale, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Martindale, and Mr. William A. Lardge were married yesterday afternoon at four o'clock at the residence of the bride's parents, No. 20 Dare street, North Plainfield, by the Rev. A. Armstrong of South Plainfield, assisted by the Rev. Asa Reed Dills, pastor of the Park avenue Baptist church. Mr. Albert Wilcox was the best man and Miss Sheppard of Boston, Miss Lillian Reaner of Philipsburg and Miss Lizzie Runyon of this city acted as maids of honor. The happy couple left on a wedding tour.

S. W. Foss, in The Boston Globe, defends the use of the word "pants," meaning trousers, in the newspapers of that city and remarks: "Boston usage may be invariably trusted in all matters pertaining to the English language." We always knew there wasn't any conceit about Boston.

Before they let them out finally high school professors should ask their graduating pupils to define the words in this sentence from that classic of Mr. Edgar Saltus "A Transaction in Hearts": "Her skin was eburnean in its clarity, her eyes of lucine, and in her features something there was that suggested a pastel of a painter age."

President Elliott, of Harvard college, stand up in court! You called newspaper reporters "thieves, bummers and drunkards" at a banquet last spring. Didn't you? You advised your gentlemanly Harvard graduates not to enter newspaper offices and "mix them babies up" by associating with these scurvy wretches, didn't you? But do you think the low downcast newspaper man in America should have insulted and mutilated the venerable statue of John Harvard as some of your pet lambs have just been doing—yes, even painting the august countenance red? No, you don't. Newspaper people extend to the students of Harvard college their sincere commiseration on the kind of manners they are taught there. We weep to think of it.

A Girl Wrangler.

In Cambridge university, England, the student who passes best in mathematics at the annual examination is called the senior wrangler. It is the highest honor attainable. This year something like a cold wave was passed down the spinal column of conservative England by the announcement that this honor has been won by a girl, Philippa Fawcett. That is, she would have won it if she had been a young man. Cambridge will not confer collegiate titles on women, though it permits them to take its studies. The senior wrangler, a man, was announced, and after his name that of Miss Fawcett, with the statement that she passed the better examination. The feelings of that young man may be imagined.

The highest intellectual test known in university life women have now passed triumphantly. While six men failed in the Cambridge examination this year every girl who applied passed it, and two of them are in the list of wranglers. Since their first admission to the university course the success of the women students has been pronounced "phenomenal."

Miss Fawcett inherits her gifts from both sides. Her mother is Millicent Garrett Fawcett, who writes on political and social economy, and her father was Professor Fawcett, the blind postmaster general of England. The fair wrangler is said to be a very charming young woman.

The Children's Reading.

In a Massachusetts town not long since a daring burglary was committed by three boys. The leader of the three was the son of a wealthy and prominent citizen of the town. A boy who dressed handsomely and had every wish gratified as far as money could go. He was very well educated, too, so that neither poverty nor ignorance could be pleaded for him.

The only explanation seemed to be pure "cussedness," till it was remembered that he was infatuated with reading detective stories and tales of murder, robbery and Indians. A novel of this class was found in his pocket when he was arrested. Through his trial he was in no degree cast down, but deported himself as one who had done a heroic deed. The taste for cheap and deadly story papers and novels that had poisoned him.

It is a pity that his parents, when they gave him all the money he wanted, had not provided him with proper reading. Then he and the family name might have been saved. There is plenty of admirable literature for young people now printed. Never before since printing was invented has there been so much or so good. It comes both in periodicals and books. The author who can hit the popular vein in literature for children and young people is sure of fortune at once, and some of our most gifted writers are about to enter in juvenile work. There is literature of all kinds. The old fashioned goody good book, from which the dime novel was a reaction and a wholly natural one, has well nigh disappeared.

In its place are history for young people, tales of daring adventure, haunting stories and narratives of how famous people have won their way to fortune or distinction, and all these written in elegant English and with the healthiest moral tone. Under these circumstances the parents whose sons are led into crime from dime novels are as much to blame as the boys themselves. Anthony Comstock mentions vicious reading as one of the great crime breeders of the nation.

TARIFF BILL CHANGES.

Alterations Made by the Senate Finance Committee.

THE REDUCTIONS AND INCREASES.

Nearly All of the House Bill's International Revenue Features Have Been Stricken Out—Changes in the Metal and Wool Manufactures Schedules.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—The tariff bill was reported to the senate from the committee on finance. No report has been prepared by the committee and no estimate of the increase in the revenue resulting from the changes made. The understanding is that the bill will not be called up for discussion until about July 1. A member of the committee stated that the bill as reported, with the exception of the agricultural and wool and woolen schedules, was the same substantially as the finance committee bill of 1888. The tobacco schedule is unchanged. In the sugar schedule the bounty of 1 cents per pound is extended to maple sugar. No bounty is to be given for less than 500 pounds of sugar annually. A penalty of $5,000 fine, or less, or not more than five years' imprisonment, or both, is provided for fraudulent applications for bounty. A duty of 3-10 cent per pound is put on sugars between Nos. 13 and 16, Dutch standard (free in the house bill), and the duty above No. 16 is increased from 4-10 to 6-10 cent per pound.

The Chief Changes.

The chief changes are in the earthenware, metal, agricultural and sundries schedules and the schedule of flax, hemp and jute. The duty on boxed oranges, lemons and limes is doubled one half from the rate in the house bill, barley from 25 to 25 cents a bushel, barley malt from 45 cents to 40 cents, oatmeal one cent to each, rice flour from 1¼ cents a pound to ¾ cent, dried peas from 40 cents a bushel to 15 cents, chocolate from 3 cents to 2 cents a pound, lard from 3 cents to 1½ cents a pound, uncleaned rice from 1½ cents to 1 cent a pound. In the earthenware schedule glass and glassware (unenumerated) covered by paragraphs in the house bill, are consolidated into one paragraph, including small mirrors and lenses wholly or partly manufactured, and the duty on them is fixed at 45 per cent. ad valorem. This is in the nature of a large general reduction. Unpolished cylinder, crown and common and window glass is reduced 15 per cent per pound throughout. Decorated china is cut from 60 per cent. ad valorem to 55 per cent., plain china from 50 per cent. to 50 per cent., earthen, stone and crockery ware (unenumerated from 35 per cent. and 60 per cent. to 50 per cent.

The Wool and Woolen Schedule.

In the wool and woolen schedule the specific rate on the lowest class of cloths and yarns is raised "to correct acknowledged inequalities in the house bill," as a member of the finance committee phrases it. In the metal schedule iron or steel rails are reduced from $13.44 to $11.20 per ton, cold polished iron or steel from 1¼ cents per pound to 1 cent, copper in fine ores (containing more than 2 per cent. of copper) from 1½ cents to ¾ cent per pound, anvils from 2½ per pound to 2 cents, cast hollow ware from 3 cents per pound to 2 cents, gold watches and gold watch cases from 40 per cent. ad valorem to 25 per cent. The duty on Belgium revolvers, 35 and 40 per cent. ad valorem, is changed to a specific duty of 40 cents to 36 each and 35 per cent. ad valorem. Nickel and nickel alloy is reduced from 15 cents to 8 cents per pound.

Many Other Changes.

In the wood schedule sawed boards are reduced from $1.50 to $1 per 1,000 feet. In the flax, etc., schedule binding twine is raised from 1¼ to 1½ cents per pound, cotton bagging is reduced from 1 6-10 and 1 8-10 cents to 1 8-10 and 1 5-10 cents. Sisal and manilla yarn is divided into two classes, one valued at 5 cents per pound or less, on which the duty is 40 per cent. ad valorem. In the house bill both classes paid 30 per cent. Vegetable hair and ramie, dutiable at 84 per ton and 15 per cent. ad valotem, respectively, are put on the free list.

In the Sundries Schedule.

In the sundries schedule jewelry is reduced from 60 per cent. ad valorem to 40 per cent., dressed feathers and downs from 30 per cent. to 40 per cent., color prepared for basket makers from 40 per cent. to 25 per cent., clay pipes from 30 per cent. to 25 per cent., silk and alpaca umbrellas from 55 per cent. to 50 per cent., other umbrellas 45 per cent. to 40 per cent., cork bark 10 cents per pound to 5 cents, manufactured corks 15 cents per pound to 7½ cents. A minimum duty of 50 per cent. is provided for in the above paragraph. Paintings and statuary are taken from the free list and made dutiable at 20 per cent.

Pearl and shell buttons are fixed at 2 cents per line and 25 per cent, instead of 4 cents per line, and all other buttons (except agates) pay duty according to the material composing them.

Added to the Free List.

Among the articles added to the free list are natural mineral waters, blue clay for crucibles from $1.50 per ton, mica from 35 per cent. ad valorem, sponges from 20 per cent. ad valorem,

YALE DOWNS PRINCETON

Connecticut Wins the College Baseball Championship.

THE GAME WAS A VERY CLOSE ONE

Fine Baseman Dana, of the Princeton Nine, Flashily Plays the Game with a Broken Nose—Fair "Rooters" Enthusiastically "Root" for Their Choice.

BROOKLYN, June 19.—After an unsuccessful attempt on last Saturday to decide the college baseball championship the representatives of Yale and Princeton again met yesterday at Eastern park, Brooklyn, to settle the question of supremacy. The 5,000 or more people who attended on the occasion were even better game than the same teams played on the previous occasion. Stagg, the Yale favorite, was in the box, and Young twirled the ball for the Princetons. The team work of the New Haven boys was of a very high order and to be better than some of the professional clubs have given us recently. The rival college forces were gathered in different portions of the stand, and not an opportunity was lost to make themselves heard.

Dana's Nose Broken.

The incidents of the day began early. While the Princeton team had the diamond during the preliminary practice Woodcock, the substitute, knocked a hot grounder along the right field line. The ball took an ugly bound and struck Dana full in the face, breaking his nose and almost knocking him down. The injured organ bled profusely and the baseman's friends tried to prevail upon him to give up his position to play, but Dana would not be dissuaded and when the game was called in took his place as usual.

Cheers for Stagg.

Backed one minute of 4 o'clock when Umpire Quinn took his position behind the plate and called play. The Yalesians took the field and Durrell, the youngster of the Princeton team, faced Stagg's delivery. One, two, three was the order in which the boys from Princeton were disposed of. Stagg, who was the first of the New Haven men to come up to the plate, was warmly received, the Yale men giving him the quick cheer, and three times three with a vengeance.

Three Runs for Yale.

The third inning saw the first of the run getting. After two of the Yale men had been disposed of Stagg, who was next at the bat, knocked an easy grounder along and second base. Knickerbocker stopped it all right, but fumbled with it on the throw, and Stagg reached first in safety. Calhoun came along with a timely hit and McBride seconded him with a two bagger. Payne fumbled the ball on the throw and both Stagg and Calhoun came home. A single infield hit by Poole brought McBride home. Poole was caught between the bases and retired, which gave McBride a chance to cover the plate were deafening. The Princetons got a chance to score in the fourth inning. Watts, who had made a hit, was forced out by Knickerbocker and a double play disposed of them both. Dana made a hit, reaching second on Brokaw's single. McMillan's hit enabled the baseman to score, and Brokaw reached home on Poole's muff of a ball thrown by McBride. This error advanced the runners a base and with a nice infield hit by Young brought McBride around to third, but he died there on Brown's out by Stagg.

It Was a Beautiful Catch.

The fifth inning was replete with sharp batting and brilliant fielding. Murphy made a beautiful catch of a fly ball while on a dead run, which earned for him the applause of both friends and rivals. The batting effort of the fifth was the best being scored. Up to this time the batting work on both sides had been superb, not a base on balls had been given. Both Poole and Brokaw had rendered their respective pitchers excellent support. At the beginning of the sixth inning Knickerbocker reached first on a hit. Stagg presented Dana with his base. Two yellow legged Princeton were on the bags and no one out. The situation became critical. Brokaw knocked a timely hit to right center, but Knickerbocker, in his anxiety to score, was caught at the plate by Poole on a beautiful long throw in by McClintock. McMillan put up a beautiful fly to Murphy and Dana scored on the throw in. Young's hit to right field enabled Brokaw to score, and Brown was out from Stagg to McBride.

Princeton Gains the Lead.

The Princetons had gained the lead, and the Princeton hosts made the air ring with cheers and applause. Daltell was the hero of the sixth inning, for a three base hit by him brought Poole home and another run for Yale, and the score was again tied. In the eighth inning the Princetons had men on bases and scored. Jodd hit like a chance to score, but the three succeeding batsmen were disposed of, the last of them just as Brokaw was crossing the plate. All happened though: Calhoun was first at the bat. Young allowed him to go to first on called balls. He wasted no time there, however, but stole second on the first ball pitched. Young McBride raised the enthusiasm of the Yalesians by knocking the ball out for three bases, upon which Calhoun scored, and McBride followed him on a sacrifice by Poole.

The Fair "Rooters."

It looked very discouraging for the wearers of the yellow and black, but the old baseball adage, "No game is never lost until the last ball is pitched," loomed up before them. All styles of "rooting" were resorted to. One young lady whose eyes sparkled even with the boys from Jersey, closed her tiny hands together and squeezed like a "bleachery rooter." The lusty voices of the Princeton boys filled the air as they cheered their favorites. Durell and Payne went out and the chances were less than ever. Stagg then seemed to take pity upon his friends and sent Watts to first on balls. This didn't improve matters much, but still it gave them a fighting chance. However, Knickerbocker partly atoned for his poor work in the box by batting and knocking out a single. A timely two bagger by Dana brought Watts home, and the Princeton crowd cheered lustily.

But He Didn't.

Everything now depended upon Brokaw. He had hit the ball every time he faced Stagg during the game, and what was the matter with hitting it again? No one knew, but he didn't. Just one little single and he might have saved the day, but it didn't come. Instead of making it he knocked a slow grounder to second base and was disposed of at first.

The scene at the close of the game was simply indescribable. A veritable pandemonium prevailed and men and women both joined together in shouting Yale's praises. The score was as follow:

Princeton	0	0	0	2	0	0	0	0	1	—3
Yale	0	0	0	0	3	0	0	1	0	—4

Batteries: Young and Brokaw; Stagg and Poole.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS.

The Senate Refuses to Confirm Two Appointments.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—The senate in secret session refused to confirm the appointments of J. B. Foster, collector of internal revenue for North Carolina, and that of H. H. Schock to be postmaster at Salina Grove, Pa.

Mr. Morrill reported the tariff bill to the senate, and said it was not expected to be brought up for consideration before a week from Monday next. The river and harbor bill was also reported. Mr. Coy offered a resolution, which went over, instructing the sergeant-at-arms to make no change in his force until July 1, without consent of the senate. Mr. Evarts announced that the eulogies on the late Representative S. S. Cox were postponed until Thursday of next week. The conference report on the anti-trust bill was presented and agreed to.

The house bill extending the time of payment to purchasers of land of the Omaha Indians in Nebraska, was passed with amendments. The senate bill granting the Rio Grande Southern Railroad company right of way through the Fort Lewis military reservation in Colorado was passed. The senate then began consideration of the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill. An amendment offered by Mr. Mitchell to increase the salaries of twenty-six committee clerks from $1,500 to $1,800 gave rise to a long discussion, in the course of which Mr. Ingalls stated that the whole committee and clerical force of the senate required adjustment. There were at least twenty standing committees of the senate that were absolutely superfluous and unnecessary. It had been difficult to find names and to invent functions for them. The amendment was agreed to—yeas, 29; nays, 19.

A like amendment to pay clerks to senators $1,800 instead of $1,500 as recommended by the committee on appropriations, and of the per day, as recommended in the bill, was offered by Mr. Mitchell, and was agreed to—29 to 26. The senate disposed of seventy pages of the bill.

In the house the Indian appropriation bill was passed after appropriations of $12,200 for the Creek Indians, $48,800 for the Pottawatomie Indians and $27,000 for the Mexican Pottawatomie Indians had been stricken from the bill. During discussion of the bill the silver bill was brought over from the senate, and Mr. Bland moved that the committee rise to take some action on the silver bill. The vote by tellers resulted 94 to 105, Mutchler and Vance, of Pennsylvania, voting with the Republicans.

Cornell Defeats Bowdoin.

ITHACA, N. Y., June 19.—The Cornell-Bowdoin 'Varsity race was rowed at 7:15 last evening. Both boats got away together, but Bowdoin's short, quick stroke gave them a slight advantage for the first quarter of a mile. At the half mile stake Cornell had overtaken and passed the Pine Tree boys, and the visitors never got to the front again. Cornell pulled a long, clean stroke of 32 to the minute. She led in by the last quarter at a signal from Charlie Courtney, who followed the racers on a swift yacht. Bowdoin started and stroked to the minute, but faltered it to 46, but the Cornells had it all their own way and finished in 16 minutes 18 seconds, and over ten lengths ahead. The weather and water were perfect and 4,500 spectators were in attendance. The victors received the usual Ithaca ovation, after the race.

A SECOND TERM NOT DESIRED.

Rural Halstead's Paper Says the President Will Not Run Again.

BROOKLYN, June 19.—A special to The Standard-Union from Washington says: A piece of news that will be read with intense interest has just come from the White House. It is no less than a positive declaration by President Harrison that he will not be a candidate for renomination under any consideration or circumstance. The president it appears made up his mind some time ago not to seek the presidential nomination again. He did not think it necessary to make any announcement of the fact, although it was assumed by thousands of party men that it is the natural course of things he would be a candidate for a second term. Indeed, the announcement above referred to was made in the most casual way. The president was in conversation with an intimate friend at the White House and the talk turned on the silver bill. Incidentally national politics were mentioned, and the president expressed himself quite freely. He said, among other things, that he had made up his mind not to be a candidate for renomination, and that at the end of his present term he intended to settle in Indianapolis again and resume the practice of the law.

The president's declaration touching his relation to the next presidential nomination, made as it was without reserve, was soon in wide circulation, and afforded a topic for conversation that in interest subordinated all other topics for the time.

A PAUSE IN SILVER LEGISLATION.

Speaker Reed Refers the Bill Without Laying It Before the House.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—Speaker Reed referred the silver bill without laying it before the house. This news was a surprise to the silver men in the house today, and not a very agreeable one. An effort was made in the house yesterday to have the bill laid before the house, and if this had been done there is little doubt that it would have been put through in the form in which it came from the senate. The speaker, anticipating this difficulty whenever the bill should be laid before the house, went over the rules carefully, and, after consultation with the leaders on the Republican side and with Mr. Bland and the principal advocates of free coinage, determined that under the rules the bill need not be laid before the house at all, and that the reference of it was a formal matter which the clerk could attend to.

The bill will now be considered by the committee and returned to the house with recommendations as to the senate amendments. It will take its place at the foot of the calendar to be called up on motion at any time. Before it is considered it will be doubtless made the subject of caucus action.

The Men May Yet Be Alive.

DUNBAR, Pa., June 19.—The thirty-two miners are still entombed in the Hill Farm coal mine, and for some reason hope that they are alive seems to have been revived in the breasts of some of the workers about the pit. Thomas Lowden, mine boss of the Mount Braddock works, says there is a bare possibility of saving the men alive. It will take several days to reach the place where the men are supposed to be. A fan has been put in operation, and it is thought the fate of the men in the mine will be known today.

Sunset Shows Her Speed.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., June 19.—Robert Bonner and party visited the race track at Fairbanks this afternoon. A fast mare, Sunol, was driven out by Marvin and put through a speeding. The mare trotted a quarter in 37 1-4, with a 2:04 4-5 gait. This wonderful flight of speed greatly delighted Mr. Bonner, who has not seen his mare since he purchased her last fall in California. Mr. Bonner was present with Mr. Bonner were Hamilton Brisby, editor of The Turf, Field and Farm, and C. J. Hamlin, of Buffalo, owner of Belle Hamlin.

WOMAN AND HOME.

HOW THE GRADUATE OF TODAY DIFFERS FROM THE OLD STYLE.

Ways in Which Salt Can Be Utilized. The Ideal Sanitary House—How to Cool Water Without Ice—Edmund Russell on Dress—A Bedroom Fire.

A glance through some of the commencement programmes of Vassar college and Mount Holyoke seminary of twenty years ago is both amusing and significant. In half a score the essays ran upon such topics as these, which were offered at an uptown school a night or two ago: "The True Woman's Mission," "Dreams," "Ideals," "The True Home," "Patriotism," "Lessons from the Stars" and others of like sentimental nature. But bless the dear practical soul of the young woman of today! What has she to tell the world when she stands in her white gown on the graduation platform? Read the papers and you will see that she is interested in such topics as these, which were offered at an uptown school a night or two ago: "The Dangers of Wealth," a plea for a fuller business education for women; "The National Flower," "The Advantages of Novel Reading," "The Giant's Shoulders," which was a thoughtful consideration of the practical reforms of the present day.

The sentimental young woman, charming and sweet as she was, has given way to a creature no less charming and sweet because instead of having her eyes turned always up to the stars she has them coolly but helpfully fixed upon the affairs of men and nations, and none the less graceful and pleasing because in place of having a mind that yearns toward "the True Woman's Mission" she has definite and decided opinions upon the business rights of woman, or the possibilities of what in Boston is called "Christian Socialism."—New York Evening Sun.

Many Ways in Which to Utilize Salt.

If the feet are tired or painful after long standing great relief can be had by bathing them in salt water. A handful of salt to a gallon of water is the right proportion. Have the water as hot as can be comfortably borne. Immerse the feet and throw the water over the legs as far as the knees with the hand. When the water becomes too cool rub briskly with a flesh towel. This method, if used night and morning, will cure neuralgia of the feet. Carpets may be greatly brightened by first sprinkling thoroughly and then going over them with a clean cloth and clear salt and water. Use a cupful of coarse salt to a large basin of water.

Salt as a tooth powder is better than almost anything that can be bought. It keeps the teeth brilliantly white and the gums hard and rosy. If after having a tooth pulled the month is filled with salt and water it will allay the danger of having a fever sore. Use the same willow furniture use salt and water. Apply with a nail brush, scrub well and dry thoroughly. When broiling steak throw a little salt on the coals and the blaze from the dripping fat will not annoy. Damp salt will remove the discoloration of cups and saucers caused by too acid a custom washing. Brass work can be kept beautifully bright by occasionally rubbing with salt and vinegar. Wash the mica of the stove doors with salt and vinegar. Salt in whitewash will make it stick better.—Hall's Journal of Health.

The Ideal Sanitary House.

The picture of the ideal sanitary house is a pleasing one. The house will stand facing the sun, on a dry soil, in a wide, clean, and preferably residential street, over a deep, thoroughly ventilated and lighted cellar. The floor of the cellar will be concreted, the walls dry and cellar plastered and thickly whitewashed with lime every year, that the house may not act as a chimney to draw into its chambers poisonous gases from the earth. Doors and windows will be generous in size, so as to admit of plenty of air. The outside walls, if of wood or brick, will be kept thoroughly painted, and so shut out the air, but for the sake of dryness.

The inside walls will be plastered smooth, painted and varnished. Interior wood work, including floors, will be varnished. Movable rugs, which can be shaken daily in the open air—not at the doors or out of the windows—will cover the floors. White linen shades, which must be clean or they become unsightly, will protect the windows. The furniture will be plain, without upholstery. Mattresses will be covered with oiled silk; blankets, sheets and spreads—no comforts or quilts —will constitute the bedding. There will be as little plumbing as possible, and what there is will be exposed. The hot air furnace which heats the rooms will take its supply from above the top of the house instead of the cellar, and, we are told, the "spring" cleaning will be twice a year.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

To Have Cool Water Without Ice.

There is no reason why there should not be a thousand crude water jugs to every expensive one. The main outlay need be only a few cents, the rest a liberal expenditure of gumption applied to best principles. The people of Japan do not pay for their drinking water upon their thousands of good wells. The dwellers in the cities, when possessed of unlimited means, have porcelain filters and water coolers, through which they obtain pure, fresh water of a not unpleasant temperature. For the poorer classes Japan furnishes a filter which costs about six or seven cents. It is a bracket like arrangement containing sand and is most efficacious in cleansing the water of the dust which settles on Japan in clouds.

Early in the morning, before the sun is up, the Japanese go out and draw water for use during the day. This is filtered through the seven cent sand filter or through a twenty-five cent charcoal machine and then stowed away, closely covered in wooden or pottery jars, in the coolest place that can be found.—New York World.

Edmund Russell on Dress.

"In dress," said Mr. Russell in a lecture, "the development of personality is the true basis of the best expression. The grace of a costume depends mainly upon the proper poise of the wearer. The most artistic gown loses its effect when worn by a woman with a sunken chest, curved back and projecting elbows. Repose, dignity and grace of presence come only with the realization of Delsarte's idea of control in the head and shoulders and free movement. The becomingness of a gown lies in its relation to color and form to the wearer. There is no such thing as correspondence and contrast. Black, by contrast, gives an added whiteness to the complexion, but by correspondence it deepens every line on the face and increases the impress of age. These classes of color are always harmonious—for the street, shades on the tone of the hair; for the house, the tone of the eyes; for the evening, the tint of the complexion. The dress should always be subordinate to the wearer, the decoration to the thing decorated. Ornaments and jewels should harmonize with the dress, being the highest point in its decoration. In Greek and Egyptian vases the design is subservient to the shape of the object and follows it, instead of being, as to speak, 'stuck on,' as is often the case in Dresden and Sevres wares."—New York Star.

A Bedroom Fire.

The fire should be made up every night, at 9, or 10 o'clock, by placing four or five pounds of coal evenly on the top of it; over this should be sprinkled of very small coal or coal dust should be spread; and over the whole about four pounds of fine coal ash should be strewed, and patted flat with the shovel. Such a fire will burn all through the night without any attention, and in the morning the resulting cake of ash and coal dust can be broken up, producing a bright blaze. The addition of a little fresh coal, with a light strewing of ashes on the surface, will keep the fire in throughout the day. It is calculated that by this method fourteen pounds of house coal and seven pounds of coal dust or pit screening will keep a large bedroom at an average temperature of 58 degs. for twenty-four hours. Another advantage is that almost smokeless fires result, since the layer of superimposed ashes appears to filter the smoke which passes through it, retaining all the particles of solid carbon.—Cassell's Magazine.

The White House Linen.

There is still another room where one can get an idea of Mrs. Harrison's house keeping. It is the linen closet on the second floor. The linen was formerly kept in the damp closets in the steward's room, but Mrs. Harrison noticed one day that there could be a closet amply large made behind the elevator and she had the space walled in, shelves built, and now the White House has a matchless linen closet. It is under the care of Josephine, Mrs. Harrison's maid, and a whiff of it is like a breath from a meadow in May, for it is kept so clean and sweet. Everything is initialed with "U. S." in white linen, although one set of napkins has the initials in white, with a faint line of red. The napkins are all a yard square and of the finest damask. Mrs. Harrison has added to the stock since she has been in the White House, and there is over six of dinner linen that was used at the first state dinner that is as fine and soft as silk.—Washington Letter.

The Business Woman.

The typical business woman of today is an object of admiration to men and of wonder to members of her own sex. Men would not marry her, but they enjoy hobnobbing with her and drawing out her ideas, which are generally novel. If they are not always thought practical it is because other women, who have not been real business women, have created a lack of confidence in the mind of men.

The typical business woman likes men and talks to them like brothers. When she is talking, if she happens to be seated, she turns sideways on the chair, crosses her legs and places one arm akimbo on the back; when standing she crooks her elbows and, with a quick little movement of her thumbs, she places them in the imaginary armholes of her imaginary waistcoat. She is almost always good hearted, has ready sympathies and, if she acquires money, puts her hand in her pocket to help the needy with more than manly alacrity.—New York Press.

The Well Bred Girl.

A well bred girl thanks the man who gives her a seat in the street car, and does it in a quiet and not in an effusive way. She does not declare that she never rides in street cars. She does not accept a valuable present from any man unless she expects to marry him. She doesn't talk loud in public places. She doesn't shove or push to get the best seat, and she doesn't wonder why in the world people carry children in the cars, and why they persist in letting cry. She does not speak of her mother in a sarcastic way, and she shows her the loving deference that is her due.

She doesn't try to be a man, and she doesn't try to imitate him by adopting masculine dress and manners. She doesn't say she hates women, and she has some true good friends among them. She doesn't wear boots without their buttons on, or a frock that needs mending. She doesn't borrow the use of the cook and expects to make clothes for very little people who will be very dear to her.—Home Queen.

Thoughtfulness at Home.

There are thousands of little courtesies that should not be lost sight of in the ardent candor of marriage. The secret of a great social success is to wound no one's self love. The same secret will go far toward making marriage happy. Many a woman who would not be guilty of an unpardonable rudeness not to listen with an air of interest to what a mere acquaintance is saying will have no least scruple in showing her husband that his talk wearies her. Of course the best thing is when talk does not weary—when two people are so united in taste that whatever interests the one is of equal interest to the other, but this cannot always be the case, even in a happy marriage; and is it not better worth while to take the small trouble of paying courteous attention to the one who depends on you for his daily happiness than even to bestow this courtesy on the acquaintances whom it is a transient pleasure to please?—Journal of Health.

Memories in an Old Dress Even.

Who has not felt a rush of recollection at the sight of a cast off garment worn once in a life's crisis? I know a woman, rather unromantic and unsentimental the world says, who, deep down in an old trunk, keeps a dingy, girlish gown of cheap gray serge and cotton velvet. She wouldn't wear such a common thing wodays, and she couldn't get into it if she would. What, then, does she keep it for? Her stylish daughters certainly would never don it.

No; but sometimes she takes that ugly little dress out, and with it the memory of a tall, blue eyed, golden haired lover, whose encircling right arm has encircled its dingy waist.

Her husband is short and swarthy. What of that? This is only a memory, and there is no sin in the ghost of recollection! —Chicago Mail.

Mr. Mantoo in a Temper.

There was a lively time at Tangier recently on the visit of Caroline, the Dowager Duchess of Montrose—known in the sporting world as "Carry"—and her young husband and his brother. Youthfully attired in a natty sailor jacket, with the "Montrose" crest worked by a juvenile small white sailor hat and a tiny white veil, her grace sallied about the narrow streets of Tangier or rode forth on a pack on a mule. This last exploit, though, occasionally resulted in a failure, as the mules, being an animal with opinions of his own as to description and weight of his loads, more than once decided that one of sixteen stone was more than he would himself care to convey. Hence a slip off, while yet there was time, was about the only course left to her graceful grace, and to proceed on her own legs, the mule being immovable as a rock on his. High and dire was the fair burden's wrath, with language not purely classical vigorously poured out on the luckless attendant Moors and the valet of her lord, who, wearing the plaid of the clan of his mistress, always followed in the wake of these excursions on foot.—New York Telegram.

Ways to Loosen Glass Stoppers.

Hold the bottle or decanter firmly in the hand or between the knees and gently tap the stopper on alternate sides, using for the purpose a small piece of wood, and directing the strokes upward.

Plunge the neck of the vessel into hot water, taking care that the water is not hot enough to split the glass. If after some immersion the stopper is still fixed recur to the first process.

Tie a piece of list round the neck of the vessel, which must be held fast while two persons draw the list backward and forward. This will warm the glass and often enable the hand to turn the stopper.

Warm the neck of the vessel before the fire, and when it is nearly hot the stopper can generally be moved.—New York Ledger.

A Few Well Known Names.

A stew usually has vegetables and dumplings cooked with the meat. A haricot of mutton or any other meat is a stew with the meat and vegetables cut fine—the name of a haricot bean. A ragout is a stew highly flavored with wine. A salmi is a stew of game. A chowder is a stew of fish. A fricassee is a form of stewing where the meat is fried or browned in fat, either before or after stewing, and is usually served without vegetables. A pot pie is a stew with the dough put on as a crust. Braising is a form of stewing usually done in a covered pan in the oven. It gives a richer, stronger flavor than that obtained by stewing over the fire.—Exchange.

A Girl's Best Charm.

My dear girls, keep yourselves looking as sweet and dainty as possible. Never undervalue the charm of an agreeable appearance. It is the most delightful letter of introduction that can be given to a stranger, and there is no reason in the world why every woman should not be pleasant to look upon. A famous woman once said: "There are no ugly women; there are only women who do not understand how to make themselves beautiful." This is absolutely true. So the right thing for you to do is to sit down, think it over and make yourself the charming example that points the moral of this.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Women at the Dentist's.

Women are not the most courageous when done before marriage. Men do not give them the credit they deserve in this. If women were as selfish as they are charged they would wait until they were married and have the husbands pay the bills. When a young woman comes in here I know she is going to marry. I have seldom failed in my guess. A young woman here the other day who was a $75 customer. I knew her well, and when the work was over I asked:

"Then is the wedding to take place?"

She blushed and replied, "Who told you anything about it?"—Interview in Chicago Tribune.

The New Way of Serving Tea.

At ultra tea parties tea is brewed individually in each cup, but the latest whim is to have the tea apportioned in little fancy tarletan bags, just large enough to hold the leaves and not in an effusive way. She does not declare that she never rides in street cars. She does not accept a valuable present from any man unless she expects to marry him. She doesn't talk loud in public places. She doesn't shove or push to get the best seat, and she doesn't wonder why in the world people carry children in the cars, and why they persist in letting cry. She does not speak of her mother in a sarcastic way, and she shows her the loving deference that is her due.

She doesn't try to be a man, and she doesn't try to imitate him by adopting masculine dress and manners. She doesn't say she hates women, and she has some true good friends among them. She doesn't wear boots without their buttons on, or a frock that needs mending. She doesn't borrow the use of the cook and expects to make clothes for very little people who will be very dear to her.—Home Queen.

Thoughtfulness at Home.

There are thousands of little courtesies that should not be lost sight of in the ardent candor of marriage. The secret of a great social success is to wound no one's self love. The same secret will go far toward making marriage happy. Many a woman who would not be guilty of an unpardonable rudeness not to listen with an air of interest to what a mere acquaintance is saying will have no least scruple in showing her husband that his talk wearies her. Of course the best thing is when talk does not weary—when two people are so united in taste that whatever interests the one is of equal interest to the other, but this cannot always be the case, even in a happy marriage; and is it not better worth while to take the small trouble of paying courteous attention to the one who depends on you for his daily happiness than even to bestow this courtesy on the acquaintances whom it is a transient pleasure to please?—Journal of Health.

Memories in an Old Dress Even.

Who has not felt a rush of recollection at the sight of a cast off garment worn once in a life's crisis? I know a woman, rather unromantic and unsentimental the world says, who, deep down in an old trunk, keeps a dingy, girlish gown of cheap gray serge and cotton velvet. She wouldn't wear such a common thing wodays, and she couldn't get into it if she would. What, then, does she keep it for? Her stylish daughters certainly would never don it.

No; but sometimes she takes that ugly little dress out, and with it the memory of a tall, blue eyed, golden haired lover, whose encircling right arm has encircled its dingy waist.

Her husband is short and swarthy. What of that? This is only a memory, and there is no sin in the ghost of recollection! —Chicago Mail.

Mr. Mantoo in a Temper.

There was a lively time at Tangier recently on the visit of Caroline, the Dowager Duchess of Montrose—known in the sporting world as "Carry"—and her young husband and his brother. Youthfully attired in a natty sailor jacket, with the "Montrose" crest worked by a juvenile small white sailor hat and a tiny white veil, her grace sallied about the narrow streets of Tangier or rode forth on a pack on a mule. This last exploit, though, occasionally resulted in a failure, as the mules, being an animal with opinions of his own as to description and weight of his loads, more than once decided that one of sixteen stone was more than he would him-

Fickled Apples.

Russet apples make a very good pickle. Take one dozen of the apples; stick about three cloves in each; add an ounce of mace and an ounce of ginger—the preserved or candied ginger is the best that can be obtained—a little season of lemon and three pounds of sugar to each quart of vinegar. Boil the apples in this syrup, which should just cover them, till tender.—New York Tribune.

Women in England.

There are nearly a million more women than men in Great Britain, but the disproportion between what are called ladies and gentlemen is much greater. If we took the families of the upper ten thousand merely in its literal signification we should find on analysis that it included 6,000 of the better sex to 4,000 males.—Chatter.

A woman of St. Paul, Minn., the mother of three young children, after trying about a dozen girls in a very unsatisfactory results, advertised for a boy to take care of her children. She obtained one, and he possessed more good qualities than all the same girls combined, giving perfect satisfaction.

Instructions regarding new born infants: If the child's eyelids become red and swollen or begin to run matter within a few days after birth, let a doctor know, without a day's delay to a doctor. The disease is very dangerous and if not at once treated may destroy the sight of both eyes.

A queer old woman in Albany, N. Y., recently changed her mind about making a bank deposit, and the teller wouldn't promise to return to her the identical coins which she intended depositing. She had made a list of the dates so that there "would be no mistake."

Shetland shawls require in washing them the same care that you would exercise in doing up fine lace. Rinse your shawl in a lather of boiled soap and gently strip through your hands. When clean plunge into clear water and dry by pinning on a sheet.

Carry out faithfully and exactly the orders given by the medical man. It is disheartening for him to give all his thought and skill to a case and yet have no good results, simply because his instructions are neglected.

WHAT SHALL WE WEAR?

NEW AND CORRECT STYLES FOR THE SUMMER SEASON.

A French Tea Gown That Combines Grace, Style and Comfort Illustrated and Described—It Is of Peach Colored Chine Crepe and Silk.

The Parisian made tea gown here illustrated can hardly fail to please, it is so graceful, so suggestive of comfort during warm summer days.

A FRENCH TEA GOWN.

The princess blouse and loose sleeves are in peach colored China crepe. The jacket, with under part of sleeves and scarf belt, is in peach colored silk, figured with fern leaves in their natural tints. There is a frilling of lace around the neck, the jacket and sash. The bow at the throat is in plaited ruches. The overskirt of China crepe, which is accordeon plaited, is made over soft peach hued silk. This gown would also be exceedingly attractive made in soft white silk in the new mixtures, with passementerie to correspond.

The New Parasols.

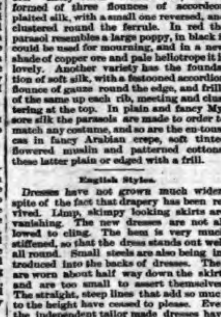
Many of the new parasols are in reality things of beauty. "Rajah" is the name given to one style. This is composed of kilted Indian gauze or soft silk, with a double frill reaching up at distances around the edge and a rosette clustering around the ferrule. In white it is delightfully cool and dainty, but it is to be seen in all colors. "Lady Lind" comes next, and is formed of three flounces of accordeon plaited silk, with a small one reversed, and clustered round the ferrule. In red the parasol resembles a large poppy, in black it could be used for mourning, and in a new shade of copper ore and pale hellotrope it is lovely. Another variety has the foundation of soft silk, with a festooned accordion flounce of gauze round the edge, and frills of the same up each rib, meeting and clustering at the top. The plain and fancy Mysore silk the parasols are made to order to match any costume, and so are the en-tout-cas in fancy Arabian crepe, soft tinted flowered muslin and patterned cottons; these latter plain or edged with a frill.

English Styles.

Dresses have not grown much wider, spite of the fact that drapery has been revived. Limp, skimpy looking skirts are vastly in vogue. The new gown is not allowed to cling. The hem is very much stiffened, so that the dress stands out well all round. Small steels are also being introduced into the backs of dresses. They are worn about half way down the skirt, and are too small to assert themselves. The straight, deep flounce is not quite over, but the straight have ceased to please. Even the independent tailor made dresses have altered their tone considerably lately. They are being draped about the hips, and in straight lines from waist to hem.—Pall Mall Budget.

Novel Jewelry.

In the cut here presented is shown something quite new in way of bracelet, necklace and watch chains. The novelty consists in the succession of gold balls in groups of four, and so placed that the article these form is pliable, medium in weight and without any chain running through to break.



NEW BRACELET, NECKLACE AND WATCH CHAIN.

To this novel and attractive style has been given, very appropriately, the name "La Quatrefoil." It appears in both polished and Roman finished gold, and is a showy ornament at a reasonable cost. Thanks are due to The Jewelers' Circular for the very comprehensive cut which illustrates the article, a vest chain and a lady's queen chain.

Fashion Echoes.

Gauze fans, hand painted and most delicately mounted, are seasonable luxuries.

Silk bags lined with satin are sold with some of the fans. These bags are almost as long as the fans, and hang from the arm by silken cords.

With other heart shaped jewelry are watches.

A queen chain has as a pendant a gold bead, lined with eggs, the latter being stimulated by pearls.

Silk petticoats are richly trimmed with lace. One of gray and white brocade, made with long tabs at the hem falling over lace flounces and terra cotta silk, seemed to have flounces round the feet swathed in lace.

The seamless bodice hooks under the left arm and is finished at the waist with a shaped band covered with embroidery. There are large leg-of-mutton sleeves.

CLOSING EXERCISES.

Several Persons Graduated from the Dunellen School.

Our enterprising village was all agog last evening, the occasion being the public school exercises of the pupils of the schools. It did great credit to both teachers and pupils, as each one stepped to the front to do his or her best, and receive the applause and laurels, so justly due them. The opening speech by Master Willis Carpenter was well rendered. Miss Agnes did herself great credit, as also did Miss Runyon, Miss May Gue with others who graduated and threw the gauntlet down on the shrine of learning, and boast to-day of being trained as far as our schools are concerned, and the little now-and-then we say of them? Why, lots. What patience the teachers must have exercised in training them, the little wee girls and boys. The frog concert, rendered so well by the little boys, and the song of the restless little girls so well done, during Miss Laing's, their teacher, so much credit. She certainly is the right teacher in the right place.

Mr. Willis of New Brunswick made a very witty address, in which he admitted the ideal man or woman was not to be found, and gave that poser, worn-out old question, "the mother-in-law," a dab. I presume he has one; if not, it is time he had. He made one. Rev. Mr. Livermore made a short address which was as good as words from his mouth are, always sparkling and well to the point. In all it was a very pleasant affair, doing great credit to the teachers and principal of the public school of Dunellen.

One great need was very apparent, a public Hall. The church was full to overflowing and needed a Samson just to push the walls to make more room, but poor Samson has gone with the mossback Philistines, we have none. Let us have a hall to take in our fast-growing populace, and do let us have more light—in our streets—on the subject. Let us no longer prowl in the dark, but march on with the age in which we live, and Plainfield please. Now I'll throw a few of your electric wires to plant for us a little more light, so we can see the spots at a distance. NERO.

Sixty Days in Jail.

As reported in THE NEWS of yesterday Policeman Lynch arrested William Kenny, a well-known character of this city, for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. At the time of his arrest Kenny had a half pint bottle of whisky in his pocket and he pleaded with the officer to let him hide it so that he could have it when he was released. Mr. Lynch, however, would not listen to the fellow's pleas, and Kenny watched his chance to hide the vile stuff. When near the station house he threw the bottle in a mound of grass on the railroad bank. But he will not find it there when he is released for the officer saw the spot where the bottle landed and after he had locked Kenny up he smashed the bottle with his club.

Kenny was arraigned before City Judge Coddington later in the day and the Judge sent him to Elizabeth to ruminate for sixty days.

Both Were Acquitted.

Charles Ramsberger, a miller, and Bernie Egel, a driver, were tried for larceny in the Union county court yesterday. The men were employed in Cadmus's mills, this city, and were accused of taking out of the mill four and grain not ordered and selling the same. The defense claimed that when extra sacks were taken out they had been previously ordered, but owing to the bad roads the entire quantity ordered could not be delivered at one visit owing had to be sent on. When the driver was discovered he had on his load some of these extra bags. Numerous witnesses testified that this was the driver's habit, and also that he bore a high reputation for honesty. Ramsberger was charged with conferring with the driver to defraud their employer. The jury only took a few moments to acquit both men.

Sorry His Bid Was So Low.

The Union County Board of Freeholders met at Elizabeth, yesterday, and awarded the contract for the macadamizing of Westfield avenue in that borough. This is the last one of the roads which was adopted by the Freeholders as a county road. There was only one bid, that of Edward N. Lynch, of Elizabeth, who offered to do the job for 83 cents a square yard. Contractor Lynch was much surprised to find that his was the only bid and was evidently sorry that he had made his estimate so low. The work will be begun immediately.

Judgment for the Plaintiffs.

The case of Miller Bros. vs. Tunis J. Carey, in contract, came up for trial before Justice Bush yesterday. Mr. Carey was unable to be present, and his counsel Mr. W. A. Coddington, asked for an adjournment until Mr. Carey could be present. The counsel for the Miller Bros. objected, and his objection was sustained by Justice Bush, who rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs. Mr. Coddington filed an appeal bond. Mr. Carey was necessarily out of town as a witness in another case.

The Editors' Tour.

The New Jersey editors started on their their thirty-fourth annual tour yesterday, leaving New York at six p. m., by the North River steamer for Albany; thence to Montreal, do Quebec, to White Mountains, to Boston, and thence home, arriving in New York one week from Saturday, June 28th.

COUNTY ASSESSORS MEET.

Elizabeth's Representatives Ask for an Equalization.

Wednesday afternoon all the tax assessors in this county, including Commissioners Carson, Garber and Bickel and the field men of Elizabeth met in conference with Mayor Rankin, Comptroller Carlson and Mr. B. H. Campbell, chairman of the finance committee, in the jury room.

The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the county valuations. It was asked by the representatives of Elizabeth that an investigation be made with a view to an equalization of assessments. It was shown that Elizabeth is assessed about 60 per cent. of the entire county valuation, and that the property in the city was assessed up to the top notch, while in Plainfield, Summit and other portions of the county the valuations are alleged to be extremely low in many instances. It was a general opinion that Elizabeth ought not to be assessed over 50 per cent. of the county's valuations. Elizabeth has more than fifty per cent. of the population, and wealth in proportion, and thinks Plainfield and suburbs should be saddled with 70 per cent. of the burden. Absurd.

In view of the altered improvements by the county roads, the benefits of which go largely to the townships, it was thought that there should be an increase of the valuations outside of the city. Elizabeth will have less than a mile of these county roads within its limits, Plainfield has less.

It was suggested that a committee be appointed from the county board to take the books and go over the entire county and make comparisons of the valuations in the various sections.

This proposition was acceded to and a committee was appointed. The committee will begin the work of investigation on Monday next.

Base Ball Notes.

The Unknowns and Centrals, two colored clubs of this city, played a fine game of base ball on the Spooner avenue grounds yesterday afternoon. The game was full of interest and was won by the Unknowns by a score of 18 to 12.

The Metropolitans, the nine which is to play a game of ball with the Crescent to-morrow afternoon, on Wednesday went to New Brunswick and defeated the Unions of that place. The teams for to-morrows game will be made up as follows:

Crescents—Martin, s.c.; Lafferty, 2b.; Wiggand, 1b.; Jones, c.; Gillis, c.f.; Melndoe, l.f.; Gregg, p.; Lee, r.f.; Walker, p.

Metropolitans—Hankinson, 1b; King, s.s.; Delmore, 3b; A. Smith, 2b; H. Smith, c; Lynch, p.; Wade, c.f.; McFarland, l.f.; Hoey, r.f.; Beadle, extra.

Reform School Drill.

The annual drill of the boys of the Jamesburgh reformed school was held on Friday. Governor Abbett and the members of the Legislative Committee were present, besides the managers.

—The appeal case of Tunis J. Carey from the decision of the Police Board of the Council, was to have been argued before the Supreme Court at Trenton to-day, but owing to the fact that the testimony is not all in, arguments in the case will have to be postponed until some future date.

—Messrs. Marsh & Ayres, have just finished repainting Mr. George Thatcher's house on West Seventh street. The artistic touches of the painter's brush has greatly improved the appearance of the building and Mr. and Mrs. Thatcher are very much pleased with the work. The former said it was the first first-class job of that kind that he had had done in Plainfield.

—It cannot be said it was not some dishonorable person who prematurely revealed what some of the Soldiers Monument Committee desired private for the time being, but that it was done by a very honorable gentleman in an effort to obligingly comply with a request of a newspaper reporter, and doubtless unaware of any objection. THE NEWS had previously given a description of the proposed monument, but went no further in statements than the expression of a member of the committee for reasons already stated.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL NEEDS.

Ministers' Discussions at the Convention in Asbury Park.

About two hundred delegates attended the closing session of the Mid-Summer Convention of the New Jersey Sunday-School Association at Asbury Park yesterday. In the morning an open discussion on the topic, "Our Vineyard—its Soil, Seed and Fruit," was conducted by John Y. Foster, of Newark. The report of Bruce Leslie's publications. An address on "Systematic Giving in our Sunday-School" was made by Rev. H. T. Ewan, of the Fourteenth Street Presbyterian church, New York. In the afternoon an address on "Primary Work" was made by G. H. Garfield of Jersey City. Rev. Dr. C. Walpole Warren, of the Church of the Holy Trinity, of New York, spoke on the subject, "The Wise Teacher," his address being supplemented by one on "Teacher Training" by Rev. Dr. J. A. Braden, Superintendent of Presbyterian Sunday-school Work in Philadelphia. The concluding address was made last evening on the subject, "How to Reach the Hearts of My Class," by Rev. Dr. A. T. Kittredge, of the Madison Avenue Reformed church, New York.

Among well known delegates in attendance were S. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Wescott, of Passaic, N. J.; W. H. Miller, Carlton M. Williams, Wilmington E. Loseke, Mr. and Mrs. George F. Taylor, of Camden; J. P. Brokaw, of Freehold; Mr. and Mrs. N. T. Shaw, of South Orange; Rev. Charles B. Mitchell and M. M. Dunham, of Plainfield.

The Venino Recital.

Crescent avenue chapel was comfortably filled last evening by the friends of the pupils of Mr. Venino. A pleasing programme was well rendered, and each number showed careful and thorough training. The programme was as follows:

Wetumpka Lodge Centennial.

Wetumpka Lodge celebrated its centennial membership last evening when Mr. C. J. Peytel, P. D., presented a new frame for the charter, and Mr. F. D. Hoffner, P. D., covered it with a shield, spread eagle and silk flags, the lodge being the banner lodge in the State, forty-nine having been initiated in the past six months. Membership to-day is 162 strong, and eighteen holding over. Short talks were made, and resolutions passed last evening. The Grand Officers reported that such work was never accomplished in any lodge in the United States before.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Percy Stewart of West Seventh street will graduate from Yale college this year.

Mrs. Henry Van Middlesworth of Elmwood place is visiting friends in Jersey City.

Mr. W. E. Brock of Mountain avenue, North Plainfield, has been granted a patent on a velocipede; Mr. Walter Scott, on a dough kneading machine and Mr. George H. Babcock ten patents on a series of reeling tiles.

Miss Daisy Stoddard, the twelve-year-old girl, ills trated and described in last evening's News, Prof. Cornwall says, has received upwards of $3,000 from her recitations in Nebraska, since April, $2,000 of which has gone into Nebraska amendment work.

When at five o'clock yesterday afternoon the chaquies over the remains of the late Miss Carrie Kirkner were begun in the Congregational church every pew was filled with sympathizing friends, the parents of the dead girl, her brother, her sister, and kindred in deep mourning being in the seats near the pulpit, which was occupied by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Goodrich, who conducted the services, and by Rev. Mr. A. H. Lewis, the pastor of the Seventh Day Baptist church, an intimate friend of the family, who assisted, the pulpit being beautifully decorated with floral tributes from loving friends, and the church generally bright with sunshine. A casket at the right of the pulpit, containing Miss Kirkner's remains and remaining sealed, bore mute testimony to the sad occasion of the assembling. The choir was composed of Mrs. J. E. Myers, soprano; Miss Alice Holmes, alto; Mr. Elmer Runyon, tenor; and Mr. Alfred Bedell, bass; organist; and cornetist, as was also the music, and the singing was very impressive, from the opening hymn with which the exercises began to the close. Dr. Lewis led in prayer, and Mr. Goodrich read a scriptural selection and preached. Rev. Lewis following with a brief personal reminiscence of a chance meeting in London, with a party of Plainfield ladies, among whom was deceased. Both divines paid fitting tributes to her excellent character, and told how deeply her loss was felt by all who knew her. When the congregation was dismissed with the benediction, some lingered near the casket. On the plate the name of deceased was inscribed, together with her age, 27 years, her place of birth, Plainfield, N. J., and death, December 4, Germany. The body was removed on the 9.32 train this morning to Flushing, L. I., for interment. And this is the sad ending of trip abroad, begun a year ago, on which this beloved young lady with friends started full of enjoyment and bright anticipations, only to be taken ill and die in the midst of the scenes which was the object of the visit. Verily, the reaper Death, with his sickle keen, "reaps the hearded grain as a breath, and the flowers that grow between."

THE NEBRASKA MEETING LAST NIGHT

Interesting Address at Reform Hall by Prominent Speakers.

The meeting held at Reform Hall last evening, at which Prof. Cornwall and several of the clergy of our city, including Dr. Lewis, Dr. Honeyman, Dr. Yerkes and Dean Rodman, who made addresses, was well attended, and a large collection was taken in behalf of Omaha to aid that city in carrying on the work against the two hundred and seventy high licensed palace saloons of $100 each.

Judge Harper presided, and Rev. Dr. Honeyman took charge of the devotional exercises. When Prof. Cornwall was introduced, he opened his remarks by stating that he had been told to shut the truth respecting Omaha, but that he could not do, as the facts were too awful. He had originally favored high license some ten years ago, but he had seen the evil in its workings and he was now working all his power to build up a public opinion against that fallacy. The battle in Omaha was his topic. In Omaha they are contending with all the liquor horrors of the earth. There is more revelry and debauchery from midnight on than in any city in the United States. He had come from Iowa and had visited twelve county seats and found there was not a prisoner in one of the jails, more than 60 of there county jails are empty. (Great applause.) If we fail to take Nebraska, we may lose the two Dakotas. Friends: We can take Omaha and Nebraska. Let us do it. He spoke for a half hour very eloquently, and received much applause throughout his address.

Dr. Lewis was introduced, and was warmed up the subject having seen with his own eyes what evils exist in the saloon in the western country. He took up the question of the ineffectual workings of high license as a remedy and was very pronounced in his opinion against trying to make a wrong right by giving it a legal protection and expressed the sentiment that the only remedy is total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the nation.

Dr. Yerkes was the next speaker. He was glad to take part in the meeting and expressed himself to the effect that total abolition of the traffic will be the only cure. We must steer clear for the point of Prohibition. If any one could of see him how high license could cure the evil, he would go for it in that way. He did not discuss the method of reaching prohibition, but suggested we should be able in time to find a common platform to reach the end. We must make public opinion, so far we can make it, and then utilize it. The unyielding platform to stand on is a warefare against the saloon. Victory in Nebraska, will buttress public opinion elsewhere.

Dean Rodman was urgent in his appeal for substantial aid for the Omaha warfare and spoke feelingly to the audience for such aid.

Dr. Honeyman made an effective address in behalf of the cause of the Prohibition amendment in Nebraska, and read a letter from Dr. Carroll of North Plainfield in substance as follows:

He was sorry he could not be present and was very anxious that the State of Nebraska shall become Prohibition ground. It would not only be a great gain for Nebraska herself, but for her Prohibition neighbors. He has no fear of success if the people would assiduously there and disheaten the friends of the saloon. He desired help for Nebraska that she may help us when the day for Prohibition in New Jersey comes. He begged to enclose a contribution for the Nebraska campaign.

COULD NOT AGREE.

The Jury in Barber Miller's Case Out Forty-five Hours.

The jury that has been for two days trying to reach a verdict in the case of Charles Miller, the Elizabeth barber, indicted for violating the ancient Jersey blue laws because he shaved customers Sunday, came into court yesterday and reported it was impossible to agree. The jury had been out forty-five hours, and the final ballot stood eight for conviction and four for acquittal. Judge McCormick discharged the jury.

It is not known whether the State will try the case over again. There is another barber, Jacob Meyer, to be tried.

The disagreement seemed to give satisfaction to the public. It is regarded as farcical to make a terrible example of inoffensive barbers while saloon keepers conduct their business Sunday without fear of interference.

JUNIOR O. U. A. M.

The National Council in Session in Chicago.

The National Council of the Junior Order of American Mechanics is now in session in Chicago, with 120 delegates present. Thursday being the 115th anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill, the delegates paraded and presented the city with a handsome United States flag, the presentation speech being made by Mr. H. D. Darby, of Philadelphia, and the flag was received by Major Cozier.

In the evening a public meeting was held in the Auditorium, which was addressed by several prominent members of the order.

The delegates are evidently being well received by the Chicago people.

Blaine Points the Way.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—James G. Blaine has conveyed to the Western farmer more common sense in a paragraph on the long reported New Trade than the Mugwump Free Trade advocates could convey in an article ten columns long. Here is what he says to the Millers' Association, now sitting in Minneapolis:

"It is within the power of Western farmers, by encouraging a policy of reciprocity, to secure in exchange for the repeal of this duty, the free admission of their forest and mill products into the markets of forty millions of people, including Cuba. In my opinion that is the most profitable policy of the Western farmer. Free sugar in the United States should be accompanied by free breadstuffs and provisions in Spanish America.

JAMES G. BLAINE."

A DANGEROUS WOMAN.

Mrs. Sullivan While Drunk Threatens to Shoot Her Neighbors.

Yesterday afternoon Mrs. Jas. Sullivan of South Second street filled up with Jersey lightning and went on the "war path." Policeman Laine arrested her and locked her up in the station house. Later in the evening City Judge Codington released her on her own recognizance to appear for trial this morning at ten o'clock.

When she returned to her home, it is said, that she again commenced drinking vile liquor and finally became boisterously drunk. She then began abusing her neighbors and friends in a terrible manner and wound up by procuring a revolver and threatening to shoot everybody who happened to pass her domicile. A policeman was summoned and succeeded in taking the weapon away from her before she executed her threats. The affair caused considerable excitement in the neighborhood and the women and children were afraid to venture from their houses.

Mrs. Sullivan is said to be a hard working woman, who, when, sober, is very peaceable.

This morning she was arraigned before City Judge Codington.

She plead guilty to the charge and was given the choice of either paying a five dollar fine or spending ten days in the county jail.

Thrown From a Wagon.

At about half-past twelve o'clock this afternoon the little three-year-old son of Mr. George Fuller, the butcher, was thrown out of a wagon on Somerset street. The little boy was standing in the wagon when the horse suddenly started throwing him out backwards. His head struck the hard macadamized road bed, but it is thought that he escaped serious injury.

Commencement.

Perhaps a hundred thousand boys and girls will be graduated from school this June and put out upon the mercies of the cold world. They will all believe they are going to conquer the universe in some way. The pupils in the lower classes of their schools will look up to them as to superior beings, and with the music, the bouquets, the sweet incense of applause and the new clothes the graduates themselves cannot be blamed for thinking they are something uncommon.

They will learn better fast enough when they come to rub against the world. They will find that nobody is anybody very much, and that the world values people only in proportion as they can help it in some way.

Most of these young people, if they are of the right sort, trust mankind. They believe there is such a thing as disinterested friendship, as true love and the realization of high generous hopes. And so there is. Only they will be told first thing on their entrance in the world that there are none of these things; that human life is nothing but a selfish, savage scramble, every man for himself and the devil for them all.

Boys and girls, don't believe it. Keep your own hearts always warm, generous and true. See to that and you will be sure to meet others like you. It is the nearest approach to certainty.

Then again, do not give up your lofty dreams. You can achieve them, though it is infinitely harder than you now think. You must knock long and desperately at the doors till you are almost exhausted, but they will open to you. Know that for certain. Success is dead sure to come to the one who works hard enough and waits long enough. It generally does not come in the way he expects, hardly ever; in fact, that only proves that his way was the wrong way. For this reason it is not well to be too set on your own particular road up the hill. Keep your minds always open or receptive, so as to recognize the best when it does come. So shall you keep your lives high and pure, so shall you not crystallize into hard, selfish, mean, stingy, materialistic old fogies.

This is our baccalaureate sermon.

A Socialistic Experiment.

William Morris, the poet, and some of his British Socialistic confreres are making curious ventures in the line of establishing equality among men. These advanced thinkers are inviting workingmen to spend evenings at fashionable and wealthy London clubs.

The idea in this is to "introduce refinements among workingmen," it is said. They desire the British workingman to see how those who consider themselves his betters live and act, and especially how they eat, hoping thereby that he will go and do likewise. "I'll do anything in reason, but don't ask me to eat pie with a fork," said the American petroleum prince to his daughters, and this may possibly be the judgment of the British workingman when asked to dine with the literary and artistic people of London. At any rate he has already passed the ordeal of one dinner on the opening night of the United Democratic club, which is to be the common meeting ground of literature and labor. This club will hold weekly sessions at which "will be debating, singing and smoking."

The banquet mentioned was called a "Bohemian supper," but the caterers for the evening did not widen the aesthetic atmosphere by the food they provided that time. It consisted, among other things, of beefsteak pudding and tripe.

Through the Sac and Fox treaty just concluded by the Indian commissioners 400,000 acres of valuable land will soon be available for settlement by white men in the Indian territory. Each Indian has agreed to take 160 acres in severalty and settle down to farming or stock raising like a white man. This is a great concession on the part of the Indians. To them the red farmers and prevent their being swindled out of the farms by their white brothers it is provided that half of each farm shall be inalienable and is not to be sold for thirty-five years, during which time it shall also be free from taxation. The Indians have their choice of the lands, and after they have taken such as they wish the government pays them $1.25 the acre for what is left. This will be one of the most interesting experiments yet made in the direction of settling the red man in one spot and finally civilizing him.

An effective device for heating cars by steam and doing away with the awful car stove has been adopted by one of the large railway companies. Steam pipes run from the engine the whole length of the train under the cars. Exhaust steam is utilized, being kept in circulation by a small pump fixed to the tender. The car is ventilated by air passing over the pipes and under the floor, entering through holes in the floor. A branch from the steam pipe runs under each seat.

THE HOUSE IN TURMOIL.

A Lively Session Caused by Speaker Reed's Action

CONCERNING THE SILVER BILL.

Strong Men of Both Parties Wrestle Over a Question of Parliamentary Law—The Speaker Explains and Defends His Action—To Correct the Journal.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—Speaker Reed's reference of the silver bill to the committee on coinage, weights and measures without laying it before the house kicked up the liveliest sort of a row. The Democrats made a fight over the approval of the journal, claiming that it contained a record of something which had not happened, and which should not be in it. Mr. McKinley's motion that the journal be approved was lost—yeas, 106; nays, 137—several Republicans voting with the Democrats.

When the Democratic applause had ceased Mr. Mills offered a resolution that the order of reference made by the speaker of the silver bill to the committee on coinage, weights and measures was incorrect under the rules of the house, and was made without authority under the rules, and reciting that the journal be corrected by striking the entry from it.

Speaker Reed and the Hindoo Idol.

Mr. Mills charged the Republican party with being false to its pledges on the silver question. The Democratic party would pay to people free and unlimited coinage of silver. The Republican party was voting against the wishes of the people. Mr. Peters (Kan.) likened himself a free coinage man, but sustained the speaker's action. Mr. Crisp (Ga.) argued that under the rules the speaker had not the power to refer the bill where he had made it.

In reference to a remark by Mr. Butterworth that the chair was always right, Mr. Crisp, disclaiming any discourtesy, drew a simile between the speaker and that of the Hindoo who approached his hideous god, saying: "I know that he is ugly, but I feel that he is great." The speaker joined in the hearty laughter that followed, and caused another outburst by remarking dryly: "The chair hopes that personal matters will not be introduced in this discussion."

Mr. Butterworth said that the present resolution sought to unhorse the Republican majority and to put the Democratic minority in the saddle. The Republicans should not abdicate to the Democrats until they should determine that they were unable to conduct the business of the majority (Republican applause).

He favored an early consideration of the silver bill. The question was whether the Republicans should stultify themselves by voting for a resolution which asserted that a thing was done and then said it was not done, and which rebuked the speaker for having conformed to the plain letter of the rules. Mr. Anderson, of the committee on rules, then proceeded to argue in favor of the position taken by the speaker, citing decisions of the speaker to show that it was directly in the line of precedents. Mr. Burrows (Mich.) addressed himself to an analysis of the rule, holding that under rule 24 it was the duty of the speaker to refer any house bill with senate amendments carrying appropriations.

Mr. Breckinridge's Accusations.

Mr. Breckinridge (Ky.) argued that if the speaker went beyond the scope of his authority in his reference of the bill his action was not erroneous, but illegal and void. The action of the speaker had no validity unless the house gave it validity. If the pending resolution was voted down the reference of the bill would be the act of the house, not of the speaker. He who voted to sustain the reference would vote to give it validity.

The Speaker Defends Himself.

The speaker said that he desired members of the house to divest themselves of the idea that any unusual procedure had taken place in connection with this bill. The reference of bills of this kind and in this way had been a daily occurrence since the adoption of the present rules. He declared also that the house should know that this particular transaction did not take place in a corner.

In the regular course of business, the journal clerk had informed the speaker that among the list of bills to be referred under the rules to appropriate committees was the silver bill with senate amendments. The speaker had been asked whether he had any particular direction to make in regard to it. Knowing the bill to be one of grave public importance and anxious that he should have all possible light on the subject, the chair had consulted the Democratic members of the committee on rules, Messrs. Blount and McMillin and Messrs. Bland and Springer, men for the purpose of throwing any responsibility upon them, but in order that he might benefit by any light they might be able to give. After conversing with those gentlemen, it had seemed clear to the chair that the rules of the house covered the question, and that his duty was to treat the bill as he would treat any other measure. Accordingly the clerk was not directed to make any change in regard to the reference. The house must bear in mind that this was not a question of politics or currency.

Purely a Parliamentary Question.

It was a question of parliamentary law, and on the decision of the house depended the carrying out of the system of rules the house had adopted. If not satisfied with the reference directed by the speaker under the present system of rules, the house could change the reference. Did this bill contain provisions which under the rules ought to be considered in committee of the whole? There was a provision in the original house bill by which certain bullion was to be purchased and certificates issued therefor. The senate amendment was an amendment to free coinage, and for this an appropriation was made. If anything was clear in parliamentary law, it was that this bill was one of those which would be properly considered in the committee of the whole, and this being so, it was the obvious duty of the chair to refer it in the manner in which hundreds and thousands of bills had been referred during the present session.

The point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Canon) put the chair in an embarrassing position because the proposed action of the house was a declaration that an error had been made in parliamentary law. It was proposed to erase from the journal a question of fact. While the chair might have some doubt about the point of order, he felt that it was a question the house ought to determine. He would, therefore, overrule the point of order and submit the question to the house.

Mr. McKinley Changes His Vote.

Mr. Canuon moved to table Mr. Mills' resolution. The motion was lost—yeas, 118; nays, 123. Mr. Morrow (Cal.), Mr. Sperries (Nev.) and Mr. Townsend (Colo.) voted with the Democrats. The question then recured on Mr. Mills' resolution and it was agreed to—yeas, 121; nays, 117. At the conclusion of the roll call the vote stood: Yeas, 119; nays, 117.

A change of one vote would be necessary to defeat the resolution by a tie vote, and that change was made by Mr. Funston (Kan.) amid the derisive jeers of the Democrats. This left the vote: Yeas, 118; nays, 118. But the change proved unavailing. Mr. Abbott (Tex.) and Mr. Bullock (Fla.), whose names were not recorded, stated that they had voted in the affirmative, and the speaker accepting their statement the vote stood: Yeas, 120; nays, 118. Mr. McKinley arose, and amid Democratic laughter, changed his vote to the affirmative, and the vote was finally announced: Yeas, 121; nays, 118.

A Motion to Reconsider Defeated.

Mr. McKinley was then recognized to move a reconsideration and also to move an adjournment. Mr. Mills managed to sandwich in a motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. On the motion to lay the Mills' resolution on the table the following Republicans voted with the Democrats in the negative: Messrs. Bartine, Carter, De Haven, Ewart, Kelley, Warner and Townsend (Colo.). On reconsideration Hart Mr. Ewart did not vote. The other gentlemen mentioned voted with the Democrats in the affirmative. Mr. McKinley also voted in the affirmative, but only for the purpose of moving a reconsideration. The motion to adjourn was lost —yeas, 119; nays, 120.

The vote recurring on Mr. Mills' motion to table the motion to reconsider, it was agreed to—yeas, 121; nays, 114.

The Battle Is Still Undecided.

Mr. Mills then moved the approval of the journal as amended, asking to withdraw the preamble which recites that the order of reference made by the speaker, referring the silver bill to the committee on coinage, weights and measures was incorrect under the rules of the house and done without authority under said rules. Mr. McKinley objected, and the question recurred on the adoption of the preamble. It was lost—yeas, 100; nays, 121. (Republican applause.) Mr. Springer moved the approval of the journal as amended, pending his which, on motion of Mr. McKinley, the house at 7 o'clock adjourned.

VERMONT REPUBLICANS.

They Nominate a State Ticket and Adopt Resolutions.

MONTPELIER, Vt., June 20.—The Republican state convention nominated Paige for governor, Henry A. Fletcher, of Cavendish, for lieutenant governor, and E. P. Field, of Rutland, for state treasurer; C. W. Brownell, Jr., of Burlington, for secretary of state, and E. F. Powell for state auditor. The platform adopted indorses President Harrison's administration, and says: That we hereby approve the action of the Republican representatives in congress in passing a bill which will equalize the operation of a protective tariff without destroying its benefits. The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That we believe it to be the duty of congress to deal liberally in the matter of pensions.

Resolved, That we heartily approve the action of congress, under the leadership of Speaker Reed, and commend the promptness with which it has come to a close until some fair measure is adopted that will insure a free ballot and a fair count to every one in the republic that is entitled to vote.

Resolved, That we believe it to be incumbent upon congress at the present session to speedily the interstate commerce law as to give full effect to the active regulations of every state in regard to the transportation of liquors and any other article injurious to the public health.

Buffalo Doctors in Trouble.

BUFFALO, June 20.—The body of Kitty King, who died in this city under suspicious circumstances, was exhumed at Lockport and an autopsy held which revealed that a child had been born to her recently, and from the appearance of the body the examiners decided that a crime had been committed. A jury has been summoned and an inquest will be held. Kitty King was employed as a domestic at No. 13 West Chippewa street. She left there last week to board at No. 7 West Chippewa street, saying that she had been taken ill and could not work. Here she grew rapidly worse and stated that she had been ill and had been attending her and understood her case. The doctors arrived and had a long conference with the girl. In a day or two after she died. The death certificate was signed by Dr. Baker and gave the cause of death as peritonitis.

To Save Little Lord Fauntleroy.

NEW YORK, June 20.—Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, the celebrated author, stands prostrated at the accident journey of her life, sailing away to search for health for her beautiful little boy, Lionel, who, as the original of Cedric Errol in "Little Lord Fauntleroy," has found his way into the hearts of the old and young wherever the English tongue is spoken. Little Lionel has subsisted entirely for the past few weeks on milk and brandy and is very weak. His mother, however, is hopeful of finding among the physicians of Europe some one able to save him from consumption, which threatens his existence.

Mrs. Hammer's Vengeance.

GREENSBURG, Pa., June 20.—Dr. W. J. Hammer, a popular dentist, and his wife, of this city, had a dispute over a trivial matter yesterday. The wife called her father, who undertook to act as peacemaker. Dr. Hammer became enraged and knocked the old gentleman down with a cane. Mrs. Hammer seized a revolver from a bureau drawer and shot her husband through the right lung, inflicting fatal injuries. The prominence of the parties adds interest to the affair.

Governor Hill's Requisition Refused.

BOSTON, June 20.—Governor Brackett has refused to honor the requisition of the governor of New York for William L. Vinal, who is under indictment in New York for circulating false statements with the intention of depreciating the value of Lamson Store Service securities, and who, it is alleged, has fled to this state to escape prosecution. The governor is of opinion that Vinal is not a fugitive from justice, and therefore declines to comply with the requisition.

Cornell Preparing for the Race.

ITHACA, June 20.—The Cornell university crew and their trainer, Charles E. Courtney, left here last night for New London, where they will go into training for the race next Thursday on the Thames with Columbia and the University of Pennsylvania. Courtney is getting into condition for a race with Plaisted, Bowdoin's trainer, in August.

Jersey Editors Enjoy Themselves.

NEW YORK, June 20.—Over 200 members of the New Jersey Editorial association, with their families and friends, left here last evening by river steamer for Albany, where they go to Montreal, Quebec, Fabyans and Bowdoin, the trip occupying ten days.

PRISONERS, BUT ALIVE.

Signs That the Farm Hill Miners are Living.

THE SOUND OF PICKING HEARD.

Now Hope Rises in the Breasts of the Gallant Band of Rescuers Who are Desperately Working to Save the Imprisoned Men at Dunbar, Pa.

DUNBAR, Pa., June 20.—The imprisoned miners in the Farm Hill mine have been heard from. At 4 o'clock last evening the men working in the head of the entry through which the rescuing party is working its way sent word down the entry to keep quiet. Every one did so, and in a moment "pick," "pick," for a dozen times came the signal from the inside. Then the men went to work with renewed vigor. The volleys cannot be reached for twenty-four hours yet, although the rescuing party is within a few feet of the line leading from the Mahoning to the Farm Hill mine. But after that is reached they will have to drive through seventy-five feet of coal to reach their imprisoned comrades.

No Doubt About the Sounds.

Mine Inspector Keighley went to the telegraph office in the afternoon to secure the loan of 5,000 feet of insulated wire, two telephones and batteries. He said:

"It takes half an hour to send a message from the face of the heading to the outside. If we had a telephone all that time could be saved. When we break through into the Hill Farm mine we may strike gas and the fan will have to be turned on. A half hour in such a case means a great deal. I distinctly heard the ring, "ting" of picks. They were faint, but it was the signal for aid. It will take us hours to reach them, but within that time we will make short work. We are trying to keep the matter as quiet as possible, because we don't want the report to reach the women and families of these gallant men, unless it be to have the women crying around and asking us to save their husbands."

The Excitement Intense.

In spite of all precautions the news that the entombed miners had been heard from spread quickly throughout the little mining town, and in a short time at least 800 people were gathered about the mines. The excitement grew more intense each moment, and the crowd gathered so close about the mouth of the pit that the coal and iron police were finally compelled to move them back.

About 5 p. m. Mine Boss Gray came up from the slope with the report that the rescuing party might reach the imprisoned men at any time. The sound of tapping against the wall has again been heard. The rescuers are inspired with fresh courage. They do not now fear danger, and it is probable that they will not meet with any.

She Burst Into Tears.

At 11 o'clock a thousand people were at the mines. Every one who had friends in the mine was there. They came with brightened faces. Policemen were dumb. When a man came out of the mines he was silent as the grave, and the good news was circulated around. Little Mary Smith, 8 years old, heard that the men were safe. Her father is in the mine. She came up alone, a pretty little girl. "Where is my father?" she said, as she came up to the mine barriers. "He is not out yet," said a man who stood by. The little girl burst into tears.

The Men Are Surely Alive.

General Manager Hazzard was seen late in the evening. "You may say that the men in the mine are alive. They have been heard from. The Catholic priests are down in the mine at the present time. They will stay there till the opening is made. I have ordered a corps of physicians to be at hand ready for anything. You can say the company is doing all they can to rescue the men."

In the meantime the suspense is awful. People are crowding to the danger line ropes, peering anxiously at the manway.

ORDES RECIPROCITY!

Latin-American Tariff Concessions and Secretary Blaine.

FREE TRADE IN CERTAIN THINGS.

The Scheme Will Be Spotted, He Says, if Congress Puts Sugar on the Free List.

A Proposed Amendment to the Pending Tariff Bill.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—President Harrison has sent to the senate a message upon the question of reciprocity with the Latin-American states, accompanied by a letter of Mr. Blaine to the president briefly reviewing the proceedings of the conference which has convened that body, especially by those American republics who not only contribute but must necessarily increase the trade and the development of the material resources of the countries adopting that system, and that it would in all probability be the object or favorable result attained by free trade among the different states of this Union. Secretary Blaine writes:

Secretary Blaine's Letter.

Only those who have given the subject closely realize the magnitude of the commerce of these sister nations. In 1887 the combined imports of Chili and the Argentine republic reached the enormous sum of $388,127,000. The imports of the Argentine republic for 1888 were $145,000,000. These imports consisted in the greater part of articles that could have been furnished by the manufacturers of the United States, per in 1889, of the total of $283,000,000 imports, we contributed but $12,000,000, while England contributed $80,000,000, Germany $43,000,000 and France $30,000,000. With our extraordinary increase in population, and the even more extraordinary increase in material wealth and progress in trade with South America has been strangely hindered and limited.

Exports Could Be Increased.

"In 1889 our total exports to all the world were $1,075,737,000, of which $93,197,000 went to Spanish America—14 per cent. In 1889 our exports to all the world were $742,000,000, an increase of 100 per cent, while $96,275,000 went to Spanish America, little more than 9 per cent., and the greatest gain ($9,000,000) has been noticed during the last two years. It was the unanimous judgment of the delegates that our exports to those countries and to the other republics would be increased to a great degree by the adoption of such trade relations as are recommended by the conference."

Reciprocal Tariff Concessions.

After deploring the present lack of means for reaching Latin-American ports of America vessels, the secretary says: "There is no direct steamship communication whatever between the United States and the Argentine Republic, and there are no direct banking facilities. The International American conference has earnestly recommended the establishment of both; and reciprocity could not be applied more effectively in stimulating commerce and increasing the export of the products of which we have the largest surplus, but chiefly to the progress of the public named, but to all the other American nations.

"Nearly all the articles we export to our neighbors are now subjected to duties, some so heavy in many cases as to prohibit their consumption by the masses of the people. On the other hand, more than 37 per cent. of our imports from Latin-America are admitted free, leaving but 19 per cent upon which duties may still be reduced. But mindful of the fact that the United States has from time to time removed the duties from coffee, cocoa, India rubber, hides, cinchona bark, dyes and other woods and other Latin-American products, our agreement may confidently ask the concessions suggested. The increased exports would be drawn alike from the farms, our factories and our forests.

An Amendment to the Tariff Bill.

The secretary says that seventeen republics represented in the Pan-American conference have signified their desire to enter into reciprocal commercial relations with the United States, and that the remaining two would express equal willingness could they be assured that their advances would be favorably considered. In conclusion he says: "To escape the delay and uncertainty of treaties it has been suggested that a resolution and grant mode of testing the question is to submit an amendment to the pending tariff bill authorizing the president to declare the ports of the United States free to all the products of any section of the American hemisphere upon which no export duties are imposed, whenever and so long as such nation shall admit to its ports free of all national, provincial (state), municipal and other taxes our flour, cornmeal and other breadstuffs, preserved meats, fish, vegetables and fruits, cotton seed oil, lard and other provisions, including all articles of food, lumber, furniture and other articles of wood, agricultural implements and machinery, mining and railroad plants, machinery, structural steel and iron, steel rails, locomotives, railway cars and supplies, street cars and refined petroleum.

He Objects to Free Sugar.

"The list could no doubt be profitably enlarged by a careful investigation of the needs and advantages of both the home and foreign markets. Of course the exchange involved in these propositions would be rendered impossible if congress in its wisdom should repeal the duty on sugar by direct legislation instead of allowing the same object to be attained by the reciprocal arrangement suggested."

The Proposed Bounty on Sugar.

President Harrison, in his message accompanying the secretary's letter, says among other things: "It has been so often and persistently stated that our tariff laws offer an insurmountable barrier to a large exchange of products with the Latin-American states that I deem it proper to call special attention to the fact that more than 57 per cent. of the product of these nations sent to our ports is now admitted free. If sugar is placed on the free list practically every important export from those states will be given untaxed access to our markets except wool."

In the senate Mr. Hale offered the amendment to the tariff bill suggested by Secretary Blaine.

The Newfoundland Lobster Fisheries.

GOMPERS WILL BE THERE.

He Has Accepted Powderly's Challenge. Labor Issues.

NEW YORK, June 20.—Samuel Gompers, president of the Federation of Labor, in reply to Mr. Powderly's letter heretofore published, promises he will be on hand this evening at the Cooper union to discuss with Mr. Powderly any questions that may arise in regard to the alleged misrepresentations of the labors of the officers of the federation. Mr. Gompers calls attention to the shortness of the notice he received, and points out that the conditions are not such as he would like, but he will waive all this and accept the implied challenge in Mr. Powderly's letter.

After quoting from Mr. Powderly's letter, President Gompers says:

"This may not have been intended, but certainly is and will be accepted by the world as a challenge to discuss the question at issue, and as I regard it."

"You can readily understand that a challenge where the greatest efforts have been made to have the meeting entirely composed of your followers, and where there are probably four or five beside yourself who are to address the meeting on the subject matter in question, is entirely and manifestly unfair.

"You must also be aware that the time for preparation has been very short as far as I am concerned, and that it is now well known that this move has been in contemplation by you and your followers for several weeks, and that I shall be at a disadvantage owing to that fact. However, I shall waive all this, and will accept your challenge to meet you not at a remote time, but this evening, June 20, at Cooper union, but must insist upon the following conditions:

"First—That I shall meet you and you alone as my disputant.

"Second—That the time be equally divided between us.

"Third—That the meeting shall be an entirely free and open one, to which the general public shall have free access without the demand of any sign or password, and that no person be admitted to the hall until 7:30 p. m.

"If these conditions are acceptable to you and will be carried out, I can assure you that, notwithstanding the short notice of only 36 hours, you will find me on the platform."

The meeting to-night will be one of the most important in the annals of the labor movement in this city, and will have an important bearing on the future of the labor movement.

Mr. Powderly said last night that he could not agree to Mr. Gompers' terms. The meeting was not for debating. He would meet Mr. Gompers afterward in debate. Mr. Gompers had had the ear of the public for years. Mr. Powderly intended to have his say to-night. Mr. Gompers could ask questions afterward.

CINCINNATI, June 20.—The plasterers and architectural iron workers have followed the bricklayers and hod carriers by joining the carpenters who are now on a strike. A general tie up of the building trades is now on which will throw 10,000 men out of work.

CLEVELAND, June 20.—It is thought that the switchmens' strike is drawing to a close. The Big Four men were granted Lake Shore wages and have returned to work. Other roads, it is thought, will follow the example of the Big Four within a day or two.

HALIFAX, N. S., June 20.—The Halifax Amalgamated Trades union is boycotting the Amherst Boot and Shoe company owing to the discharge of 200 hands for the reason that they were Knights of Labor. A committee was appointed to ascertain what Halifax merchants are selling the company's goods.

CHICAGO, June 20.—The Junior Order of United American Mechanics installed its officers, and Past National Councilor Stroh was presented with a gold emblem representative of the order. The proposition to join forces with the parent organization was not favorably received. The question of changing the title of the order to that of "United Americans" will be voted on on or about Oct. 1. Future conventions of the association will be held in Cleveland.

NEW YORK, June 20.—Herr Most entered a meeting of the striking cloakmakers last night with a few of his adherents, who began to shout "Most! Most!" President Dimon, of the Cloakmakers' union, asked the police to eject Most, which they did at once without ceremony. The employes of Sherman & Son, one of the cigar manufacturers, met last night and agreed upon a uniform scale of wages, which the firm will be asked to sign. If the request is denied the 600 employes of the firm will strike. The scale is a slight advance upon the present one.

A Fatal Head End Collision.

ATCHISON, Kan., June 20.—A head end collision occurred on the Kansas City, St. Joseph and Council Bluffs road about three miles east of Atchison, between the passenger and freight trains. J. W. Young, conductor of the pay train, was killed. The injured are: Conductor Pritchard, of the pay train, badly bruised about head and shoulders; Engineer Hall, back serious, ly injured: Dean Bartlett, assistant road master, ribs broken. Both engines were telescoped, and the tender of the freight engine was driven into a car of horses immediately behind it, killing eighteen of the animals. The accident is believed to have been caused by the engineer of the pay train supposing that the freight, which had almost come to a stop on the main track, was on the siding.

THE KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

The Supreme Lodge to Meet at Milwaukee in July.

The sixteenth session of the supreme lodge of the Knights of Pythias of the world will be held in Milwaukee this year, beginning Monday, July 7, and lasting one week. It will also be the regular biennial conclave, and knights and their ladies from all parts of the United States will be present. The last conclave was held in Cincinnati two years ago, and over 100,000 people attended. From indications it is probable that even a larger number will be at the meeting in Milwaukee this year. Active preparations for the event have been on foot for the past six months.

A general executive committee of a score or more of leading citizens are cooperating with the members of the order and bountiful entertainment is assured. Besides the money raised by the lodges, citizens have donated a purse of $25,000. July is one of the pleasantest seasons of the year in Milwaukee. The summer heat is tempered by the breezes from Lake Michigan, the nights are always cool, bright, clear weather is the rule, foliage and flowers are in their prime, and the beautiful blonde city of the lakes will be at its very best—both in weather and looks.

"Order of the Knights of Pythias" is scarcely more than twenty-six years old, and yet its membership amounts to over 300,000. The first meeting was held on Jan. 15, 1864, in R. A. Champion's parlors, over the corner of Ninth, in Washington city. It was a meeting of some six members of the Arion Glee club, and the gentlemen present were J. H. Rathbone, W. H. Burnett, E. S. Kimball, D. L. Burnett and R. A. Champion. At a previous gathering Mr. Rathbone had stated that he had the ritual of a secret society which he had written while teaching school some time previously in a small town in western Wisconsin. It will thus be seen that Mr. Rathbone is the real founder of the order. The persons named held several meetings, and at first proposed a mutual benefit society to embrace all the Government clerks at Washington. By degrees the order took shape and was made to include all worthy classes. The uniformed rank is a later branch, with a total membership of 30,000, and the endowment or insurance rank has a membership of 20,000, or 30,000.

Justus Henry Rathbone, the founder of the order, is a native of Deerfield, Oneida county, N. Y., and was born Oct. 29, 1830. In 1850 he became a school teacher in the Lake Superior district, and it was about this time that he conceived the idea of the Knights of Pythias and wrote the ritual, which is based on a play by John Home, "The Grecian Daughter." The present head of the order, Gen. William Ward, the supreme chancellor of the world, is a resident of Newark, N. J., where he was born Jan. 30, 1834. He will open the supreme council at the July meeting, and will be succeeded by Supreme Vice Chancellor George B. Shaw, of Eau Claire, Wis. Mr. Shaw is in the direct order of succession, and if he lives will be the next supreme head of the order. He is one of the most prominent of the younger members, a handsome, soldierly man, who has been prominently identified with the K. of P.'s since his elevation to the vice chancellorship two years ago.

Mr. Shaw was born in Allegheny county, N. Y., March 12, 1854, and is consequently only 36 years of age. He is a self made man, a member of the great lumber firm of George B. Shaw & Co., of Eau Claire, and is very wealthy. Mr. Shaw's Pythian career has been interesting and surprising. He has risen from the ranks to the highest official position in a remarkably short time. He joined Eau Claire lodge in its infancy. In 1876 he was elected prelate of the grand lodge of Wisconsin, grand chancellor in 1878, supreme inner guard in 1880, supreme vice chancellor in 1888. In 1887 he was a delegate to the supreme lodge at Cincinnati, when he was elected supreme vice chancellor, and now in a very short time he will be at the very top notch of any Pythian's ambition.

The official programme for the great July meeting has just been made public. The uniformed rank will encamp at Cold Spring park. The supreme lodge will meet in the West Side Turner hall, and all of the great gatherings will be held in the Exposition building. There will also be a separate encampment for the wives of members. John A. Hursey, of Milwaukee, is the head of the endowment rank. He is a railroader and politician, 50 years of age. Maj. James R. Carnahan will be the chief spirit of the military displays, being the head of the uniformed rank. The general manager of the committee of 25 is Williams, a leading lawyer of the city and a prominent member of the order. George W. Peck, the humorist and the mayor of the city, is the chairman of the executive board. General headquarters are maintained and a large force of clerks is constantly employed in answering letters and in perfecting details.

THE LAKE RAIDER.

DARING CONFEDERATE ATTEMPT TO SEIZE THE NORTHERN BORDER.

John Y. Beall the Leader—Seizure of Two Lake Steamers by Confederates in Disguise—Plot, Mutiny, Failure and the Gallows.

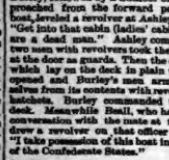
[Copyright by American Press Association.]

STRIKING instance of a brave man going wrong is presented in the case of John Y. Beall, who was executed by the military authorities at Fort Columbus, New York harbor, on the 24th of February, 1865. Beall was the chief promoter and ablest leader of the Lake Erie raid in 1864, but two hundred of the offense for which he suffered was that of acting as a spy. The judge advocate of the court which condemned him described him as one whom violent passions had shorn of his native elements of manliness, and led him to commit deeds which to have even suspected him capable at an earlier stage in his career "would have been a calumny and a crime."

Beall was a young Virginian and had been wounded early in the conflict. As master in the Confederate navy he for some time led a daring life as a "Swamp Angel" on the lower Potomac, destroying Union commerce on Chesapeake bay and contiguous waters. While engaged in this work he planned a lake raid, but failed to get his government to sanction the project until 1864, when the north-western Confederacy movement, of which Jacob Thompson was the head, made it fit in with the necessities of the Canadian commissioners. Thompson and his gang wanted a foothold on Union soil near the northern border. One of their cherished plans was an uprising of the notorious Sons of Liberty at the time of the Democratic national convention in August, 1864. This was a fiasco, and Thompson turned his attention seriously to the lakes. About this time Beall arrived at Sandusky, O., with authority to proceed on his raiding enterprise. Thompson had prepared the way for him by a careful investigation of the lake defenses, through an emissary located at Sandusky—Capt. Charles H. Cole, formerly of Morgan's raiders. Cole was supplied with means to entertain and bribe such Union officials as might be of service to the Confederacy, and he finally concluded that the control of the lakes would be secured by the capture of the gunboat Michigan, the sole defender of the waters. Beall and Cole met at the Confederate rendezvous at Camp Douglass, Chicago, and at Johnson's Island, in Sandusky bay. Thompson gave Cole authority to capture the Michigan, and appointed Beall to aid him. It was arranged between Cole and Beall that the former would remain at Sandusky and co-operate by bribing some of the men on the Michigan, and by arming the prisoners on Johnson's island for an outbreak. The Michigan lay off the island. The date was fixed for the night of Sept. 19, and Beall went to Canada to organize a force, hazarding everything, as will be seen, on the success of his confederates, who at the decisive moment, when Beall's attacking party should arrive off Sandusky, was to make rocket signals from Johnson's island that the expected aid was a certainty.

Beall secured the services of Acting Master Bennet G. Burley, of the Confederate navy, a Southern refugee in Canada, he having escaped from Union captivity at Fort Delaware a short time before, and eighteen Confederate soldiers of similar history. Burley had been engaged on the Philo Parsons, a lake steamer running between Detroit and Sandusky. Considerable loafing around the dock and wharves of this forces without causing suspicion. Burley went on board at Detroit and secured passage for himself and three friends, who were to join him at Sandwich, Canada. Sandwich was not a stopping place, but the vessel was slowed up alongside the dock and Burley's friends, Beall among them, sprang on board. At Malden, Canada, in a crowd of over twenty passengers, there were sixteen more of the party, two of them carrying an old trunk tied with ropes. Everything went on as usual during the day until 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when the boat was four miles from the Ohio shore.

The captain had gone ashore at a landing near Detroit, leaving the boat in charge of the clerk, Fahey. Ashley was standing in front of the office on the main deck, and without a moment's warning was confronted by three men with drawn revolvers, who threatened to shoot him if he offered resistance. Simultaneously Burley, followed by a number of men, approached from the forward part of the boat, leveled a revolver at Ashley and said: "Get into that cabin (ladies' cabin) or you are a dead man." Ashley complied, and two men with revolvers took their stations at the door as guards. Then the old trunk, which lay on the deck in plain view, was opened and Burley's men armed themselves from its contents with revolvers and hatchets. Burley commanded the lower deck. Meanwhile Beall, who had been in conversation with the mate at the wheel, drew a revolver on him, and said: "I take possession of this boat in the name of the Confederate States."



"I TAKE POSSESSION OF THIS BOAT."

Under Beall's direction the vessel was put about and headed for Middle Bass Island, in Ohio waters, ten miles from shore. Here the passengers and regular crew were put on shore. While the Philo Parsons was lying at the dock a small passenger steamer, the Island Queen, came alongside and Beall's men immediately boarded and seized her, bringing the passengers, including thirty-two unarmed Union soldiers, and crew as prisoners to the Philo Parsons. The boats remained there some time, and finally all of the imprisoned passengers and crews of both vessels were put ashore and the Philo Parsons, with her Confederate crew, steamed toward Sandusky, the Island Queen lashed alongside. It was night, but the moon shone and the lights on shore gave them their island refuge that the Island Queen was soon sent adrift and the Philo Parsons disappeared in the shadowy distance.

Beall now had command enough for the gunboat Michigan and approached within cannon range. Now for the shore end of the plot. Cole had agreed to invite the officers of the Michigan to a late banquet in Sandusky, to bribe the engineer and have him hold a carouse with the crew on board; also to have a large number among the Confederate prisoners on Johnson's Island awaiting the attack on the Michigan, ready to arouse the mass of their comrades and make an outbreak at a given signal, a cannon shot by Beall through the officers' quarters on the island. A preliminary to all of this was to be a rocket signal sent up from the shore by one of Cole's aids, as an announcement to Beall that everything was ripe for the finishing blow. This signal did not appear. The Confederate raiders at the prison were alert, awaiting Beall's announcement by a cannon shot that he had successfully boarded the Michigan. Instead Cole's announcement that the Michigan's crew, which outnumbered his force five to one, had been "fixed" and made comparatively helpless for defense. When the hour passed and no signal appeared Beall began to calculate his chances of success as things stood. His vessel was run so close to the gunboat that he could discern the officers of her. If the plot had been discovered he might expect a hostile demonstration from the Michigan. As the moments passed and no movement was made on the gunboat he decided to risk everything, board her at all hazards and strike for Johnson's Island on his own venture. His ride ended as he looked for event dashed his high resolves suddenly to the ground. The crew of the Philo Parsons met his orders with a mutinous protest against further proceedings. The absence of the shore signals was interpreted by them as a warning that the plot had been discovered. A spokesman of the party went forward a protest written on the blank side of a bill of lading found on the boat and signed by seventeen out of eighteen of his men. It read:

> ON BOARD THE PHILO PARSONS, }
> Sept. 20, 1864. }
> We, the undersigned, crew of the boat aforesaid, take pleasure in expressing our admiration of the gentlemanly bearing, skill and courage of Capt. John Y. Beall as a commanding officer and gentleman, and regret exceedingly that we are convinced that the enemy is already apprised of our approach and is so well prepared that we cannot by any possibility make it a success, and having already captured two boats, we respectfully decline to proceed any further.

Beall argued and pleaded with the men, and in this was supported by Burley and one other, but he was powerless to enforce obedience. The crew insisted that the Philo Parsons be steered for Detroit, where they would surrender them if captured, and they felt certain that such would be the end of it all. The boat was then run to the Canada shore, abandoned and destroyed.

The scene now changes to Union soil. On the night of the 15th of December, 1864, the engineer on an eastern bound express train on the Erie railroad between Buffalo and Dunkirk saw a railroad rail across the track, in front of his engine, and had time to reverse and strike the obstruction at reduced speed and with severe results. The next night two policemen at the New York Central depot, Niagara City, arrested two suspicious men who were about to take the cars for Buffalo. Beall was one of them, and though he made some attempt to deny his identity he was sent to New York city and accused of the Lake raid and of the attempt at train wrecking. Ashley, the clerk of the Philo Parsons, and one of the passengers named Weston, and also a confederate in the attempt on the train, identified him and furnished ample evidence for a case.

The train wrecking enterprise was doubtless a last resort by Beall to secure funds for the prosecution of his plans on the lake. Five men were engaged in it—Beall, Martin and Lieut. Headley, of Morgan's command; Bedell, a lad named George S. Anderson, who had seen service in the Confederate army and was a refugee in Canada, and another unknown. Anderson was a volunteer train raider, and stated in his testimony that the four—Martin, Headley, Beall and himself—rendezvoused in New York city and agreed on the plan to tempt of Dec. 13. Martin was the chief, and on the night of the 15th the rail was placed before the train by the entire party. The engineer reported the matter to Anderson, who seems to have been looked upon by the others as an innocent, unsuspecting lad helper, was that the express car was to be guarded by a large amount of money. The party lay hidden near the track when the train struck, and finding that the job was only trifling, that they hastened to Buffalo and scattered themselves. Subsequently it was arranged to cross Suspension bridge on foot and reach Canada, and there board a train on the Great Western road for Toronto.

Martin, Headley and the unknown set out alone, but Beall, who was with them at the start, was detained to hand to young Anderson, who had somehow strayed from his companions. While the two, Beall having found the lad, were awaiting the train at Niagara City the arrest took place, purely on suspicion.

Anderson's testimony undoubtedly swore away Beall's life. He was arraigned on two charges, violation of the laws of war and acting as a spy. His defense was that his acts had been justifiable acts of war, and, if pushed in his attempt on the gunboat Michigan and that of Johnson's Island prison, the plea might have had weight. But every circumstance likely to weigh in his favor, his education, his early bearing, his manly conduct toward the captives on the Philo Parsons and the Island Queen, was lost sight of in the appalling railroad horrors that had been planned with such cool deliberation and with no purpose evident other than robbery—robbery at the sacrifice of scores and hundreds of innocent lives.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

A Lion Lesson.

One night when old Dan Rice was exhibiting his circus in an Ohio town it came on to rain about the time the performance was over, and hundreds of people stuck to the tent for shelter. Dan didn't want to be mean, but the canvas must come down, so he sent three of the men through the crowd to whisper:

"Don't get excited and make a rush, but I must inform you that the Numidian lion has escaped from his cage. Please go out quietly."

The people went out fast enough—all but a few unbelievers. There was a farmer and his wife and daughter, and he got them in a circle in the ring and placed four or five pickles, three or four hard boiled eggs and a paper of salt in his straw hat in the centre. One of the men came up and inquired:

"What are you doing here, old man?"

"Waitin'," was the reply.

"Didn't you know the lion was loose?"

"Yaas, I heard 'em say so. Is it trust?"

"Of course it is."

"Regular lion?"

"Yes."

"Regular Numidian lion?"

"Yes."

"Healthy and fat?"

"Yes."

"Weal, that's what we're waitin' fur. We're a calculatin' to eat the dutmost critter since we got married. I wish you'd hurry him up!"—New York Sun.

Hatter Still.

He entered the Woodbridge street station shortly after dinner yesterday, with a torn coat, his back all dust and a red lump on his forehead, and when asked to state his case he began:

"Last March I met an acquaintance on Grand River street. It was raw and blustery, and he said it looked as if spring would never come. I says I to him, says I:

"'Possess your soul with patience. It is only a question of time.'

"I met him again in April. It was cold and rainy, and he said he doubted if we should ever have warm weather. Says I to him, says I:

A Bright Boy.

Charlie S——is a very bright boy and never at a loss for an excuse. He is also something of a naturalist. Walking along with a young lady one day he heard a tree toad suddenly begin its shrill chirp. "It will rain within twenty-four hours," he announced, correctly. "That is a sure sign; never known to fail." His prediction was received in good faith; but after twenty-four hours of remarkably pleasant weather he was taken to task about his prediction. "Oh, well," he replied, instantly, in an injured tone, "the old tree toad lied. I am not responsible for his morals."

Another time, having been requested to perform some little service, he came to receive his reward. His father offered him his choice between a silver dime and an old fashioned copper cent. "I have always been taught to take the smallest piece," he remarked, gravely, pocketing the dime.—Harper's Bazar.

PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS.

ESTABLISHED 1884. PLAINFIELD, N. J., "THE COLORADO OF THE EAST," SATURDAY, JUNE 21. 1890. PRICE TWO CENTS.

SUBSCRIBERS GOING AWAY FOR THE SUMMER MAY HAVE THE NEWS MAILED TO THEM WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

A SERIOUS RUNAWAY.

Mr. Roberts Badly Injured About the Head.

At about half-past twelve o'clock this afternoon, as Mr. Leander Roberts of Putnam avenue was driving under the Park avenue railroad bridge, his horse became frightened and ran away. Mr. Roberts was thrown out of the vehicle. In the fall his head struck the hard macadamized roadbed and a deep cut was inflicted near the base of his skull. After unfortunate Leander was carried into Hetzel's office and Dr. Manning was summoned. After the physician had dressed Mr. Roberts' wounds Policeman Lynch took the horse in a carriage.

Mr. Hand's Patent.

An attachment which is applicable to any harness, is designed to prevent the tail of the horse from becoming entangled with the lines, and also provides a rest whereby the lines will be held above and kept from entanglement with the harness. It has been patented by Mr. David Hand, of Netherwood. The body of the device consists of a metal strip bent in V shape, with the ends of the arms curved outwardly and upward, where they are attached to and support a horizontal rest bar having upturned ends of rings for the reception of the reins. The body of the device is curved longitudinally and in cross sections, to conform to the back and croupe of the animal, by which it is attached by means of an integral loop and billet, there being a pad on the under face of the body bar, so that it will not chafe or injure the back of the animal. At the forward end of the device is a metal loop to which is secured a strap and hook for attachment to the back strap of the harness.

Talking to Prisoners.

Mrs. J. T. Ellis, corresponding Secretary of the W. C. T. U. of New Jersey, visited the jail at Elizabeth yesterday morning, and at half past ten o'clock gave an interesting talk to the prisoners on the effects of alcohol and narcotics on the human system. She illustrated her lecture by using Dr. Kellogg's charts. The prisoners gave close attention and seemed pleased and interested.

Bound Brook's Graduates.

The closing exercises of the Bound Brook Public School took place yesterday afternoon in the school building. Principal Hoffman's opening speech was roundly applauded. Then followed songs, dialogues and recitations by the pupils. The graduates are Peter S. Clark, Jane R. Hempel, Jennie D. Connell, Lottie Connell, Irene Lowry, A. J. Davenport and Louis M. Campbell.

In the Union County Court at Elizabeth yesterday John Morris the expressman who was arrested for cruelty to animals was acquitted of the charge by a jury.

John Wallace was also acquitted of a charge of assault on Charles Bone.

The quarterly examination of the pupils of the Fanwood public school has been completed. Throughout they reflect the diligence and attention of the scholars under the direction of our able and energetic corps of teachers. The school is in a satisfactory condition with prospects of further good work during the coming term. Miss Mabel Bonnell and Miss Anna Murphy has been elected. Base Ball Notes.

In commenting on McIndoe, the man who left Rahway's team Saturday to play with the Crescents, the Rahway Democrat has the following to say.

He did not show up, but played right field for the Plainfield Crescents. It is but justice to say that so far as the batting of any of the players go, such as had become associated with the patrons of the game, the managers are without fault, as they could do no more than take the players' words for what they would do. As Plainfield has now one of the strongest nines in the State, and from Rahway's players, it is probable that they will have a hard time to defeat this combination—until we demonstrate that we have some still better players. We have an elegant ground, and it may be that we will wake up some morning and find that that has gone to Plainfield too! But, we guess not, as with our increased police force we think we will be able to hold that.

And here's what the Rahway Advocate has to say:

Mr. McIndoe, we've had enough of you.

Rahway defeated ball players defeated the Hackett-Carhartts for Plainfield on Saturday, score 2 to 1.

No wonder the West Ends, of Somerville, long ago blacklisted the Plainfield Crescents. The latter have played a game with the former, and it seems to be to seek to annoy their neighbors.

Hello Plainfield! Are you ready for a date yet? The season is passing, so show up, or, at the pinch of the season, get up.

No wonder the Plainfield Crescents defeated the Hackett-Carharts on Saturday, for according to the account of the game in THE NEWS, the Hackett-Carharts played a fine game.

"McIndoe proved a valuable acquisition to the team and caught several "fines" says the Plainfield Press correspondent of Saturday's game in that city. If half the stories are true we should say there is no question of the "valuable" part of the acquisition. Perhaps the fine from the Rahways was something phenomenal; as to the "wire caught" he ought to have had a wire brought from the public here for his trouble.

Advertising Epigrams.

Lying advertisements are and always will be failures in the long run.

Pay as much attention to your advertising as you do to your other purchases and you will get equally satisfactory results.

Avoid superlatives, also constant use weakens their effect. Successful advertisers employ the simplest words and forms of expression.

It may be safely asserted that an advertisement is worth more value when it is first printed than it does on second appearance, and that it has no value as it grows stale; hence the importance of frequent changes.—J. Walter Thompson.

"To discontinue an advertisement," says John Wanamaker, Philadelphia's great merchant, "is like taking down your sign. If you want to do business you must let the public know it. Standing advertisements are better and cheaper than reading notices. They look more substantial and business like than reading notices. I would as soon think of doing business without clerks as without advertising."

A Famous Horse Tamer.

Prof. O. R. Gleason, the world famous horse tamer, is advertised in another column to appear here for the week beginning Monday next. He caused a furore for thirty consecutive weeks in New York city. He educates horses possessing any bad traits free of charge, and has authorized A. M. Sagnier of North Plainfield to receive horses for him at his livery stable, No. 111 East Front street. Should horse being free from other vicious habits, The professor is anxious to secure some good kickers, biters or fighting horses, on account of the many calls he will handle and drive in the presence of his audience. On Monday afternoon he will give a free lesson in the art. A parade of 25 of the professor's educated broncbos will march the principal streets, weather permitting.

All Right. Let us Kiss and Make Up.

[From the Somerset Democrat.]

THE EVENING NEWS, of Plainfield, copied the article we published last week in reference to the ungentlemanly conduct of one of the Plainfield papers, and commented on it as follows:

"We have only to add that the people of Somerville ought not to hold any people of Plainfield responsible for the utterances of such a contemptible sheet as that, which the people of Plainfield are as much ashamed of as the people of Somerville are of the scandalous items, the members of which are not, as a class, as unprincipled and given to blackguardism. The TIMES can not expect the people of Somerville will patronize a paper that is willing to trade with the "Mets" of New York.—Bound Brook Chronicle.

We appreciate the remarks of THE NEWS, and believe that it voices the sentiments of the best people of that city, and sincerely hope that the same friendly feeling between the two places may once more be as in days gone by.

The Likes Cod Fish.

Yesterday afternoon a woman residing on Plainfield avenue entered a Liberty street grocery store, and made some minor purchases. While the proprietor of the store was putting up her order, she stole a large piece of boneless cod fish. Policeman Laine happened to pass shortly afterward, and the store keeper, who in the meantime had missed the fish, called his (the officers) attention to it, and said that he suspected the woman. The officer went to her home and accused the woman of the theft. She at first denied it but after the officer threatened her with arrest, she went to get a closet in her house and produced the stolen fish, and Mr. Laine returned it to the merchant, who refused to prosecute the woman.

From Professor Todd, of the solar eclipse, expedition we learn that "the fact of chief importance established appears to be the periodicity of the outer corona in a cycle of equal duration with that of the sun-spots." To be sure. We always thought so.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad company are taking a hand in temperance work in a way that will count. They have ruled that hereafter no man who gets drunk, whether on or off duty, shall be employed by that company. Employes shall not frequent drinking places, and one who has been discharged for drunkenness shall under no circumstances be re-employed. Very good. Now if the Baltimore and Ohio apply this rule also to the high salaried officials of the road, the big gun gentlemen who are loed high executioners and general bosses, all right. But it is sometimes in the offices of a great railway system that the worst drunkenness obtains, rather than on the line. If the Baltimore and Ohio shall undertake to reform this, too, they will engage in a noble temperance work. But there should be no discrimination.

Amateur Photographers.

The Popular Science News recommends the 5 by 8 size of photograph plates as the best for amateurs, and a 5 by 8 outfit costs $35. Rectilinear landscape lenses are best for general purposes, but wide angle lenses are wanted for interiors and for confined outdoor views. A common fault of amateurs is to stop the development of a picture too soon. This should be continued till the image nearly disappears. There are $5 outfits that are tolerably good for some purposes. Practice, and nothing but practice, makes perfect.

A young lady in New York learned photography for her own amusement. She became a skillful amateur, and frequently caught instantaneous views of groups of children, equestrians and other picturesque objects in Central park and elsewhere. She had a collection of views of this sort, when one day an artist saw them and bought a number of them. The girl has artistic eye and an eye to business as well. She now earns quite a sum of money by selling her views to artists, who are accustomed to make many sketches from photographs. The Popular Science News says this to amateurs:

> We should advise the beginner to start in a small way, and gradually increase his efficiency and proceed step by step, buying additional apparatus as it may be found necessary. Too ambitious a first attempt, like the first attempt with the camera to take a landscape view in the morning, an instantaneous picture after dinner, a portrait in the course of the afternoon and a flash light interior in the evening will surely come to grief, and consider all amateur photography to be but vanity and vexation of spirit. Nothing is better to commence with than an architectural subject —this accords with outlines, for instance—and a few trials, the first of which will undoubtedly be failures, he will gain an immense amount of information as to the proper exposure, development of the camera, use of the diaphragms, etc., which will be indispensable to his further progress.

The Most Popular Novelist.

The most popular novelist in the world died not long since, aged 88. His name was Smith—W. H. Smith. He wrote such tales as "The Soldier of Fortune," "Fair Steps," "Smiles and Tears," etc. "He had," says The London Speaker, "a thousand readers where Dickens had ten or Thackeray one." He originated the to-be-continued-in-our-next novel, and made the fortunes of the papers for which he wrote, while he himself remained poor and unknown. Who ever heard of W. H. Smith as a novelist? He originated that artful dodge of having the week's installment of a story stop in the most tantalizing and thrilling situation, as: "At that instant the door of the conservatory opened.—(To be continued.)" "On her return to the hall she passed through her husband's room. To her surprise the murdered man's dressing case had been removed."

The stories thrilled and warmed the millions through and through. Smith reflected the average mind of his time, and your confreres. I desire to add that any accusation ever made by me against any person I have either substantiated or am willing at any time to substantiate, and now within three hours of your proposed meeting I stand ready to meet you under the conditions named in my letter of yesterday. The meeting hall (Cooper union) is situated but three minutes' walk from this office, and I shall await your reply until the hour of commencement of the meeting. Very respectfully yours,

"SAMUEL GOMPERS."

The Knights Were for Eight Hours.

Mr. Gompers' adherents cheered when the reading was concluded, and then they made a stampede. "As many as are desirous of leaving should do so now. There are thousands of others desiring admittance," said Mr. Powderly. Mr. Powderly then took up the history of the preamble and constitution of the order, which the trade unionists claimed was formulated by them. It was true that an industrial congress did adopt it in 1874. After they disagreed it, the knights took it up, and were not ashamed of it. One of the declarations of that preamble was that demanding the eight hour workday, which the knights had constantly advocated long before the American Federation of Labor. The history of the eight hour movement of 1886 was inaugurated by the American Federation of Labor, but they expected that the knights would come in it out and that they would reap the glory. No assistance was asked from the order, and when the speaker issued a circular stating that the organization was not committed to the movement he was denounced as opposing it.

"That Man Lies!"

"I believe," said Mr. Powderly, "that those who would have to suffer, if need be, who would have to make the fight, should be consulted. I said so then. I believe I was right. And whatever officer of the federation said I was ever opposed to the eight hour movement in 1886 or any other year, that man lies!" (Cheers and applause.) "Yes I have been hanged for daring to tell men to look the matter squarely in the face."

In connection with the last movement by the federation and the claim that body made of over half a million members Mr. Powderly read a list of organizations issued by the federation at its Boston convention last year, in which were many that were knights' assemblies and some that belonged to neither.

The Federation's Numbers.

"Instead of over 500,000 there are not 100,000 acknowledging allegiance to the federation. It is a favorite expression of the federation's officers that the knights number but a rope of sand. Compared with the federation the knights are a granite wall."

The story of the manifesto providing for harmony issued by the officers of the federation, Knights of Labor and other organizations was told, and how the knights offered to exchange working cards, have the trade labels and keep out all expelled and suspended members of the federation if the latter would do likewise. "That offer was emphatically rejected at the federation's convention in Boston," said Mr. Powderly, and thrown aside.

The Knights Wanted Peace.

"A week could be occupied in giving instances where the knights have been willing to make peace. Wherever charges have been made and investigated it is they who have been found to offer peace and not the Knights of Labor. The first trouble was over the Pennsylvania cigarmakers when we raised their wages. They didn't care about the cigarmakers, but it took the matter out of the hands of our officers. I don't care who raises the wages or reduces the hours of labor. I am ready and willing to give way. If you cannot manage in one my place if he's the man to lead. (Cries of No! no!) I'll follow, for, thank God, I know how to follow.

"This organization of ours has taken its last insult in silence. We have allowed every insult, every libe, every sneer to go unnoticed. From this time forward, while we shall not seek a quarrel, we shall strike down every snarling cur at our heels. At the same time we shall cope with the capitalists, even though we have an enemy on our flank who should be our friend.

"Knights of Labor, keep peace with your friends, the trades unionists. If possible, bless them to you with steel bands; hold their hands firmly; if possible. Build up your assemblies and your trades unions. But let us see to it that we are not always temporizing with our enemies is gone. In the future, if we must fight, we shall do so." Cheer upon cheer greeted the close of it did, I would be ready to be packed in meeting, for which preparations, I am reliably informed, have been in progress several weeks, while, if I had declined your proposition, would not you and your followers have said: 'Mr. Powderly did not challenge Mr. Gompers!' And would you and they not have said that the offer from you to divide the platform with me was a bold and fair challenge, and that I was too cowardly to accept it? I feel strong and justified in saying to the trades unionists anything that I ever said in connection with your order. You hide yourself behind a wording of words and say it was not a challenge.

Mr. Gompers Becomes Sarcastic.

"I direct your attention to the press of this city and of the country for a confirmation of my assertion that your letter was a challenge. After your attempts at explanation you very ingeniously offer what you do in reference to the discussion of the charges of the federation, and extend to me equal time to reply to your own discussion—in other words, the whole performance of the meeting, which has so broadly and loudly been advertised, 'that you would review and reply to the numerous charges and accusations which have been made by the officers of the American Federation of Labor against the Knights of Labor.' It is now to be confined to a mere preface, and you will be cast to play a petty character and to die in the first scene. Then you and the rest of your characters are to proceed to the end of your tragedy or farce. Of course, you and your colleagues are not to refer to me or the American Federation of Labor, after having snuffed me out of existence. Oh, no, not even by a word, gesture or wink. How generous!

"You Hem and Haw and Hedge!"

"You say you cannot comply with the conditions I made owing to the fact that you have not the management of the meetings. How is it, then, that you had sufficient power in the management in the first instance to offer to share the platform with me? It seems to me that those having the meeting in charge should be willing to forego anything in order to give you the opportunity with one full blow to annihilate the American Federation of Labor and its officers. Mr. Powderly, all through your letter you hem and haw and hedge. You palpably betray the weakness of your position and will stand before the general public as a pettifogger.

He Is Ready to Reply.

"You remember that I was once a member of your order. I want to call your attention to the fact that so were very many hundreds of thousands of others who learned at their knee the dazzling methods of you and your confreres. I desire to add that any accusation ever made by me against any person I have either substantiated or am willing at any time to substantiate, and now within three hours of your proposed meeting I stand ready to meet you under the conditions named in my letter of yesterday. The meeting hall (Cooper union) is situated but three minutes' walk from this office, and I shall await your reply until the hour of commencement of the meeting. Very respectfully yours,

"SAMUEL GOMPERS."

POWDERLY AND GOMPERS

The Master Workman Arraigns His Federation Foe

AND GETS CRITICIZED IN TURN.

Mr. Gompers Calls Mr. Powderly a Pettifogger and the Latter Insinuates That Mr. Gompers Is a Prevaricator—War to the Knife Between Labor Leaders.

NEW YORK, June 21.—President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, did not meet General Master Workman Powderly, of the Knights of Labor, last night in Cooper union. Hundreds of trades unionists were present to see that their representative and champion had fair play, but he refused to accept Mr. Powderly's invitation. Cooper union's large hall was filled long before 8 o'clock, and men were standing three and four deep in the doorways. Among the prominent labor men present besides Gompers were Alexander W. Wright, of Toronto; James J. Holland, of Florida; John Costello, of Pennsylvania; John Devlin, of Michigan; John W. Hayes, general secretary treasurer; George Warner, master workman District assembly No. 49; James P. Archibald, master workman District assembly No. 220; Mortimer O'Connell, recording secretary, District assembly No. 220; Dr. De Costa and Robert Blissert.

George E. Murray introduced George Warner as chairman, who stated that the object of the gathering was to answer the attacks of the Federation of Labor. The meeting had been called by the district assemblies of the order in this city.

Mr. Powderly's Oration.

When Mr. Powderly's turn came he was greeted with an enthusiastic ovation. He regretted that it should be necessary for him to stand on the platform to discuss the question he was about to deal with, but the issue was forced on the knights by the officers of the federation. The knights had no quarrel with the members of the federation, whose cause was theirs, and with whom the speaker and the order would march, but Gompers' enemies were vanquished. Mr. Powderly said that just before coming into the hall he had received a letter from Mr. Gompers. He read the letter, which was as follows:

Mr. Gompers on the "Challenge."

"In your letter just to hand you very laboriously tried to show that your letter of the 18th inst. to me was not a challenge, because it contained no provisions for rules and conditions. It is this very omission that bears upon its face its complete unfairness of your proposition, and which I sought to supply by the very fair conditions I proposed. Let us be frank with each other, Mr. Powderly. At least I am prepared to be, and, say to you that it is my candid opinion that you never expected that I would accept your challenge, or that, if I did, I would be compelled to a packed meeting, for which preparations, I am reliably informed, have been in progress several weeks, while, if I had declined your proposition, would not you and your followers have said: 'Mr. Powderly did not challenge Mr. Gompers!' And would you and they not have said that the offer from you to divide the platform with me was a bold and fair challenge, and that I was too cowardly to accept it? I feel strong and justified in saying to the trades unionists anything that I ever said in connection with your order. You hide yourself behind a wording of words and say it was not a challenge.

"This organization of ours has taken its last insult in silence. We have allowed every insult, every libe, every sneer to go unnoticed. From this time forward, while we shall not seek a quarrel, we shall strike down every snarling cur at our heels. WARFARE IN THE HOUSE.

the Silver Bill on the Speaker's Desk,

IN THE COMMITTEE'S HANDS!

The Democrats Get Thursday's Journal Corrected, but Find Another Barrier Raised Between Them and the Immediate Consideration of the Silver Bill.

WASHINGTON, June 21.—In the house Speaker Reed announced that the question was on the approval of the journal of Thursday as amended by striking out the amendments made by the speaker of the senate silver bill to the committee on coinage, weights and measures. After some sparring between Messrs. McKinley and Mills, it was decided that the pending motion was the demand made by Mr. Mills for the previous question on the approval of the journal and pending when the house adjourned. The speaker put the demand and when the roll call was concluded, and it was made known that the demand was carried, Mr. McKinley changed his vote from nay to yea in order to move a reconsideration. The speaker then announced that the previous question was ordered—yeas, 138; nays, 130. The Republicans voting with the Democrats were: Bartine, Cutler, Le Haven, Herrmann, Kerr, Kelly, Morrow and Townsend (Colo.). Tracey (N. T.), voted with the Republicans.

Mr. McKinley, amid a derisive shout from a segment of the Democrats, moved to reconsider. Mr. Mills' motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table was carried—yeas, 131; nays, 130.

The Democrats Win Their Point.

The question then recurred to the approval of the journal as amended, and Mr. McKinley demanded the yeas and nays. Before the vote on this motion had been announced it was whispered about that it had resulted in a tie, which really defeated the motion. Mr. Dargan (S. C.) and Mr. Tracey (N. Y.) Democrats, voted nay with the Republicans. Mr. Dargan immediately stated that he desired to change his vote from nay to yea. The speaker then announced that the yeas were 132, the nays 130, and the journal as amended was approved.

Mr. Bland's Scheme Thwarted.

Mr. Stewart (Vt.) asked for recognition to present the conference report on the anti-trust bill. Mr. Bland (Mo.) raised the question of consideration. Mr. Bland's purpose was to offer the following resolution: "That house bill 391, directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of treasury notes and for other purposes, with senate amendments, be taken from the speaker's table and senate amendments concurred in." The house determined—yeas, 152; nays, 120—to consider the conference report. The conference report on the anti-trust bill was adopted. Mr. Dalzell (Pa.) presented the report of the committee on elections in the two contested election cases of Chalmers vs. Morgan. Mr. Bland (Mo.) then offered his resolution to take up the silver bill. Mr. McKinley (O.) made the point of order that the resolution was not privileged; that the only way to reach the speaker's table was to follow the order of morning business.

Mr. Bland (Ia.) made the further point that the bill was not on the speaker's table, but in the hands of the committee on coinage. Mr. Bland argued that the bill was on the speaker's table and within reach.

"Give Us Something About Tyrrany."

Mr. Conger (Ia.) said all that the house had done was to erase the reference of the bill. There was no record evidence of the delivery of the bill to the clerk of the committee on coinage and it was there now. If the house wanted to recall the bill from the coinage committee it could do so by proceeding under the rules. Mr. Conger maintained, against the protests of Mr. Crisp (Ga.), that the bill was properly and ordinally before his committee.

Mr. Butterworth said there were not twenty-five men under the Capitol dome who believed upon their oath that the bill was incorrectly referred. (Republican applause.) There was no tyranny like the tyranny of a majority which acted in disregard of the law. (Great republican applause.) Mr. Butterworth's further remarks were interrupted by cries from the Democratic side: "Give us something about tyranny."

The Bill Has Disappeared.

Mr. Williams accused the chairman of the committee on coinage, weights and measures of having taken the silver bill from the speaker's table Thursday, while the question was under discussion, and given it to the clerk of his committee. This looked like a conspiracy to obtain physical possession of the bill.

Mr. McCreary claimed that the constitution required the house to keep a journal, and until that journal was approved it was improper to send the bill anywhere. The speaker asked whether, supposing that the bill was found to be upon the speaker's table, it did not then come up only in the regular order of precedence. Mr. Bland replied that he had demanded the regular order when he introduced his resolution and that regular order involved the consideration of the senate bills on the speaker's table. The speaker said he did not so understand the gentleman's motion and that he did not think the resolution was in order now.

Private Bills Alone in Order.

Mr. Bland modified the language of his resolution so as to direct that the speaker, under rule 24, lay matters on his table, including the silver bill, before the house for action. The speaker suggested to Mr. Bland that he understood his wish to be simply to get at this matter when it would naturally come up, supposing that it was upon the speaker's table, not pressing upon the matter at this time. When the bill or its status, whatever it might be, was reached it should be brought before the house. But the gentleman did not desire to consider that the present day was private bill day and that private bills alone were in order. Mr. Bland asked whether the bill would be laid before the house the following morning. The speaker declined to decide that question until the proper time. Mr. McComas (Md.) demanded the regular order.

The speaker said that the regular order was a private bill, which he passed to the reading clerk. Mr. Bland and Mr. Springer finally insisted on a specific ruling the speaker finally ruled that Mr. Bland's resolution (to proceed to the reconsideration of the silver bill) was not in order under the rules. Mr. Bland appealed from the decision. Mr. McKinley moved to lay the appeal on the table. The yeas and nays were ordered, pending which Mr. Crisp (Ga.) moved that the house adjourn. This motion was defeated, but the hour of 5 o'clock had arrived and the house and the rule adjourned.

THE DRIVE WHEEL RODS BROKE

And Battered the Engine's Cab to Pieces. Two Persons Killed.

PHILADELPHIA, June 21.—The Washington express of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad met with an accident at Childs Station, forty-four miles down the road from this city, yesterday, by which John McNamara, the fireman, was killed and several of the passengers injured. Just as it was leaving the station the two side rods of the engine broke and the locomotive and engine car were thrown from the track. McNamara was hurled from his cab and struck on his head. He was instantly killed. McNamara lived with his wife and three children at 1,429 South Fifty-sixth street, this city.

Charles Ackenbach, chief engineer of the Staten Island Rapid Transit company, was so badly injured that he died shortly afterward. Bishop Keane, of the Catholic university at Washington, had his head cut and was badly bruised; Mr. Pierce, Montclair, N. J., arm broken; Mrs. Pierce was injured about the head; John F. Richards, Elizabeth, N. J., leg cut; Bertha Richards, his daughter, head cut; Miss Grace Darling, head cut; H. F. Kelly, Fort Smith, ankle hurt; Mrs. H. F. Kelly, slightly hurt; J. J. Newman, New Haven, slightly hurt; F. W. Page, New York, foot hurt; Chase Udall, Jacksonville, Fla., leg hurt; Ralph Ingalls, son of Senator Ingalls, Kansas, foot hurt; John Reid, Charleston, W. Va., cut on head; William Read, sleeping car conductor, back injured.

Engineer Fitzgerald, who was running engine No. 24 when the wreck occurred, tells the following story of the accident: "We were a few miles past Childs when all of a sudden I heard a great noise, and looking at the fireman's side of the box I saw that it had been carried away. I immediately jumped down behind the fire box out of danger. I had hardly done so when the box on my side of the engine was torn away and thrown into the air. The engine came to a dead stop and the cars were thrown down an embankment. The passengers screamed and shouted. I got out and saw that the main rods on both fly wheels had broken. This is the bar that connects the drive wheels on each side.

"It had broken first on the fireman's side of the engine near the front wheel. The connecting rod jumped to action and swung the broken bar around with it. It smashed through Fireman McNamara's side and killed him instantly. Then my bar broke and tore away my side of the engine. If I had not been behind the fire box I would have been killed. When the cab was torn away it was thrown into the air, and the pieces were scattered over the tops of the cars and all along the side of the tracks. The train jumped the track and rolled down an embankment. Then commenced the rescue of the passengers caught in the wreck."

THE LOTTERY FIGHT.

Possibly $5,000,000 May Be Offered for a State Charter.

BATON ROUGE, La., June 21.—In the lottery discussion in the house Mr. Shattuck said that Isadore Newman, the largest holder of Mexican lottery stock in New Orleans, was in with Newgass on the offer of $250,000 a year for the state lottery privilege. They had tried to make John A. Morris let them into the Louisiana State Lottery company, but on his refusal they made the $1,250,000 offer.

They had told Morris that if necessary they would raise the bid to $5,000,000. Mr. Shattuck said there was both blackmail and corruption in the Newgass offer, and he demanded an investigation. His statement caused a sensation.

ALL AROUND THE HOUSE.

Some Charming Schemes and New Ideas in Table Decoration.

A charming scheme of table decoration was lately seen at an artist's supper table. The table was covered with delicate green silk, slightly draped with filmy, silver threaded muslin, through which the green showed faintly. Over this were loosely lither and thither were small rustic logs of all shapes and sizes, covered with lichen, moss and underbrush ferns. The lights were all softened with green and white shades. The effect was dainty and fairy like.

A golden scheme of color is carried out with long fronds of maidenhair ferns, arranged in fancy baskets of gilded wire of different sizes. A long curved spray of flowers and ferns at either end of the table may be composed of the large single daffodils and small flowered mimosa. Yellow candlesticks in little gold clashes and yellow shades su the candles complete the decoration.

A new idea is to place low baskets in gold cord or wire full of flowers, around these to lay pretty green leaves, the fruit resting on the leaves, not on a dish; the larger leaves to form a border and the smaller ones near the edge of the table.

Fruit Salads.

Fruit salads may be made of berries, oranges, bananas, pineapples, melons, etc. Apples, also peaches and pears, are served as salads with French dressing, after being pared and cut in slices. Three tablespoonfuls of oil, one of vinegar, one small teaspoonful of salt and a little pepper mix well together and pour over the sliced fruit arranged in a dish. This may be used with oranges, adding a little of the chopped rind to the dressing. A sweet sirup may be used instead, made of white sugar dissolved in water and boiled till thick; to this add a flavoring of sherry wine or brandy. For an acid dressing for sweet oranges, bananas, etc., into a thick sirup of sugar stir the juice of one lemon, add chopped orange peel or rub the yellow rind on lumps of sugar till they are well flavored; then dissolve it in the sirup. The plain sirup, made of sugar and flavored with orange and a very little lemon juice, is excellent for banana salad.

An Attractive Wall Pocket.

Cut a stout sheet of cardboard for the back 19 inches by 13 inches, and shape the top in a wavelyke; have a similar piece in coarse cretonne, allowing one-fourth inch for turnings, and gum it at the back. For the front cut a wide band of pompadour silk or chintz, which will be placed at the top and joined to another one in old pink satin.

LOUIS XVI WALL POCKET.

The loose part of the pocket is gathered at the lower edge, and is caught up in a few plaits and trimmed with a double row of the same gimp, fringe or ruching which frames the wide pocket. Over the cretonne behind is gummed a breadth of cream satin. It is hung with two satin ribbons tied in a butterfly bow.

Points About Brooms.

A broom corn dealer says: "A few years ago all broom corn was so bleached with sulphur fumes as to make it so white that it has nearly destroyed its pliability, and it sometimes broke to pieces much more rapidly than it should have done. Now the broom makers have gone to the other extreme. They tell me that they prefer a corn as green that housekeepers are afraid to break off one of the splints to test a cake with for fear they may be poisoned with the Paris green." "Why do they do so?" he was asked. "Well," said he, "I don't know exactly, but I suppose styles must change. The smart housekeepers may have found out that the white brooms didn't wear so well, and caused a demand for green ones." "But are they really dyed with Paris green?" "I can't say as to that. It doesn't look like it to me, but I'd rather be on the safe side and not eat any of it."

Preserved Raw Pineapple.

Pineapple is a fruit that is apt to grow hard in cooking, and is therefore not always a successful preserve. Housekeepers will be interested in a method given by Miss Parloa in Good Housekeeping for making a rich and delicious preserve of raw pineapple. Pare the pineapple and take out all the eyes. Now with a very sharp knife, cut the pineapple in thin slices, cutting down the sides until the heart is reached. This is also sliced. Weigh the sliced pineapple and put it in a large earthen dish. Add to it as many pounds of granulated sugar as there are pounds of pineapple and stir well. Put this mixture in Mason pint or quart jars; put on the covers and tighten them, then store away in the preserve closet. The pineapple will keep for a year or more and be perfectly tender and fine flavored.

French Paper Lamp Shades.

The way of making these is to use twenty sheets of tissue paper, ten dark and ten light or white. Each sheet must be passed through the hand over and over again until it is quite crinkled. This needs a certain amount of adroitness or the edges are torn. When satisfactorily crinkled the ten sheets are formed in a circle, ten light and ten dark, the light under, the dark above. They must then be plaited at the top, and tied round to the wire frame with tape, so that there is a thick ruche at the top. This is the most troublesome part, as, unless the paper falls evenly all round, the whole effect is spoiled.

A Delicate Cake.

Two cupfuls of sugar, three of flour, three-fourths of sweet milk, one-half butter, and whites of six eggs; one and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder, flavored with the grated rind of a fresh lemon. Beat all the ingredients well and add the whites of the eggs the last thing.

The Venerable Greendale Oak at Welbeck Abbey, England, Through the Trunk of Which the Duke of Portland Drove a Coach and Four.

Every one who is interested in the remarkable trees of England will appreciate the portrait of the Greendale oak of Welbeck Abbey, England. It was a tree of such unusual size 178 years ago that the then Duke of Portland had a carriage that he had in his park at Welbeck a tree so large that he could drive a carriage and four through a hole cut in the trunk. His was not the only carriage ruined one of the most remarkable trees in Europe, which, in spite of this barbarous mutilation at the hands of the noble proprietor of Welbeck, has continued to exist almost in the same condition that it appears to have been in 1775, when the drawing of it was made that was published eleven years later in Hunter's edition of

THE GREENDALE OAK.

"Evelyn's Sylva." Another portrait of the tree appeared in Hayman Rooke's "Sketches of Some Remarkable Oaks," published in London in 1790. Rook states that the Greendale oak was reputed to be at above 700 years old; and that, from its appearance, there is every reason to suppose that it had attained to that age at least."

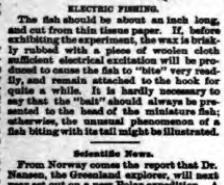
He gives the following statistics of its size: Circumference of the trunk above the arch, 35 feet 8 inches; height of the arch, 10 feet 9 inches; width above the middle, 6 feet 3 inches; height of the top branch, 54 feet. The tree has probably increased very little since these measurements were made just a century ago, although we have not, unfortunately, any recent authoritative measurements with which to compare them. The archway, however, has certainly been much narrowed by the extension of the bark round the edges of the cut since the duke drove his carriage and four through it. Another portrait, somewhat idealized, of the Greendale oak appears on the title page of Strutt's noble "Sylva Britannica," in which are gathered the portraits of the most venerable and most interesting trees of Great Britain. Thanks are due to Garden and Forest for the foregoing illustrated description of this noble oak.

A Metal That Melts Easily.

A metal that will melt at such a low temperature as 150 degs. is certainly a curiosity, but according to The Iron Trade Review it has been successfully produced at Syracuse, N. Y. It is an alloy composed of lead, tin, bismuth and cadmium, and, in weight, hardness and color, resembles type metal. So small does it melt that if you place it on a comparatively cool part of the stove with a piece of paper under it, it will melt without the paper being scorched. Another peculiarity about it is that it will not retain heat, and becomes cold the moment it melts. It is used in the manufacture of the little automatic fire alarms for hotels, and which give an electric alarm when the metal melts, owing to the rising of the temperature by fire.

Simple Experiment in Electricity.

The illustration shows an amusing and instructive experiment in electric fishing, originally suggested, it is explained, as follows by Popular Science News: A pencil serves for a rod, a piece of thread for a line and a bent pin for a hook, while the bait is composed of a small lump of sealing wax, which is melted around the head of the pin, as shown in the lower corner of the engraving (A).



ELECTRIC FISHING.

The fish should be about an inch long, and cut from thin tissue paper. If, before exhibiting the experiment, the wax is briskly rubbed with a piece of woolen cloth sufficient electrical excitation will be produced to cause the fish to "bite" very readily, and remain attached to the hook for quite a while. It is hardly necessary to say that the "bait" should always be presented to the head of the miniature fish; otherwise, the unusual phenomenon of a fish biting with its tail might be illustrated.

Scientific News.

From Norway comes the report that Dr. Nansen, the Greenland explorer, will next year set out on a new Polar expedition. A special steamer, which can be hauled on to the ice surface of the sea, is being constructed for the use of the explorer, who has determined to pursue the same course which was taken by Sir Edward Belcher—namely, through the Behring straits to the Islands of New Siberia.

After Nov. 1, 1890, the bill passed by the New York legislature requiring the equipment of engines and locomotives with automatic couplers will be in force, with a $600 penalty for each instance of non-compliance with the law.

A newly invented German explosive named "petrogen" is said to be made from molasses and to be three times as powerful as nitro-glycerine.

M. Fouquet, a mineralogist, claims to have discovered in a mixture of silicate of copper and lime a perfectly unchangable color identical with the beautiful Alexandrine blue, the composition of which has long puzzled artists.

Scientific writers have recently noted a curious phenomenon, by virtue of which electric cars can ascend unusually heavy grades. When the current passes from the car wheel to the track it causes an increased friction or resistance to sliding between them, the result of which is that slipping is to a large degree prevented.

PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE.

Do Heads Grow After Mid Age?—Mr. Gladstone's Experiences.

Some statements have recently appeared in regard to an alleged steady increase in the size of Mr. Gladstone's head, which it is said is rendered manifest by a progressive enlargement in the size of the hat required to cover it. In regard to these The Lancet says: "Such statements exhibit an extraordinary ignorance of well ascertained facts; for if there is one thing which would be acknowledged by all anatomists and physiologists it is that the nervous system, like other parts of the body, undergoes atrophy with advancing age—an atrophy that pervades the entire frame, and is as apparent in the thinning of the vocal cords that alters the voice to "childish treble" as in the shrunk shanks for which the "youthful hose, well saved, are a world too wide."

No reason can be assigned why the brain should escape the general change that affects the digestive and the circulatory systems alike. Its attributes and faculties attain their highest excellence at or before mid age, and from that time forth exhibit only a steadily declining tone. To compare Mr. Gladstone with Napoleon, respecting whom a similar story is related, is absurd. The head of Napoleon, which was worn by him between 20 and 45, because his brain was greatly exercised during the last ten years of the past century and the first ten of the present, is not to have been made on Mr. Gladstone of late years at all comparable to the strain on the mental and bodily powers of the French emperor during that seventh period. The ossification of the sutures of the cranium practically prevents increase of the volume of the brain in advanced life; and even granting some slight increase, such increase would be compensated for by the attenuation of the cranial bones, which is well known to occur in old age. A change in form there may be, but none in size.

Typhus and Ground Water.

It is claimed that a connection exists between ground water and typhus, the disease increasing in force as the water goes down, and declining as the water rises. It is stated in Nature that, according to Professor Bruckner, the last typhus epidemic in Hamburg was quite in discordance with the variations of ground water. From 1886, it is stated, the typhus mortality in Hamburg steadily fell from 19 to 2 or 3 per 1,000, but from 1885 it rose again to 9, and wherras before 1885 the epidemic was a summer one, with its maximum in August, it now became a winter one, with maximum in December. The curve of ground water continued to have the same course as before. Professor Bruckner points out that this epidemic of 1884-87 corresponded in time with certain harbor works being carried out at Hamburg, and he attributes it to the upturning of enormous masses of earth, the abode of numerous bacteria, whose diffusion among the inhabitants was thus facilitated."

Morphine Mania.

In referring in one of her lectures to some reprehensible tendencies among fashionable women Mrs. Jeanese Miller is reported as saying: "The increase of the morphine mania may well fill us with shame for the folly and weakness of our sex, and should moderate our boast about the progress and enlightenment of the age. Culture is of little value if it permits its votaries to fall victims to a degrading vice which reduces them to the level of the most ignorant consumer of the cheap and fiery poison, and even gains in grim, and who in the destitution of creature comfort has plausible excuse for her infirmity. The medical men are not entirely blameless for this pernicious practice by too indiscriminately prescribing morphine injections.

A Remedy for Black and Blue.

To prevent the blood from settling under a bruise there is nothing to compare with the tincture or a strong infusion of capsicum, mixed in equal parts with a solution of mucilage of gum arabic, and with the addition of a few drops of glycerin. This should be painted all over the surface with a camel's hair pencil and allowed to dry on, a second or third coating being applied as soon as the first is dry. If done as soon as the injury is inflicted the treatment will invariably prevent the blackening of the bruised tissue. The same remedy has no equal in rheumatic stiff neck, according to St. Louis Polyclinic.

SOCIAL ETIQUETTE.

The Value of Repose of Expression. Frowning, Squinting, Etc.

Have you studied repose of expression? If so you have learned one of the most important rules for preserving your good looks, says Dorothy Maddox. Bad practices which my French teacher calls "tics," such as lifting the forehead, drawing down the mouth, frowning, squinting, and other face gestures are not only such enemies to one's prettiness, but are utterly inconsistent with good breeding. I frequently meet with women who, when they weep, seem to feel called upon to screw up their poor countenances in such a grotesque manner that one is moved to a feeling of amusement rather than one of sympathy. Then there are others who cannot indulge in a good hearty laugh without doing positive violence to all the laws that govern an attractive arrangement of features.

Mothers are largely to blame for this sort of thing. They seem to be perfectly indifferent to the fact that their children eat with their mouths open, commenting on how everything they do and say by a series of grimaces that would do credit to a chimpanzee. Thus the habit is allowed to grow

Mr. Marshall's Estate Divided.

The will of the late James Marshall, senior partner in the clothing firm of Marshall & Ball, of Newark, gives to his widow all his household furniture and personal effects, $6,000 in cash and a life income of $6,000 a year. It is stipulated that his interest in the business shall be maintained so long as it pays 10 per cent a year, that it shall not be sold at any time within five years of his death, and that in case of sale James T. Ball shall have the first option. James Hadley, his brother's son, gets $10,000; his brother Garret, of Peoria, Ill., $2,000, his niece, Sarah Dean, $5,000; his sister Rachael, the income of $5,000; his stepson, Alfred Ball, the income of $5,000. George Marshall, $5,000 and each of Mr. Marshall's two sons, $3,000. Lawyer Samuel J. Macdonald, who drew the will, gets $250. The remainder of the estate, which is supposed to be pretty large, is to be divided equally between the legatees, and it is said that they will come in for something like $10,000 apiece additional. Relatives of Mr. Marshall reside on Park avenue.

Obstinate Mrs. Sullivan.

Friday evening last Captain Grant took Mrs. James Sullivan, the woman who was convicted that morning of drunkenness and disorderly, to the county jail to serve out a ten days sentence. When the train arrived at the Elizabeth station Mrs. Sullivan refused to leave the car. Mr. Grant carried her out and when he reached the pavement she threw herself on her back and refused to move. After some further trouble the officer succeeded in getting her two blocks nearer the jail. He then talked a cab into the city and the driver refused to let him board the car with the woman. When he was within a block of the jail an Elizabeth policeman went to his assistance and between the two they succeeded in placing the woman behind the bars. The incident caused a large crowd to congregate.

Piscataway-town Flag Raising.

The children of School District No. 15, Piscataway-town, raised their beautiful flag at 4:30 Friday afternoon, amid the singing of national songs and recitations. County Superintendent H. H. Whilldin was present and opened the entertainment with a very neat address address, followed by an explanation of the colors and the origin of the "Star Spangled Banner." Mr. Willis accepted the flag on behalf of the trustees, stating that it was one of the finest in the county and was next the flag staff was one of the tallest, being 35 feet high. The flag was 9x15 feet and was procured through the efforts of the teacher, Miss M. L. Turton, and the scholars, who gave an exhibition for the purpose some time ago.

A Pastor Chosen.

At a special meeting held yesterday for that purpose a unanimous call was extended to Rev. T. E. Davis, of Valatie, Columbia county, N. Y., to become pastor of the Presbyterian church of Bound Brook. He succeeds the Rev. H. D. MacCauley, who recently became pastor of the Fifth avenue Presbyterian church of Roseville.

Mr. Davis has been there two Sundays. He has had about 23 years' experience as a minister, is about 50 years of age and has a wife and five children. There seems to be no doubt but that the call will be accepted.

Reception at the Y. M. C. A.

The committeemen of the Young Men's Christian Association, in response to an invitation of President Wm. D. Murray, met at the residence of John W. Murray, esq., Saturday afternoon and evening.

The latter part of the afternoon was devoted to social intercourse, after which refreshments were served. After a general conference in regard to improved methods of work the committees met by themselves to consider the work assigned to them. The conference was largely attended and was a pronounced success.

COUNTY COURT NOTES.

Prisoners Arraigned and Sentenced on Saturday.

The Union County Court convened at Elizabeth at ten o'clock Saturday morning, Judges McCormick, Wiley and Hyer were on the bench.

As it was known that the day had been set down for the purpose of imposing sentences, a large number of spectators were present.

The following prisoners were arraigned and made acquainted with their doom:

James McCrane, assault and battery on his wife, fined $10.

Bernardo Cachobie, the Italian convicted of having assaulted George Speidel with a deadly weapon, was committed to jail for the term of four months, he having already been confined in jail two months.

Harry Banner, convicted of having robbed an old soldier of a large sum of money, was sentenced to one year at State prison, the court in passing sentence expressing itself as being convinced that the community was better off without him.

William Black, the horse thief, was sentenced to State prison for two years, the court reminding him of his having been recently released from a like institution after having served a sentence of seven years.

Albert Jones, convicted of stealing coal from the cars of the Central Railroad company, was sentenced to thirty days in jail.

Louis L. Bohner, assault and battery, fined $20.

Michael J. Burns, of Rahway, assault and battery, fined $10.

John Scullen, assault and battery, fined $10.

James Douglas (colored), charged with having committed an assault and battery on Murphy by striking him over the head with a stone, was discharged and was committed to jail for thirty days.

Thomas Dunn, a youth of 11 years, pleaded guilty to having stolen the sum of $27 from his mother, and the court tossed an order committing him to the Reform school.

Michael Morley, Edward Lynch and James Downey, three youths, the eldest not over 12 years old, pleaded guilty to having stolen a pocketbook containing $3, and the trio were remanded for one week to allow the court an opportunity to look into the matter.

John Meehan, the man who attempted to rob a companion on the North Broad street cars, Elizabeth the week ago, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to thirty days in jail.

Mrs. Delany, who was committed in default of $500 for having taken a part in the row which resulted in her husband being stabbed in the back by her father, James Paterson, was brought into court and discharged on her own recognizance to appear before the grand jury when wanted.

Mrs. Paterson was permitted to go from the fact of her having an infant but three months old which demanded her care.

JOTTINGS.

—Four Scholars are to be graduated from the Westfield public school this week.

—Criminal cases are being tried in the Union county court at Elizabeth to-day.

—A number of religious people are to meet to-night at the residence of Mrs. Poole, No. 23 West Third street, two doors from Central avenue, to which all are invited.

—It has been lately shown that if two coins be placed on opposite sides of a plate of glass and electrified for two minutes they will leave a perfect image of themselves upon the glass.

—Broken glass may become as useful as it is bothersome. The British Warehousemen announces that a process is now known which will work glass into cloth, of any color or thickness, and incombustible.

—The enormous coal storage yard of the Central Railroad of New Jersey at Hampton will be completed and in operation in a few days. It will be the most unique as well as the largest coal storage yard in this country.

—Saturday the day and night were equal in length and the Summer season began in the morning at 6.18 o'clock, and will continue for 99 days, nine hours and 17 minutes, ending September 22d at 3.35 p. m. There have been several days during the last three or four weeks when a good many people thought that Summer was on hand, but the heat was unofficial and didn't count.

—It is a fact that within a few years there has been a very noticeable increase in the number and variation of song birds in the parks of Brooklyn and adjacent to the city of New York. The fact is ascribed to the more strict enforcement of the game laws. Formerly poulterers from the city used to make daily visits to New Jersey woods and shoot everything in the shape of a bird that they saw and could hit.

—In Friday's issue of the Rahway Advocate the following appeared: "Yesterday afternoon the Plainfield Crescents defeated the Hackett-Carharts on Saturday, for according to the account of the game in the News, the Hacketts played without a pitcher." In Tuesday's issue of the game Pitcher Turney's name did not appear but he played with the Hackett-Carharts nevertheless and he is the man who pitched for the Hackett-Carharts when they beat Rahway by a score of 5 to 0.

The New Church Organ.

The new organ just completed for the Church of the Holy Cross by Lesbaugh & King of New York, was used for the first time in public worship yesterday. It is considered by experts to be a grand success in every particular. It is a large two manual instrument of full capacity, very imposing in appearance, with unusual sweetness of tone. The front has been displayed in the decoration of the front pipes, some of which are twenty feet in height. The instrument contains four stops of sixteen feet capacity, possessing great power as well as smoothness of tone.

Mr. Edward Neilson of Elizabeth presided at the instrument and played exceedingly well considering that it takes some time to become familiar with a new instrument. It gives general satisfaction. The church is to be congratulated on their great acquisition. The vested choir sang unusually well. A very large congregation was present at both services.

A Mountain Club.

Last Friday evening on the mountain a number of persons residing in the vicinity of Mr. E. K. Allen's, met and organized themselves into a pleasure club to be known as the Mountain Cottage Club, with the following as the officers:

President—J. W. Coddington.
Vice President—Jacob Naler.
Chairman—John Ammott.
Secretary—Miss Lizzie Stevens.
Treasurer—Mrs. E. K. Allen.
Reception Committee—H. C. Clark, S. Smalley, John Long.
Trustees—Albert G. Perry, George Shepard, Charles Johnson.

The club has secured possession of Mr. Allen's picturesque grounds, and intend to make the place desirable for Plainfielders wanting to enjoy outings on the mountains, the point referred to containing fine look-out, and being very conspicuous for sight-seeing. A stage will make regular trips.

Connecting County Roads.

The Central Railroad Company, the Westfield Town Committee and Road Overseer of District No. 2, have been working together to connect two county roads; to wit: the Plainfield and Rahway roads from Westfield to Central avenue, viz., South avenue, with macadam. It has been nearly completed from Westfield avenue to the passenger station, but the completion of the remaining portion has been delayed for want of crushed stone. Now, an arrangement has finally been made by which the railroad company will speedily provide the stone yet needed. Moreover the contractor of the Rahway County road will soon have that road completed from the Borough Valley station to intersect the Plainfield county road at the crossing near Mr. Swann's, Westfield. These two improvements will greatly facilitate driving.

What to Wear When Bathing.

Do not permit the Summer to pass without learning to swim. It is a healthful and useful accomplishment, and in the age of swimming schools both old and young may, with little teaching, become good swimmers. It is dangerous to go in the water unless two hours have elapsed since eating, and it is not healthful to remain in too long. The strongest person should not bathe longer than half an hour. A linen sheet for drying purposes and a fresh towel for rubbing are the most serviceable. A very agreeable bathing suit can be made of seersucker. It blows out from the figure when wet, and is not so soggy as flannel. Bathing costumes should be made large and loose, and for ladies with Turkish trousers. If dressed modestly ladies can't look handsome when they get into the water. For surf bathing a waterproof cloak is indispensible to wrap in after emerging.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following real estate transfers were recorded in the county clerk's office:

William J. Pearson and wife of North Plainfield to Matilda A. Clay and Nellie M. Young of Plainfield, 3-4 acre..... 1,000
Third street, Plainfield, 150x207..... 2,400
Charles F. Flanders and wife of Fanwood to Wm. Ackerson of Fanwood six acres of land on road leading from Scotch Plains to Rahway..... 1,800

—The tandem parade which was to have taken place Saturday was postponed on account of the rain.

—Mr. John Chandler of East Third street is about to bring suit against the Plainfield Electric Light Company to recover the value of his trotting horse, "Rambo." The company got the animal after an offer but he refused it, hence the suit.

—Weather Prophet DeVos, of Rochester, says we are to have a great flood in the early days of July. This will be cheering news to the farmers who desire dry weather about that time to help them with their harvest. It is lucky the Hackensack man didn't prophesy a drought.—Home News.

Jr. O. U. A. M. Officers.

At the National Convention of the Jr. O. U. A. M., held at Chicago last week, the following officers were elected:

National Councilor, George H. Bartlett, Massachusetts; National Vice Chancellor, John R. Bobbitt, Maryland; National Council Treasurer, J. Adam Schl, Maryland; National Council Conductor, Dr. W. H. Painter, Pennsylvania; National Council Warden, George W. Hoefner, New Jersey; Inside Sentinel, A. H. Barber, Wisconsin; Outside Sentinel, J. D. Pearce, Alabama.

The National Council decided by a large majority to submit to the subordinate lodges a proposition to change the name of the order to the Order of United Americans.

During the year 198 new councils were started, and the membership of the order was increased by 14,381, making a total of over 60,000. The order is now represented in 25 States.

The limited age for membership in the order was changed from 45 to 50.

To Protect Children.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—A meeting of the Plainfield Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is called for to-night at eight o'clock, in the rooms of the Republican Club, over the City National Bank, on East Front street. Meetings of this society have been called in the past, without getting together a quorum for the transaction of business, and it is now thought best by the officers to hold one annual meeting and see our city citizens more deeply interested in it. There are many who are not aware of the existence of such a society, and the recent developments in one special case have so aroused public sentiment that it has been deemed wise to let the people know that such a society does exist, and that its officers are ready to prosecute any case of cruelty to children which is brought to its notice. It is hoped there will be a general attendance of members and others interested in the work of such society.

Correct.

It is a political necessity that the Democratic State committee should get together at the earliest possible moment and organize an educational campaign such as has never before been undertaken in New Jersey.—Sunmuk Times.

This is solid but very unpalatable truth for the Democratic party. The ballot reform law and the Republican victory in Plainfield friends in Jersey City have stopped their nefarious methods of creating Democratic majorities. Everywhere existed, and if they want to carry New Jersey they've got to educate their workers up to some other kind of trickery. It will require a long time to work out and reverse that kind of education to make up for the losses occasioned by the ballot reform law, and if the Democratic State committee don't take the Record's advice New Jersey will surely, in politics, as it is undoubtedly is on an honest vote.—Elizabeth Journal.

—The scholars of St. Mary's Parochial school are on a picnic in Stelle's woods to-day. The closing exercises of the school will be held Wednesday.

—Another rumor comes to torment humanity just as the season of the delicious and welcome tomato is about to open. Dr. Wm. A. Mills, a Baltimore dentist, recently read a paper before the Maryland State Dental Association, calling attention to a new disease of the teeth due, as he claims, to tomato poisoning. The disease manifests itself in an uneasy, uncomfortable feeling, being more pronounced as evening approaches, and most acute at night. These symptoms may continue for days or weeks before the patient seeks relief from the agonizing pain which follows. The Dr. reported a case and stated that he failed to find any decay in the tooth that the patient complained of, nor in any others in which reflex action could be supposed to play any part in distressing symptoms. On a very close examination, he discovered around the necks of the superior molars, but rarely inferiors, a denuded surface, clean and white. Upon touching this surface with the finger-nail or blowing air upon it, the patient complained in pain. Dr. Mills charges this disease to tomato eating. But will not this theory fall like most all of the other medical theories?

The next new large vessel of our navy will be a powerful armored cruiser. Something of her size and power may be gathered from the fact that her cost is prohibited from being over $5,300,000. That is a pile of money to put into one ship, yet if we have a navy we must pay for it.

Up to this time Bermuda has been cut off from telegraphic communication with the rest of the world. The beautiful island might have been swallowed by the sea and nobody have been the wiser. Now, however, this is to be changed, and there will be a telegraphic cable from Bermuda to Halifax. It will be a great event for Bermuda.

A Temperance Demonstration.

Unique in the history of processions was the great temperance parade in London, and it shows, too, the growth of the total abstinence sentiment in that city of ale houses and gin palaces.

Hundreds of bands of music played, hundreds of banners waved and glittered. Among these two American flags, conspicuously borne, showed that citizens of the United States had carried their teetotal principles with them into foreign lands.

But, unlike almost any other procession that ever marched through dusty streets, this long line of people had many women in its ranks, not walking the streets, but riding in carriages. A startling feature of that march was these women, dressed in black, the wives, mothers and sisters of men whom drink had slain, and heading their group was the motto, "Rum caused our sorrows."

More impressive still was the group of children, orphans of drunkards, at their head the grim question: "Who will compensate these?" After a demonstration like that the English government will think twice about the subject of compensation for saloon keepers for the loss of their licenses. Gladstone's portrait appeared frequently in the line, showing him to be the favorite statesman of the temperance people.

An interesting feature of the great temperance movement in Great Britain is the hearty aid afforded it by the Roman Catholic church authorities, notably by Cardinal Manning.

Twenty Thousand a Year.

According to The Philadelphia Times there are some fifty men in that city who get $10,000 to $20,000 a year for simply being able to sell three-quarters of a year in advance what the fashion is going to be. One gentleman who buys goods for a wholesale dry goods house gets $35,000 a year.

Dry goods houses are noted for paying low wages to their clerks, because the supply of clerks is so abundant. In some of the smaller stores the pay runs as low as $5 a week. But the buyer, on whose judgment the sale of next year's fabrics depends, gets half as much as the president of the United States. Thus the smallest and some of the largest salaries are paid in the dry goods business.

How does the buyer for the house distinguish in advance what the fashion for next year is to be? He watches the "growing tendencies" among the firm's richest and most fashionable customers at home, and the styles among the same class of people abroad. Whatever has become popular among them will make its way among the common people, and this tide the house must catch and swim along with it.

In Europe textile manufacturers make few goods except on orders. The buyer for a firm must decide what his house can sell next season, and order his supply of cloths made in advance. A single serious mistake would leave his firm with a whole season's unsalable fabrics on their hands, and it might mean ruin. It is easy to see why a skillful buyer can command his own price.

Nothing less than a kind of intuition is demanded for such a place. In addition the buyer must estimate what amount his employers can sell of a given style of goods. If he overstocks the firm then they are left with old fashioned articles on hand, which they must resort to the "bargain counter" device to get rid of, and that at a loss. If they are understocked the loss is as great.

EFFECT OF BOTH BILLS.

Estimated Increases and Decreases in the Revenue

BY THE TWO TARIFF MEASURES.

The Senate Bill Will Decrease the Revenue $30,318,283, While the House Aims to Lower Uncle Sam's Receipts About $50,153,643.

WASHINGTON, June 23.—The clerk of the senate finance committee has completed the preparation of the statement called for by the Plumb resolution adopted by the senate showing the increases and reductions in revenue which are estimated to follow the enactment of the senate tariff bill compared with the present law and the house or McKinley bill. The importations for the fiscal year of dutiable goods (the rates on which it is proposed to change) aggregated $700,487,117.70 in value, and the duties collected on these aggregated $161,-404,848.48. The estimated duty on these articles (or an aggregate equal to that of the fiscal year) under the house bill is estimated at $208,844,977.77, while under the senate bill the estimated receipts from the same aggregate are $201,699,967.06. The house bill, therefore, will be the first articles which during the fiscal year 1889 were received aggregate value of $107,221,-735.04, and paid duty amounting to $60,-736,696.12. The senate bill transfers to the free list articles valued in the importations for 1889 at $98,819,907.51, and paying an aggregate duty of $60,560,343.69.

They Appear to Be Certain.

Adding to the first of these amounts the amount of the internal revenue reduction found in the house bill (and struck out of the senate bill) the total reduction of revenue by the house bill is found to be $71,-054,774.16, while that of the senate bill is the figure named above—$60,560,343.69. These reductions, the committee says, appear to be certain, but if the imports should be the same as last year under the new rates the reduction would amount under the house bill to $71,126,643.95; under the senate bill to $20,318,283.10.

The Ad Valorem Rule.

The table further shows that the average equivalent ad valorem rate under existing law is 41.86 per cent.; under the house bill 32.80 per cent., and under the senate bill 21.97 per cent. "These tables," says the committee, "are prepared upon the plan and theory usually followed; the estimates are largely conjectural and more or less unreliable and misleading. They are based upon the assumption that if the bill should become a law merchandise of like quantities and values would be imported as was imported during the fiscal year 1890. Such an one can be accepted as reliable where changes in rates are not of such a character as to necessarily cause increased or diminished importations."

A CONGRESSIONAL FORECAST.

What the Senate and House Will Do This Week.

WASHINGTON, June 23.—Today is District of Columbia day and the house resumed consideration of the Baltimore and Potomac railroad bill, which proposes to furnish the road with terminal facilities in Washington sufficient to obviate delay in handling passenger and freight. The proposition on its face appears to be of a local character, but in point of fact it is of serious importance to the traveling public and to merchants north and south, as well as to the District of Columbia. Merchants who patronize the road urge that privileges equal to those enjoyed by similar corporations in other large cities should be granted here in order that trains might be handled more expeditiously. A factional opposition to the bill appears to have been created through an apparent misunderstanding of its actual intent, and the charges made that the measure contemplates vesting in the railroad company title to the government reservation now occupied by its Washington station.

No such provision is contained in the bill, and it is said that no such intention is contemplated; that the only matter involved is the right of the railroad company to purchase lands on the line of its road and with the sanction of the district commissioners connect the main track with the same by sidings. It would appear that unless facilities of the character are granted the commercial and traveling interests of this city and the north and south will sooner or later be compelled to suffer much inconvenience and actual loss. The house will dissect and probably pass the new election bill during the week. The discussion will begin on Tuesday, immediately after reading the journal, and will continue until Saturday at 3 o'clock, when a vote will be taken. There is every reason to believe that the bill will be passed. There is no chance that the silver bill will be brought into the house today by the coinage committee and its immediate discussion demanded.

The senate will devote some time during the coming week to the consideration of appropriation bills, as it is the desire of both senate and house to get as many of these bills to the president before the close of the fiscal year (June 30) as possible. The consular and diplomatic appropriation bill and the postoffice appropriation bills are on the calendar and the Indian bill and the sundry civil bill are likely to be reported during the week. In spite of the intention to get rid of these bills it is altogether likely that before the end of the week a resolution will be offered and agreed to both houses, extending the appropriations for the current fiscal year to cover the month following so as to avoid the possibility of a deficit in current and necessary appropriations.

The bill for the admission of Wyoming to the Union is the unfinished business in the senate, and except for the intervention of appropriation bills it will be the business discussed until it is disposed of. Following it the bill for the admission of Idaho will also be taken up.

Thursday afternoon has been set aside by the senate for eulogies on the late Representative Samuel Sullivan Cox, of New York. Senator Morrill's agricultural bill may be taken up during the morning hour some day and disposed of.

He Says Lobsters Are Fish.

HALIFAX, N. S., June 23.—The commander of the French warship Indres in an interview at St. John, N. F., said that the accounts of what took place when he ordered British fishermen at St. George to take up nets are grossly exaggerated. Only one officer went ashore. There was no violence. The fishermen took up the nets without making the slightest resistance. The treaty gives the French the first rights in the fisheries. There is no disputing this. The word fish undoubtedly includes lobsters as well as codfish.

PRESIDENT DWIGHT'S SERMON.

An Interesting Talk to Yale Seniors. Other Baccalaureate Addresses.

NEW HAVEN, June 23.—President Dwight delivered his baccalaureate sermon to the Yale seniors Sunday morning. His text was I Corinthians xiii, 9-12. He said in the course of his discourse: "The first thing which will impress the careful student of the verses is the distinctness and coherence with which the partial character of knowledge is presented. With forms of expression and with energy of repeated statement the apostle declares that all the knowledge to which the readers had been priding themselves was only imperfect and half developed, having no fullness and no unobscured light in itself. Their knowledge was like the child's knowing—soon to be lost in something greater.

"The lesson for us is one which has a wider application, namely, that to knowledge of every thought and having no reference to the especial gifts which are now unknown. Yet it is the same lesson. Our knowledge is but partial. It is not the perfect or the greatest thing. There is an incompleteness, when viewed in the light of the truest manhood, so long as it abides in itself alone. The spiritual faculty which makes it perfect and turns it to its highest uses, is love. Without this spiritual faculty the highest perfection of knowledge is the blessedness which awaits the soul."

At Hobart College.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., June 23.—The opening exercises in connection with the sixty-fifth annual commencement of Hobart college at Geneva took place Sunday. At 10:30 the missionary sermon before St. John's guild was preached in Trinity church by Dr. Edward H. Jewett, of New York. In the evening at Trinity church was held the baccalaureate service. The preacher was the Rev. Telfair Hodgson, vice chancellor of the University of the South. The graduating class consists of twelve students.

At Vermont's University.

BURLINGTON, Vt., June 23.—The baccalaureate sermon before the graduating class of the University of Vermont was preached by President M. H. Buckham from Acts xxvii, 14: "After no long time there arose against it a tempestuous wind, called the ship Euroclydon." The speaker regarded the thought of today as largely driven by untoward winds. The pilotage of the word of God was necessary. Faith and belief must be regained.

At Trinity College.

HARTFORD, June 23.—Rev. Dr. Greer preached the baccalaureate sermon before the Trinity college graduates. His subject was "The Victory of the Word of God," and he spoke from the text in Revelation xix, 13-13: "And on his head were many crowns and his name is called the word of God." "Human life," said the speaker, "is capable of being the vessel of God. We should live so as to express the will of God."

Exercises at Hamilton.

UTICA, N. Y., June 23.—The commencement exercises of Hamilton college were held today in the Presbyterian church in addition by the delivery to the graduating class of the baccalaureate sermon by President Darling, his text was Philippians ii, 9-11. In the evening Horace B. Silliman, of Cohoes, delivered the annual address before the Young Men's Christian association of the college.

At Allegheny College.

MEADVILLE, Pa., June 23.—"The Dynamics of Human Life" was the subject taken by Dr. D. H. Wheeler, LL.D., president of Allegheny college, in his baccalaureate sermon to the students. There are forty-four graduates in Allegheny this year.

FATHER AND SON DROWNED.

An Unruly Sheep Brings About the Death of Its Shearers.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., June 21.—Michael Wyman, a farmer living five miles north of Newark, and his son Edward were both drowned Saturday evening while engaged in washing sheep in a creek. Edward had a sheep that he could not control and it pulled him into deep water. Others in sank out of sight. His father, seeing he was drowning, went to his rescue and both were drowned.

Mr. Wyman was 56 years old and had been a much respected citizen of Wayne county for many years. His son was 17 years of age. Mr. Wyman leaves a widow, two sons and two daughters.

The Silver Bill Controversy.

WASHINGTON, June 22.—The house has decided, by a vote of 144 to 117, to refer the silver bill to the committee on coinage, weights and measures. Mr. Conger, the chairman of the committee, will endeavor to get the committee together at once to consider the measure. The free coinage people are claiming that it will be pigeonholed and that it will never be brought before the house in any shape for a vote. Leading Republicans like Mr. Burrows, of Michigan, contend that a compromise measure will be passed by the house limiting the purchases of silver to 4,500,000 ounces monthly, such purchases to be the product of American mines; making the notes a legal tender and denying to the secretary of the treasury any discretion in the matter of redemption.

A Determined Suicide.

ROCK CITY, N. Y., June 23.—Edward McCullock hung himself with a clothes line from a tree in the rear of his house Sunday because of a disappointment in a real estate transfer. McCullock mounted a tree, a limb of which grew out over a gorge whose bottom lay eighty feet below. He had calculated that if the rope broke he would be killed by the fall.

HAS MR. KENNAN EXAGGERATED?

English Residents in Russia and Natives of That Country Say That the Famous Siberian Traveler and Writer Does Injustice to the Land of the Nihilist.

NEW YORK, June 22.—Thomas Stevens, the famous bicyclist and explorer, who was sent to Russia to look into the alleged ill treatment of exiles, so graphically pictured by George Kennan, has written the New York paper he represents the results of his investigations. In the course of his letter he says:

Has Kennan Exaggerated?

"I have been here yet but a few days and so can at present make no pretenses beyond having felt the pulse of public opinion to the extent of a few persons in regard to Mr. Kennan's revelations. I have talked chiefly with foreigners who have resided in Russia, because it might be supposed that a Russian would be afraid of committing himself to a stranger. But through several sources I have reached the opinions of the Russians themselves, and the verdict is: Kennan has exaggerated and the Russians are injustice.

"In what has he exaggerated?" I asked an Englishman who has lived in Russia for years and traveled about a great deal. "Mr. Kennan gives reliable and figures for most of his assertions, and constantly quotes Russian official reports to verify them."

The Picture Overdrawn.

"True enough," he replied, "I have read the articles, and I don't mean to say that Kennan has deliberately misstated facts, falsified figures, or wilfully misrepresented the state of affairs in the convict settlements of Siberia. He has overdrawn the picture, though, by trying to make the worst of his subject—quite an author's privilege, but nevertheless, in this case, an injustice to the Russian government. No; it is not that. Every Russian, and particularly the officials who have to do with prisons and prisoners, are ready to admit that the state of affairs is abominable and frightfully demoralizing for them. There isn't an official in Russia or Siberia who would not rejoice to see every Russian prisoner well fed, well housed and well cared for in every way, for the Russians are better hearted fellows any day than your countrymen or mine.

Not a Type, He Says.

"Russians are not incensed by what Kennan has said about the abuses in the exile system, but what they are incensed about is that a man should come here and, picking on the worst sore spot in the country, go home and write on that one unhappy subject until he succeeds in creating an impression in the minds of the people that this fetid, festering sore of theirs is Russia and the Russians! The Russians feel that Kennan has been exploiting their worst imperfections for all there is in it, and playing on the sensitive sympathies of the people of the United States for the pecuniary benefit of number one.

Have We Anything Like It?

"There is another phase of the matter that both Americans and English might take," this gentleman continued, "and not be in any danger of doing themselves nor the Russians any harm. Let them and the Russians swap places," he said, "and instead of an American correspondent coming over here to ferret out the ulcers of this country, let a Russian correspondent go over to the states. By working our lines similar to those that Kennan worked on, he could probably find a story to tell well nigh as harrowing to the kindly souls of the Russians as the 'Exile System of Siberia' has been to the Americans."

A Russian Lady's Views.

Mr. Stevens says: "A lady with whom I conversed on the same subject, who had heard of the Kennan exposure but had not read them, seemed to take for granted that matters in Siberia were probably quite as bad as Mr. Kennan or anybody else could make them out to be. She seemed to think it nothing extraordinary that people should be persecuted for their political aspirations, and, indeed, it is very difficult to get them to understand why Russian to think otherwise, so I say, told. I have not yet met any extremists, neither Nihilists nor Imperial Reactionists. Their sentiments, however, are known in advance. The Reactionists would say that Mr. Kennan had grossly misrepresented the state of affairs, and the Nihilists would declare that he had not told half the truth."

Mr. Stevens hints that some interesting revelations will be made by him before he returns to America.

Reciprocity or Not?

WASHINGTON, June 23.—Senator Hale said to a reporter that while he had discussed with members of the finance committee the proposed reciprocity with South and Central American countries there had been nothing to indicate the feeling or test the sense of the senate on the question. An effort would be made to have his amendment to the tariff bill adopted by the senate, but it would be an individual effort, as he understood it, and the matter would not be considered in the finance committee. He could form no judgment as to its probable fate.

COVINGTON, Ky., June 23.—A special election to choose a successor to fill John G. Carlisle's unexpired term in congress was held Saturday in the Sixth Kentucky district. The returns indicate the election of Worth Dickerson, the Democratic nominee, by 1,500 majority. He has probably carried every county in the district, although the voting everywhere was the lightest ever known. In some of the precincts the polls were not even opened, and in others the only ballots were cast by the judges and clerks. The Republican candidate was J. Hairden.

Fined Upon by Highwaymen.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., June 23.—While George Smith and John Anderson, of this city, were returning from Harvey's Lake last evening, three masked men attempted to stop them at a lonely spot near Dallas. The men carried dark lanterns, and their appearance so frightened the horses which the two men were driving that they ran down the road at a lively rate of speed. Seeing that their intended victims were escaping, the highwaymen commenced shooting upon them, several of the bullets passing through the carriage. An armed posse is searching the neighborhood.

MANY CANDIDATES CONFIDENT.

Gleams, Hastings, Delamater and Stone and Their Hopes for the Republican Gubernatorial Nomination—Democrats at Work for Their Favorite.

HARRISBURG, Pa., June 23.—The headquarters of the three candidates for governor were opened last night, and when the straggling delegates crowded about they found that Hastings, Delamater and Stone were already on hand and beginning active work. Everything indicates that there is to be a great struggle for the first place on the ticket, but that all will go along swimmingly.

All Are Confident.

"I feel that I shall win," said Senator Delamater. "If I lose you will see a very much surprised man."

A few minutes later Adjt. Gen. Hastings remarked in just as confident a tone as his rival had used: "Assurance received today make me feel very sure that I shall be nominated."

Secretary Stone said that he knew of fifty delegates who would vote for him from first to last.

Col. J. J. Carter, of Titusville, will make the speech nominating Delamater, and Lawyer Breen, of Center county, will probably speak for Hastings.

Who Will Quay Favor?

It is now settled beyond a question that Senator Quay will be here during the convention, and he may come as a delegate from Beaver county. If Quay does come as a delegate there will be lots of excitement. His name would be one of the first to roll call and the man whom he voted for would undoubtedly go through with a rush.

No Second Place for Montooth.

It is reported that Montooth will not accept the second place on the ticket under any circumstances.

An Exciting Convention.

It now looks as if this would be the most exciting republican state convention ever held in this city, the element of doubt helping the nominations making it impossible to predict the outcome with any degree of certainty. Chairman Andrews is regularly installed in the state committee headquarters at the Lochiel, where Senator Delamater is also to be found.

All the leading candidates for the various offices have reserved rooms at this hotel. The rush of delegates has commenced and by Monday the city will be full to overflowing. Delamater's supporters are still sanguine of their favorite's nomination for governor, but they secretly admit that Senator Quay may decide to turn in for either Hastings or Stone. They are depending solely upon Quay. If he fails them their cause is hopeless.

The Democratic Nominee.

PHILADELPHIA, June 23.—The nomination of ex-Governor Pattison for governor by the Democratic convention is considered quite probable. Ex-Postmaster William F. Harrity, who has been keeping a close watch upon the situation for the gubernatorial nomination by the Scranton convention, said last evening: "The friends and supporters of ex-Governor Pattison have every reason to be satisfied with the outlook. There are assurances of help from unexpected quarters, and the accessions to the Pattison ranks are becoming greater every day. I feel confident that he will be nominated, and will not be at all surprised if it should occur on the first ballot."

"What about the suggestions of a compromise candidate or of a dark horse?" was asked.

Senator Wallace's Chances.

"They have all originated with Senator Wallace's friends," replied Mr. Harrity. "It is beginning to be understood that many of Mr. Wallace's supporters feel that their candidate will not be nominated—in fact, that he is practically beaten now. They are now bending their efforts to defeat Governor Pattison by encouraging other candidates, in the hope that some of Mr. Pattison's friends will unite with them. In this they will be mistaken. I feel that I am fairly well advised of the situation, and I can assure you that the latest information confirms what I said some two weeks ago—namely, that Governor Pattison's friends throughout the state are active, confident and aggressive. They will continue so to the end, and will not find it necessary to spend any time in a search for dark horses and compromise candidates.

Pattison Has Confidence.

The Pattison managers in Philadelphia are more confident than ever that he will receive the votes of fifty of the delegates from this city, but they are quite content to leave that question until the vote is taken in the Scranton convention. A carefully tabulated list of delegates already elected gives Pattison 117 votes, or within thirty votes of enough to nominate him on the first ballot. There are forty-one to be elected. There are sixty elected classed as doubtful, and seventeen to be elected classed as doubtful. Wallace's friends have privately given up the fight.

Instructed for Pattison.

PITTSBURG, June 23.—The Democratic primaries held in this city Saturday evening to instruct delegates for governor resulted in favor of Wallace. He gets seven, Pattison wins two and Black has one in the city. The latter will not vote for Pattison. This means a majority in this county for the latter's nomination, and his friends are correspondingly jubilant. Allegheny county has twenty-two delegates, and it has been claimed all along that Pattison would get sixteen of them. It is looked upon here as a victory for J. M. Goffey and the county Democracy over ex-Postmaster Larkin and the Randall club.

London Admires McAuliffe.

LONDON, June 23.—Joe McAuliffe, the pugilist, has arrived here, and was greeted by admiring crowds. The Referee (newspaper) says that in appearance McAuliffe is certainly the finest man that has ever appeared in England as a pugilist since Heenan, the American giant. The general opinion is that if he be nearly as good as he looks any one who tackles him will have a very tough time.

John T. Lenahan for Chairman.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., June 23.—John T. Lenahan, a well known attorney of Luzerne county, has been very favorably mentioned for the chairmanship of the Democratic state convention, which will be held at Scranton on July 2. Mr. Lenahan, who is a master of parliamentary tactics and a sterling Democrat, has the support of The Wilkesbarre Leader and The Scranton Times.

THAT SECOND TERM RUMOR.

The Man the President Is Said to Have Spoken To.

WASHINGTON, June 23.—The Critic says editorially: "In view of the fact that the statement published in The Critic last Wednesday has had doubt thrown upon it in certain quarters The Critic feels that it is violating no confidence in now publishing the name of one gentleman to whom the president has made the statement referred to, to wit: 'I am not here for the purpose of acting in the interest of myself or of my party, but in the interest of the whole country and the people. When my term is out I expect to return to Indianapolis and resume the practice of law.'

"This gentleman is Mr. James H. Woodard, now a resident of Oakland, Cal., and the agent on the Pacific coast of the Wabash railway system. The president and Mr. Woodard are old time personal and political friends. The latter was in this city on business for some days recently. While here he called upon his old friend. Not wanting any office he was received with as much cordiality as the president ever shows to any one. They talked freely upon various matters, among them the silver question. Mr. Woodard, who is imbued with the extreme western views and who is withal a shrewd and far seeing political observer, urged upon the president the policy, from both a personal and party point of view, of signing a free coinage bill should one be passed by congress. The president's answer was as published in The Critic. The president has expressed similar views and announced a similar intention to other personal and political friends besides Mr. Woodard. There seems, therefore, no reason to doubt President Harrison's intentions as to the free coinage bill, nor his plans for the future."

The Weather Crop Bulletin.

WASHINGTON, June 23.—"The weather crop bulletin for the week ending June 23, says: A good growing week is reported in New England and the middle Atlantic States; haying is in progress with a prospect of a large yield; wheat prospects continue good in Pennsylvania, but oats are badly damaged by rust and insects; in this state a large acreage of tobacco has been planted, which is in good condition. In New England tobacco is growing well, and the potato crop is reported in fine condition. On the Pacific coast the weather for the week was especially favorable; much needed rain fell everywhere in Oregon, which proved of great benefit. Haying has been completed in California, with large yields. The grain acreage is below the average. The crop is about ready for harvesting, with prospects of a light yield, but of good quality; the prospects are excellent for a good yield of fruit.

MR. BLAINE DENIES IT.

He Objected Solely to the Sugar Schedule in the Tariff Bill.

WASHINGTON, June 23.—The alleged announcement by Secretary Blaine of the McKinley tariff bill as an "infamous measure," which was printed in a New York paper, creating a great sensation here, Secretary Blaine emphatically denies the words attributed to him. A personal friend of Mr. Blaine, who was present when the alleged denunciation was made, gives this version of the affair:

"The secretary's reply was not an attack on the McKinley bill in general, but a single item of it, to wit, the sugar schedule. You will remember that in his letter to the president urging reciprocity Mr. Blaine declared that in his opinion the American farmer would be benefited far more if, instead of making free sugar imported from foreign nations, reciprocity with Germany and other nations were encouraged and a fair exchange of commodities developed.

"Mr. Blaine argued further that he saw no reason to take off $65,000,000 worth of duties unless the farmers were to derive some benefit from it. He expressed the belief that should reciprocity be secured the farmer would be benefited from $60,000,000 and $70,000,000 a year in the aggregate. He said further that if he were upon the floor of the senate he would oppose the free sugar provision of the McKinley bill because he thought it interfered with the plan of reciprocity with our sister American nations. He made no criticism upon any other feature of the bill. He said no more to the committee upon the tariff question than he did in his letter to the president. Indeed, the same sentiments were expressed in his address that were expressed in his letter."

New York's population under the new census will be about 1,700,000; Boston's, 417,730; Cincinnati's, 310,000, and Philadelphia's, 1,040,492.

Canadian cruisers are being fitted out to cruise for American fishing vessels about the Nova Scotia coasts and Prince Edward Island. The Acadia, provided with half carriages, is already in commission.

The Leland Challenge cup was won by the forty foot Scotch cutter Minerva, which beat the crack American forty footers, Marquita and Lirla. The course was about thirty miles.

Stratton & Storm have granted their cigarmakers an advance of 10 per cent., thereby averting a strike.

Governor Abbett, of New Jersey, has vetoed the bill to legalize book making.

Robert Snow, leading member of the Wyoming county (N. Y.) bar, died June 22. He was 72 years old.

George Reed, white, was killed at Paterson, N. J., by Robert Wilson, colored. The quarrel occurred over Reed's umbrella, and the fatal blow struck with a razor.

"Gene" Mercadier, bound in 125 feet of hemp rope, with two big leather straps over his arms and legs, swam across the Hudson river at New York from the Brooklyn navy yard to pier No. 7 on the New York side in forty-seven minutes. In each hand he carried a two pound iron dumbbell.

A Bogus Loan Association.

PHILADELPHIA, June 23.—The police have received several inquiries from western points about the Eastern Building and Loan association, which has been actively engaged in securing mortgages in that city. None of the alleged officers of the association can be found here, though until the police began to investigate mail addressed to the concern was sent from the post-office once a week. It is thought that a number of people have been victimized.

A Duel That Was Spoiled.

JEFFERSONVILLE, Ind., June 23.—The proposed duel between Wilbur Young and Charles Benson, which was to have taken place Monday, was spoiled for want of principals. The police shadowed Young, who left the city for the day. Benson, as challenger, will be indicted by the grand jury.

STRANGE RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

A Passenger Train Telescoped by Its Own Engine—A Colored Girl Killed.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., June 23.—The East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia passenger train No. 8 was telescoped by its own engine at 9:30 p. m. at Calsco, and Ella West, a negro nurse in the employ of Ch.M. Reynolds, of Alpine, was instantly killed. The infant child of Mr. Reynolds was severely injured. Mrs. Reynolds, wife of the conductor, was badly hurt, and several other passengers were slightly injured.

The accident happened in a peculiar manner. The engine was uncoupled from the train and started for the coal schute about three-quarters of a mile up the track. It had not proceeded far when Engineer Griffin saw a freight train coming down the track toward him. Seeing a collision could not be avoided, he reversed his engine and, shutting off steam, jumped from the engine followed by his fireman.

The freight engine struck the passenger engine with full force, and the sudden motion turned on the valve and the engine started back toward the standing train at the rate of forty miles an hour. It crashed into the express and mail car 14, tearing it from its trucks and sending the tender half way through the car. All the passengers jumped. The negro girl was the only one killed. Both engines were totally wrecked.

GOMPERS AND POWDERLY.

The Former Uses Hard Words Concerning the Master Workman and His Knights.

PHILADELPHIA, June 23.—The Cigarmakers' union of Philadelphia held a mass meeting Saturday night at St. George's hall, which was addressed by Mr. Gompers. He praised the cigarmakers' union, then referred to Mr. Powderly's speech by saying: "I recognize the difference between straight out labor men and storekeepers being at the head of our organization. The head should be of a labor class, but as president of the American Federation of Labor I have said when the officers of the Knights of Labor have antagonized the movement of our plain wage earners, that I had nothing to say.

"Mr. Powderly said Friday night that the Knights of Labor were the eight hour people, when he has been trying in every way possible to break up every movement we have started.

"I am willing to go before him and his cheap labor organization—yes, go before him and his band of organized 'wabs,' and I must be excused if I do not accepting a challenge for a joint debate on five or six have their hands on my throat. I am willing to meet Mr. Powderly on any terms or platform, and give him satisfaction in any way he may demand."

Jealousy Caused His Suicide.

TRENTON, N. J., June 23.—Hewitt Van Marter's body has been found in the water power reservoir. Van Marter, who was clerk in a pottery, had been missing since Wednesday. He was engaged to a prominent young lady, and his jealousy of her led to suicide. When found one hand and one leg were tied together with a cord. A note found in the body directing that $25 be paid the finder of the corpse. There was also letters to his parents and those of the young lady. He was 20 years old.

They Slept on a Railroad Track.

THE LAST OF A RELIGION.

Spite of the Sandemanian Meeting House at Danbury.

For various reasons a religious denomination has ceased to exist. It was known as the Sandemanian sect, and was founded in 1764 by Robert Sandeman, a native of Scotland, who, in the year named, became a resident of Danbury, Conn. After a few months, however, he removed to Boston where he established his first church., In 1785 he returned to Danbury and superintended the erection of another meeting house, a picture of which is given herewith. This, the last remaining bit of property standing in the name of the Sandemanian society in America, was sold at auction the other day. On this side of the ocean only four adherents to the faith still live, and the youngest of these is over 60 years old. Sandeman died in 1771, and the stone above his grave bears this inscription:

Here lies, until the resurrection, the body of Robert Sandeman, a native of Perth, North Britain, who, in the face of continued opposition from all sorts of men, long boldly contended for the ancient faith—once delivered to the saints—that Christ, who died and rose again, is the only object of saving faith, and that the holy writ of Jesus Christ, and not a deed or thought on the part of man, is sufficient to present us the chief of sinners complete before God. To the above the friend of truth, as testified to the Holy Scriptures, he left his country, he left his friends, and after much patient suffering finished his labors at Danbury, August 2, 1771. Æ 58 years.

The epitaph probably gives a fair idea of the belief on which the sect was founded, but an old Danbury paper supplements the information there furnished with this interesting paragraph:

One of the peculiarities of the Sandemanian form of worship is that they have a weekly love feast in which the whole congregation dine together. Here they also pray and sing and the elder of the church presides. Members of other Scotch sects, from this custom they have been vulgarly called the "Kissites." Their rules prohibit persons of this faith from all funerals, all large trainings, as well as most Nineteenth century innovations, while in food they are forbidden to use fresh meat and "all things strangled."

Where They Have Hot Weather.

On the principle that misery loves company Americans who have to endure the discomfort of particularly torrid sections of the country will be glad to know that the greatest supply of caloric at any place on this continent cannot begin to equal that possessed by a strip of territory in the southwest of Texas. During July and August it is said that this unfortunate land never falls below 100 degs. in the shade, and often runs as high as 130 of an afternoon.

ties separated by water may be solved. The bridge is 2,160 feet long and 70 wide, with two sidewalks and a roadway. A draw is provided for vessels and ample facilities given for railroad tracks.

To Marry Miss Winnie Davis.

Mr. Alfred Wilkinson, the young lawyer of Syracuse, N. Y., who is to marry Miss Winnie Davis, the "daughter of the Confederacy," is not more than 30 years old, but has already made a creditable record in his chosen profession. About the match hinges all the elements of romance, for the lady's father was the leader of the southern cause, while Mr. Wilkinson's grandfather, Rev. Samuel May, spent his life in battling against the ideas which Jefferson Davis advocated. The young people first met at Syracuse, and began an acquaintance which has now ripened into mutual affection and an engagement of marriage. The wedding will probably take place early in the fall.

ALFRED WILKINSON.

Gold in the Canadian Northwest.

Although it is now established that gold may be found in the streams of the Northwest territory, the washings so far fail to reveal its presence in paying quantities. "It is estimated," says the Edmonton Bulletin, "that one person has taken $10,000 and $20,000 worth of gold dust was taken from the Saskatchewan, of which about $6,000 was taken from the immediate vicinity of Fort Saskatchewan. Several hundred dollars also were taken from the Macleod river, a tributary of the Athabasca, about 125 miles east of Edmonton, on the trail to Jasper House. The gold of Macleod is in even lighter flakes and is of lighter yellow color than the gold of the Saskatchewan. The flakes of this are now fairly rich, but it does not promise as permanent diggings as the Saskatchewan."

Why the Barber Business Was Bad.

The barbers of India have suffered for several years from poor business. At a recent mass meeting in Bombay an aged member of the craft declared that a calamity had descended on them because they shaved the heads of widows in opposition to the teachings of the Hindoo scriptures. The meeting thereupon resolved that every one who hereafter shaved a woman's head should be excommunicated.

MISS ROSE FARWELL.

Among the younger beauties of Chicago, Miss Rose Farwell, daughter of Senator Farwell, is perhaps "queen rose of the rosebud garden of girls." She is tall and stately, with a complexion of peaches and cream, soft brown hair arranged artlessly on a classical head and deep, dreamy brown eyes. Miss Farwell is shortly to marry Mr. Robert Taylor, a youthful millionaire, the literary editor of America, and one of the most eligible parties in Chicago.

Two exceedingly pretty girls are the Misses Marie and Albertina Huck, both of a petite, blonde type, with delicious complexions, daintily rounded figures and soft, fluffy hair above wide open, innocent blue eyes. They are both very young, yet well read and cultured. Miss Albertina has in fact not yet made her debut, though her engagement was recently announced to Mr. Russell Field, the only son of the great dry goods millionaire, an occurrence which is a blow to the tradition that the best matches are made through the medium of social entertainments, this unsophisticated school girl carrying off the match of the season. But then she is lovely as a poet's dream.

Miss Ethel Field, only daughter of Marshall Field, is a brilliant beauty, with a figure as slim and graceful as the legendary alder from which the god Odin made woman. Around this young brunette is the glamour of great wealth, and she is such a splendid whip that she would be remarked even in Rotten Row. She is very young and spends much of her time in riding and driving, frequently accompanied by her great friend and her brother's fiancée, Miss Albertina Huck. Together they look like Helen and Clytemnestra, such different beauty emphasizing by contrast.

People who deny that extreme talent and beauty ever go hand in hand are doubtless very cruelly demolished by Miss Elizabeth Sprague. Miss Sprague is the daughter of A. A. Sprague, the millionaire grocer, and is known as the most gifted unmarried lady in Chicago society. Her home on Prairie avenue is one of the handsomest in even that aristocratic region, and there Miss Sprague gives her famous musicales, she herself being the finest amateur musician in the city. An artist of no mean order, a clever linguist and widely read, Miss Sprague is also a beauty. Her self is described, "a daughter of the gods, divinely tall and most divinely fair," with complexion of milk and roses, bright blond hair and a high head, schoolgirl air that would of itself suffice to distinguish her anywhere. The hauteur of this remarkably gifted girl is consequently best considered of, but in reality hers is a delicate, unobtrusive nature, retiring to a degree rather than proud.

The Misses Florence and Harriet Pullman, daughters of George M. Pullman, are, from their great wealth and natural charms, leaders in Chicago's youngest society. They are fond of society and society is fond of them, with their accomplishments, their beauty and the unaffected pleasantness which characterizes them. Miss Harriet is a belle brune, with a figure lithe and willowy as a lily and wonderful coloring. No picture could hope to reproduce the charming, delicate features, heightened by such rich tinting and flower like delicacy. Miss Florence is of the same bewitching and beguiling type—a distinctively American type of potent charm, replete with sparkling vivacity and vivid coloring.

Miss Bessie Ross is the daughter of a wealthy physician, and is one of the most popular of the Lakeside city's belles. She is of the fairy like order, dimpled, winsome, bewildering, with bright dark eyes, fresh coloring and silky brown hair. Her face is beautifully molded, with [illegible] contours. From her melting ways and youthful naivete of manner Miss Ross has become a universal favorite among her own coterie and as well as among the sterner. There could be no greater compliment.

Miss Blanche Hanford, only daughter of P. C. Hanford, the many times millionaire oil manufacturer, is one of the season's most charming debutantes. She inherits her shrewd, willowy form and pretty blonde complexion from her mother, and through her mother's good sense, being a very young girl, looks like one in the simple girlish toilets she always wears.

Though thoroughly an American, Miss Hanford knows more about Europe than her own country, as immediately after her graduation at an eastern college she travelled for a year and a half on the continent before entering society. After one season she is again going abroad for a year, the family intending to travel through Russia and Norway. She speaks German like a native and is well up in the history of art. Her collection of photographs is one of the largest and rarest in Chicago. She is also an expert musician, with great natural talent. She has sweet brown eyes and a quantity of light brown hair.

Miss Grace Barker is the only child of Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Barker, and the exquisite home on Prairie avenue is a fitting casket for one so lovely. Miss Barker has been "out" only one year, and is in the first bloom of youthful beauty and social triumphs. She is of medium height, with the figure of a young Diana, and a face that dimples and sparkles and brightens with every passing thought until it has as many phases of loveliness as a diamond has lights. For the rest this charming demoiselle has golden waves of hair, straying away from a low, white brow; wide open, innocent blue eyes, and a complexion "whose white and red nature's own sweet and cunning hand laid on." Miss Barker is a clever equestrienne, and never looks more vigorously beautiful than when attired in the severe simplicity of the habit. Better yet, she is what too few of our American society ladies are—a famous pedestrian, doing her five or six miles with the greatest ease and the keen enjoyment of youth and perfect health.

Miss Bertha, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Bacon, is considered one of Chicago's leading beauties. She is a tall blonde girl, with a faultless complexion, clear blue eyes, a firm rosy mouth, dimpled chin, and hair of a pale gold, of most flaxen. The greatest charm of Miss Barnes is her ever varying expression. She is an accomplished musician and a notably good dresser.

Miss Gertrude Potter, the 19-year-old daughter of Orrin W. Potter, the millionaire iron and steel man, is by many accounted the most highly cultivated young lady in Chicago. Though born and brought up among all the enervating luxuries that money can command, she has for the past two years devoted herself to a hard and fast regime of study at the Chicago conservatory. Mr. Kayser regards her as his most promising pupil, and as an amateur actress Miss Potter is unapproached by any Chicago talent. Indeed, so pronounced have been her dramatic successes that it is rumored she will ultimately assume the role of a professional, but of this there is no absolute assurance.

Miss Potter not only sings, plays both violin and piano, speaks French, fences and is well read in English literature, but she is also very pretty. Hers is a brunette type, tall and lithe of figure, with short, curly dark hair and great, wistful dark eyes. Animation warms her mobile features into great strength, but in repose there is a strain of dreamy melancholy in the face of this girl, upon whom the gods have showered so much of good.

Consumption still remains the most persistently fatal disease of civilization. Recent statistics show that over 54,000 died of this complaint in the British isles alone.

THE DEATH OF MATT MORGAN.

It Was the Result of a Cold Contracted While at Work.

Matthew Scegerville Morgan, better known to the public as Matt Morgan, who died recently in New York city, had an eventful life and did much during his career to elevate the standard of artistic work. He was born in London, England, fifty-one years ago, and from his father and mother, who were both actors and musicians, he inherited a wonderful talent for mimicry. He passed his youth in the study of scene painting and followed that profession for some years at the Princess theatre in London. Subsequently, as correspondent of the Illustrated London News, he travelled in Europe, Asia and Africa. Next he was identified, as draughtsman, with the publication of The Tomahawk and Fun, two humorous papers of London. In 1870 he became political cartoonist of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper at New York, and later on returned to his original profession of scene painting. He was the founder of the Matt Morgan Art Pottery company and the Cincinnati Art Students' league. His death resulted from a cold contracted while at work on the decorations of the new Madison Square garden in New York city.

The Glutton Alone Escaped.

The New Jersey hen has other qualities besides the egg laying one to recommend her to consideration. The other day a train on the Greenwood Lake railroad was approaching a farm crossing with a brood of eleven lively chickens found herself and her family directly in front of the locomotive. There was very little time to be lost, and the hen just made it. With wings and voice she urged the chickens out of danger. Ten of the little things were driven off the track by the old hen, and she was just beginning to cackle a self congratulatory note when she discovered that her eleventh charge was wrestling with a bug a few yards in front of the pilot. Instantly she flew back, and with a blow of her maternal bosom sent the dilatory chicken flying through the space to safety; but she had no time to look and a second later she was a shapeless mass of feathers.

The dreariest part of the tragedy, however, lay in the infantile determination of the ten chickens on the other side of the track to follow their mother, for they were all disintegrated by the wheels of the cars. The only one saved was the chicken whose gluttony had caused the catastrophe.

How the Sea Swallows the Land.

There is a broad lowland, writes Professor McGee, stretching from Sandy Hook to Cape Henry, and another washed by Mississippi sound, upon which the sea is encroaching; they are wave fashioned plains, but strangely enough from their ocean and ocean reclaims its own. Already its octopus arms have seized the lowlands in horrid embrace, and day by day, month by month, year by year, generation by generation, the grasp is tightening, the monster creeping further and further inland. Each average year the water sneak takes a rod. The seaside cottage with a broad lawn before it has an "expectation of life" of a decade or generation; but the cottage at the verge of the cliff may go in a year and must go in a lustrum, unless human devices outwit and overpower the waves for an exceptional period. On most other eastern and southern coasts the waves are also encroaching, but their progress is slower. And the ocean's power is too great for puny man to oppose successfully; he can only provide against, and slowly retreat before, the invasion.

Still an Admirer of Clay.

In these later days it is a matter of wonder to note the reverence and affection with which the old time political leaders inspired their followers. Col. Michael King, living not far from Lexington, Ky., closed his career as a voter after Henry Clay's defeat for the presidency. He still blazes out with wrath whenever discussing the methods used to triumph over "Harry of the west." The other day he read an account of the manner in which his political chief was beaten at the Whig convention of 1848. Finishing the narrative, he stepped to the fire place and taking down his rifle turned to his grandson and sternly asked: "Are any of them scoundrels alive?" The young man, alarmed lest his grandfather should start off in quest of the parties who defeated Clay, hastily answered: "No, grandfather, there isn't any of them left; they all went to—to Hades years ago." "The Lord's will be done!" piously ejaculated the octogenarian colonel, as he replaced the rifle on its hooks.

What the Hand Indicates.

Professor Mosso, an Italian physiologist, has made some interesting investigations, based on the idea that the hand varies in size with the amount of blood present in it at any moment. In his first experiments the hand was placed in a closed vessel of water, when the change in the circulation produced by the slightest action of the body or brain, the smallest thought or movement, was shown by a rise or fall in the liquid in the narrow neck of the vessel. With a large balance, in which the horizontal human body may be poised, he found that one's thoughts may be literally weighed, and that even dreams or the effect of a slight sound during slumber will turn the blood to the brain sufficiently to sink the balance at the head. The changing pulse even told him when a professional friend was reading Italian and when Greek, the greater effort for the latter duly affecting the blood flow.

The Brother of Thomas Carlyle.

Different views are taken by different people of the same person. A case in point is that of James Carlyle, the farmer brother of Thomas Carlyle, who has just died in England. Of him Thomas has put it on record that he was an "excellent old admirable specimen," whatever in the depreciatory language of brotherhood that may mean. Another witness has left a more enduring testimonial. He was a roadman of Ecclefechan, who, on being asked about the same, replied: "A worthless character! Has written a wheen books that naebody understan's; but there's his brither Jamie, o' Scotsbrig, he's a man—he sends mair siller to the puir folk than ony other farmer in the district."

Sir James Hector, noted in New Zealand for his scientific attainments, deplores what he describes as "the period athletic mania which has arisen in the Australias." He says that "to be a hero in the colonies one must excel, not in brain work, but in the training of the muscles of the arms and legs."

ARRESTED AND CLUBBED.

Policeman Laine's Tussle With a Man Named Hefferan.

Early last evening Lawrence Hefferan, who was intoxicated, became abusive on Peace street and Policeman Laine placed him under arrest. Hefferan resisted bitterly all he and the officer had a very lively tussle. By using his club Mr. Laine finally got the fellow to the station house.

This morning Hefferan was arraigned before City Judge Coddington, charged with drunken and disorderly conduct and resisting an officer. He pleaded guilty to the charges and Judge Coddington imposed a fifteen dollar fine.

He was then arraigned on the charge of habitual exposure, and the Judge held him in $500 bail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

Officer Laine has been ill for some time past, and in his weakened state he was not in condition to cope with Hefferan in a rough and tumble fight. Persons who saw the arrest say that the policeman was justified in using his club and we know that Mr. Laine would not club, anybody without justification. Probably Hefferan's experience last evening will teach him a lesson that he will not soon forget.

In Behalf of Our Post Office Employes.

The Committee on Post Office and Post Roads of the House of Representatives are taking steps to reduce the number of hours of labor of the post office employes.

To this end Postmaster General Wanamaker has had blanks of inquiry issued to the various offices to ascertain the average number of hours the clerks are required to work. In reply to replies from 91 out of 103 first-class post offices, and 498 out of 517 second class, showed that the average hours of duty in the former is ten hours and twelve minutes, and in the latter eleven hours and forty-nine minutes.

The employes in the Plainfield office in common with those of other offices, are very much interested in having their hours reduced, and the administration is arranging to make the time less to a reasonable extent.

The Bicycle Tour.

Captain F. L. C. Martin, of the Plainfield Bi. Club has sent the following circular to the members of the club:

"It has long been the desire of the officers of this club to arrange for a tour embracing several days. Owing, however, to the holidays coming so close on the chance has only now presented itself, and a three days easy touring around Boston and vicinity has been arranged for, leaving New York on Thursday, July 3, and return July 7, on steamer Puritan, Fall River Line, foot of Murray street, at 5:30 p. m., and returning by the same steamer on Monday, July 6th. Those wishing to avail themselves of this grand tour, will kindly notify me by June 27th, so that I can make the necessary arrangements. The entire cost will be about $25. F. L. C. MARTIN, Captain."

Y. M. C. A. Notes.

Members of the Young Men's Auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A., who are interested in the proposed outing at Boynton Beach, to take place Tuesday July 1st, are requested to leave their names at the Association rooms, or with any of the following members: Charles F. Johnson, Harry H. Lowrie Gifford Adams, Vincent Rockwell, Charles Cook, Arthur Veil, Allie Laing and Harry Wells, who have already decided to go into the Y. M. C. A. boys' camp camp at Lake Wawayanda, July 8th to 22d. Although Plainfield has more than the number of delegates to which it was entitled, it is probable that one or two more would be received in case their application is forwarded at once.

On Trial Again.

The second trial of the indictment against Charles Miller, the barber, for Sunday shaving, began in the Union county court of general quarter session at Elizabeth yesterday morning—Judge McCormick presiding. When a much interested crowd was in waiting for the jury, and the counsel for State and defendant watched carefully the arrangements of the box from which the names were to be drawn, and noticed that the whole panel should be drawn from. Two of the regular panel were excused by the court, and the selection began from forty-six names.

Trotting Saturday.

There are several exciting races scheduled for next Saturday afternoon on the grounds of the Gentleman's Driving Park, if weather permitting. The first is between Compton C. Vail's Frank S., and O. T. Waring's Copelot.

The second event will be between Charles Brown's "Banty", and M. Quinn's "Shamrock."

The third event bicker is between C. C. Dewar's bay mare and John Hayes' "Andy." Other races will follow.

Croquet and Bowling Green.

A meeting of the New Brunswick Croquet Association was held at the office of President N. R. Willis, on Saturday evening, at which officers, Millard F. Rose, Sheriff P. W. Pick and George Wyckoff were elected members, and arrangements were made to have the grounds put in order for the play this Fall. The Middlesex Bowling Green Club met at the office of N. R. Willis, on Saturday evening, and resolved to hold a tournament on the grounds at Dunellen, on July 12th.

BOROUGH COUNCIL MEETING.

Two More Borough Streets Ordered Macadamized.

The Borough Council met in Special session at eight o'clock last evening. When Clerk Brokaw called the roll Mayor Pierce and Councilmen Buckle, Emmons, Hegeman, Needham, Suhring and Smalley responded.

Mr. Hegeman from the Street Committee presented his report together with a financial statement of the road fund. The report was received and ordered filed.

Mr. Hegeman then offered a resolution that Bailey street from Somerset to Grove, and Mercer avenue from Grove street to Rockview avenue be macadamized. The motion prevailed.

A communication from Mr. James McGee, requesting permission to withdraw his name from the petition requesting council to macadamize Willow avenue, was read.

Mr. Emmons moved that Mr. McGee be granted permission.

Mr. Smalley moved to amend the motion by referring the matter to the Committee on Streets and Public Health.

Mr. Hegeman moved to amend Mr. Smalley's resolution by receiving the communication and placing it on file.

After considerable debate Mr. Hegeman's motion prevailed and the communication was ordered filed.

Mr. Hegeman introduced a resolution in substance as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Streets be and are hereby empowered to purchase crushed stone for use on the roads from other than Mr. Nevius.

He explained that the resolution did not break the contract with Mr. Nevius but simply empowered the committee to purchase stone from other dealers.

The resolution was adopted and the Council adjourned.

TAXATION IN THIS STATE.

Appointment of a Commissioner to Simplify the Laws.

The last Legislature authorized the creation of a tax commission to consider the whole subject of the taxation of property in this State. There has been scarcely any end to the tax legislation during the last five or six years, but the most earnest effort in the constitutional requirement that taxes shall be imposed by uniform rules has not been met and corporations complain that their property is more heavily taxed than that of individuals, while private parties say that they have to bear a larger proportion than the trusts, railroad companies and other corporations.

The laws are in such a muddle that nobody but the corporation lawyers and the judges of the Supreme Court seem to understand them. To simplify and make them fairer by making them uniform and their enforcement uniformity, the legislature adopted a resolution, offered by Mr. Voorhees, of Union, providing for the commission in question. The Governor was to appoint two members of the commission and the House and Senate were each to name one member. On Saturday June 14th, the Governor named Attorney-General Stockton and Barker Gummere to act in concert with Messrs. Marsh, Voorhees, Gardner and Everitt, previously selected by the House and Senate. Mr. Gummere was elected president of the commission and William P. Martin and ex-Judge William T. Hoffman were retained as counsel. The commission will sit in the several cities of the State, take thousands of pages of evidence and report to the next Legislature.

VETERANS AT SPRINGFIELD.

Celebrating a Revolutionary Battle.

The New Jersey Society Sons of the American Revolution enjoyed a delightful field day yesterday at the charming village of Springfield, in Union county, where they had gone to celebrate the 110th anniversary of the battle of that place. The battle of Springfield was not one of the great conflicts of Revolution, but it was made famous by the successful repulse of a British invasion and by the part played in the battle by the fighting parson Caldwell, whose wife had been brutally shot by the Hessians, and who brought hymn books from the church for wadding for the patriot guns, and who shouted: "Give them Watts, boys! Give them Watts!"

About fifty members of the society were present, headed by Josiah C. Pumpelly, their president; John Whitbeck, registrar; the Rev. Henry G. Smith, the chaplain, and Geo. A. Halsey, Captain Ambrose M. Matthews, George R. Howe and Henry B. Hatfield, of the Committee of Arrangements. The village was alive with interest in the celebration, and houses were decorated with flags. Among those present were four direct descendants of Parson Caldwell, namely, Mrs. William Mulligan, of Palisades; Miss Dorcasa, of Springfield, Ill.; Charles E. Park, Jr., of Englewood, and James Finley Canfield, of Brooklyn.

The ancient Presbyterian church, where the exercises were held and which stands on the site of the original, from which Parson Caldwell shouted his battle words, will seat nearly nearly 350 people, and it was packed. The exercises consisted of a prayer by the Rev. William Hoppaugh, an interesting address by President Pumpelly, an oration by the Rev. W. S. Crowe, singing by a quartet of men from Morristown, and a charming recitation of Bret Harte's "Caldwell at Springfield," by Miss Marie Louise Lyon. The audience was enthusiastic and applauded everything except the prayer. The benediction was pronounced by the Rev. M. C. Read. The church had been lavishly decorated for the occasion with flags and flowers, and three handsome eagles (all of them shot on Springfield Mountain) were introduced in the decorations with good effect. The society and invited guests, including fifty women, were marshaled in columns at the close of the exercises and marched to the Town Hall for a dinner. Here there was more singing of patriotic airs, and entertaining speeches by the Rev. R. G. Smith, the Rev. W. C. Stinson and Col. Charles McDowell, and by two veritable sons of Revolutionary fathers, Benjamin Myer and Edward A. Arnold. The enthusiasm was unbounded.

The officers of the New Jersey Sons of the Revolution are: President, J. C. Pumpelly, of Plainfield; Vice-Presidents, Gen. Stryker, of Trenton; Treasurer, Paul Revere, of Morristown; Secretary, J. Lawrence Boggs, Jr., of Newark; Registrar, John Whitehead, of Morristown; Historian, Andrew D. Mellick, of Plainfield; Chaplain, Rev. Henry G. Smith, of Plainfield.

Those in attendance from this city were Col. Julian Scott, Mr. Andrew Mellick and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Leonard and others.

Prof. Gleason's Exhibition.

Prof. O. R. Gleason, who has deservedly earned the name of "King of Horse Tamers", opened his exhibition last evening before a crowded house consisting of some of our best citizens and they all left with a good impression, except Mr. John Goodwin who endeavored to interrupt the professor by remarks which were regarded by both the professor and the audience as offensive, and resulted in his ejectment. Mr. Goodwin regarded the treatment of the horses as cruel. He was actuated by good motives, but seemed to forget that the end justified the means, and his error in judgment was resented, as stated, by the audience, which quickly saw that it was better to subdue a horse by kind usage by intelligent correction, than to have the horse kill some woman or child or even man who had trusted it. The North Plainfielders regards the Professor as a public benefactor in exercising his skill to do so much good. Mr. Goodwin was ordered out of the pavilion by the professor, and Marshal Coddington removed him. The professor never allows anything in his exhibition that will interfere with his audience, running his entertainments in a strictly first-class manner. The evening programme commenced with a horse afraid of a bicycle. While the bicycle was driven around the circle the professor educated the horse not to fear it. The next exhibition of the professor's wonderful power was a green colt which endeavored to have its own way, but soon found out differently, for the professor drove it before them with perfect ease. Then come two horses, driven double. They were educated so as not to fear exploding fire crackers, drums, the Star Spangled Banner, whistles etc. Next came the educated broncho's, which performed wonderfully. They are about the prettiest of the kind we ever seen here. The closing of the entertainment was the handling of a mustang which was a terrible kicker, but was soon made to understand who was boss. The professor is right, and became peaceful. To-night the terror of Scotch Plains, a vicious horse, will be handled with several other wicked animals. A family matinee will be given to-morrow afternoon for ladies and children.

Tree Foods.

Dr. Felix L. Oswald, speculating on what the world will do when it becomes thickly populated over its whole surface, informs us that we need fear nothing from over population. Fish ponds, he says, can be made fifteen times more profitable acre for acre than the best pastures now are, and they will be so when we understand fish culture as well as the Chinese do.

But the doctor expects more from tree foods than from any other source in the days when the world shall be thickly populated. The principal elements of human food are sugar, flour and fat. Beechnuts yield an oil almost equal to olive oil, while from walnuts and hazel nuts an excellent oil is produced. Besides that at least five varieties of olive can be cultivated in California, and when the olive trees already planted come into bearing we shall have enough oil to supply all the markets of North America. So, when the country becomes thickly populated, we shall be able to get all our fat foods from trees. Then we shall no more be forced to cultivate grain fields as food for the hundreds of thousands of animals annually slaughtered to furnish us largely our fat foods.

Moreover, sugar is obtained from trees, too. There is maple sugar. A certain Grecian plum yields 30 per cent. more sugar than the best cane. More than fifty different orchard fruits abound in saccharine elements, and a number of conifers produce a honey like sap. If we only turned our attention to it we should soon be able to produce tree sugar in abundance, with not a hundredth part of the labor now employed in cultivating the canes, and the trees would occupy nothing like the space filled by the cane plantations.

Then for our flour foods. Land that gives a hundred pounds of potatoes will yield more than 4,000 pounds of bananas and three acres of bananas will support twenty-five men. Chestnuts may be boiled or roasted and ground into flour, and three acres of chestnut trees will yield bread for a family, and in Corsica as a matter of fact nine out of ten farmers alone derive their bread stuffs. Chestnut trees live a thousand years or more. In brief, when we learn to derive our foods from trees and arboreal plants the earth will support ten or a hundred times as many inhabitants as it does now, with only a tithe of the hard work.

Joy That Killed.

Hapless Bernard Reenyl He was an iron molder at Rockland, Ill.; rough and boisterous when intoxicated, but a good fellow withal. On his wedding day he was very merry. He and some friends celebrated the event nobly. A policeman interfered to stop them. A fight followed and the officer was killed. They were arrested, and Bernard was sentenced to imprisonment for life in the Joliet penitentiary. It was a doleful ending of his wedding day. He served out part of the sentence and behaved well—so well that his sentence was shortened. The good tidings were brought to him that he would be free in October. Heeny was overjoyed. After all the nightmare dream of the murder, the dreary days that followed in the state's prison, he was to step forth once more into the world a free man among men. He held picked up acquaintance with Neebe, the anarchist, and on getting the good news hastened to tell him of it. Neebe listened and Heeny talked. But suddenly, in the midst of the story, the speaker threw up his hands and dropped to the ground. When they raised him he was dead. A sudden heart attack, brought on by his excitement, was the cause.

There is one thing this government ought to do, and that is to put an export duty on our rich and beautiful American girls. More gold is going out of the country through them than is coming in through the English syndicates. Within the last few years $44,500,000 of honest American money has gone to Europe through the matrimonial gate to pay the debts incurred by titled blackguards in debauchery. Perhaps by the time a good many more of our richest and most petted American girls have been beaten black and blue and driven insane by their noble foreign husbands, marrying titles will become unpopular even among silly American women. Novel reading is answerable for much of this folly, those idiotic tales in which lords and earls figure. But the lord of real life is like anything but the lord in the novel. There is a story current and believed in Great Britain that a lady with royal blood in her veins has been beaten by her husband. At any rate, it is a very ungrateful return for the prosperity our country enables us to enjoy to take the money her bounty has showered on us across the sea and give it and our fairest girls to brutal libertines. It is indeed

PENSION EACH SOLDIER.

Senator Ingalls Says He Favors That Plan.

AN AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE BILL.

It Passes the Senate—Provisions of the Measure in Regard to Colored Students. Senators Debate the Conference Report on the Dependent Pension Bill.

WASHINGTON, June 24.—In the senate consideration of the agricultural colleges bill bill was resumed. Several amendments which had been offered were withdrawn and Mr. Morrill's amendment was adopted. It provides that in any state in which there has been one agricultural college established under the act of 1862, and in which also there is or may be an educational institution of like character for colored students, aided by the state from its own revenue (however named or styled), there shall be a just and equitable division of the fund to be received under this act made by the legislature. Mr. Blair remarked that the proposition to give colored schools a share of the fund came from a southern senator (Mr. Pugh), and that no northern man had thought of it.

But One College for Mr. Hawley.

Mr. Hawley resented the remark and said that the bill had originally contained a provision that no state should be left out where a distinction of race or color was made. For himself, he would have but one agricultural college in each state, and it would be for every person whom the Lord made to go into the school, but he yielded to this other proposition because it seemed best on the whole. Mr. Ingalls also replied to Mr. Blair's remark. He confessed that a proposition to disburse the fund among white and colored schools could not with propriety come from a northern senator. His reasons for his convictions were against it. The necessity could arise only in a southern state. The senator from Alabama therefore had logically offered his amendment to adapt the bill to a condition of things which existed in the south, and he (Mr. Ingalls) cordially gave his assent to it.

The Bill Passed.

Some formal amendments were made to the bill and it was then passed. It appropriates annually out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated arising from the sales of public lands to be paid to each state and territory for the more complete endowment and maintenance of colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts now established, or which may be hereafter established, in accordance with an act of congress approved July 2, 1862, the sum of $15,000 for the year ending July 30, 1890, and an additional sum of $1,000 over the preceding years, and the annual amount to be paid thereafter to each state and territory shall be $25,000; provided, that no money shall be paid out under this act to any state or territory for the support and maintenance of a college where a distinction of race or color is made in the admission of students, but the establishment and maintenance of such colleges separately for white and colored students shall be held to be a compliance with the provisions of this act. And also provided, that in any state in which there has been one agricultural college established under the act of 1862, and in which also there is, or may be, an educational institution of like character for colored students, aided by the state from its own revenue (however named or styled), there shall be a just and equitable division of the fund to be received under this act made by the legislature.

The Dependent Pension Bill.

The conference report on the dependent pension bill was taken up and Mr. Berry made a speech against it. The practical effect of it would be, he said, to put 90 per cent. of the Union soldiers on the pension roll. It was really a service pension bill, and the chairman of the committee on pensions (Mr. Davis) could not deny that.

Senator Gorman, in opposing the report, said he had heretofore voted for the most liberal appropriations in this line, but he believed there must be a limit. Since 1861 there have been paid in pensions $1,105,328,000, sufficient under proper administration to provide amply and well for all who had served the country.

The pensions expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, were $109,000,000 without counting the expenses of the pension bureau. The pension expenditures under existing law would be not less than $125,000,000; in 1892, $135,000,000.

The Treasury Bankrupted.

He had had an estimate of the expenditure under the pending bill made, and if the additions to the pension roll were to be three-fourths of the survivors, the cost would be $85,848,000 under that section of the bill. The estimate for dependent widows was $6,993,808; for minor children, $448,200, and for dependent parents, $3,812,-000. Add these increases to the $125,000,000 and it would be seen that in fact the treasury was bankrupted.

Mr. Gorman to Mr. Blair.

Mr. Gorman said in reply to a question of Mr. Blair that he did not doubt the ability of the government to replenish the treasury, but prudence, he thought, would require that pension legislation should not run into such extravagance as to increase the taxes of an overburdened people. The Republicans could not go to the country with increased taxation, and they were afraid to go back to the soldiers without this legislation; and yet, as no increased clerical force has been provided in the pension office the proposed legislation would not benefit the soldiers during their lifetime.

Nothing Extravagant That Is Right.

Mr. Davis, chairman of the pension committee, denied the correctness of Mr. Gorman's figures. He said the amount of the increase to enlisted men would be $24,400,000, the amount to dependent widows $105,000,000, the total amount (including pensions to children of surviving widows), $40,254,000. The question of expense, he said, was of no importance. Nothing was extravagant that was that right.

Mr. Gorman in the course of further remarks predicted a deficit of $40,000,000 in 1892 if this bill did not become a law, and of $100,000,000 if it was enacted.

Senator Ingalls' Liberal Pension Views.

Mr. Ingalls said the delay in adjusting cases in the pension office to which Mr. Gorman had referred was not the result of inadequate clerical force, but of the failure of applicants to furnish requisite evidence. He spoke of the sacred obligation of the government and referred contemptuously to "frugal patriots, parsimonious defenders of the treasury." He said he was in favor of removing the limitation in the act granting arrears of pensions. He did not care whether it be a hundred or a thousand millions. He believed that every surviving Union soldier ought to be put on the pension roll for service. He believed that before the last Union pensioner disappeared from the rolls there would have been not less than five thousand millions paid out for pensions; and even then an entirely inadequate equivalent would have been rendered for the service performed. The debate was continued by Senators Teller, Vest, Blair, Turpie, Hawley and Hale.

Mr. Vest, in the course of his remarks charged that the pension roll in Indiana had been swelled because that was a pivotal state, and Mr. Turpie said in reply that he had not heard of any charge in Indiana against the administration of the pension bureau.

At the conclusion of the discussion the conference report was agreed to—yeas, 34; nay, 18, as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Allen, Blair, Call, Casey, Chandler, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Dolph, Edmunds, Evarts, Farwell, Frye, Hale, Hawley, Hearst, Higgins, Hoar, Ingalls, Manderson, Moody, Paddock, Pettigrew, Platt, Power, Sanders, Sawyer, Spooner, Teller, Turpie, Washburn—34.

Nays—Messrs. Barbour, Bate, Berry, Blackburn, Coke, George, Gibson, Harris, Kenna, McPherson, Morgan, Pasco, Payne, Pugh, Reagan, Vance, Vest, Walthall—18.

A conference was ordered on the fortification bill, and Messrs. Dawes, Plumb and Gorman were appointed conferees on the part of the senate.

Mr. Evarts gave notice that the commemorative services in the case of his late colleague, Mr. S. S. Cox, heretofore announced for Thursday next, would take place at 2 o'clock on Tuesday of next week.

Mr. Blair introduced a bill to incorporate the Woman's National Industrial university and School of Useful and Ornamental Arts.

In the House.

WASHINGTON, June 24.—In the house there was a four hour fight over the bill amendatory of the act authorizing the construction of the Baltimore and Potomac railroad in the District of Columbia. On motion of Mr. Blount (Ga.), the clause legalizing the occupancy by the railroad company of the streets and grounds for stations was stricken from the bill. Mr. Hemphill (S. C.) offered a substitute for the section authorizing any part of which the railroad company is to construct a new passenger station at the intersection of Maryland and Virginia avenues and abandon the present station and tracks on Sixth street. Ruled out on a point of order. No final action was taken.

The House Stands Firm.

Mr. Morrow (Cal.) reported the inability of the conferees on the general pension appropriation bill to agree, and at his instance the house insisted upon its disagreement to the senate amendments.

Messrs. Brower, Butterworth and Sayers were appointed conferees on the fortification bill.

TROUBLE AT SCHUYLERVILLE.

Father Heffernan Objects to Electric Light Poles in Front of His Church.

SARATOGA, N. Y., June 24.—The situation at Schuylerville is rather threatening. Father Heffernan, the pastor of the Catholic church, in front of which the electric people are endeavoring to place their poles, has been by the United Press representative and stated his side of the case. He maintained that the electric light people were trespassers, and said that every expedient would be used to prevent the poles from being reset to-day. Of Sheriff Doyoes' action in calling out the militia Father Heffernan spoke in a very bitter tone. "It was fortunate that I was absent during the scrimmage on Saturday," said he. "There would have been trouble if the sheriff had shown up to arrest me. The sheriff will hear from me, however; I shall not fail to pay my respects to him."

President W. D. Rich, of the electric light company, was also seen. He said: "We have the law on our side and intend to erect those poles if it takes all the militia in the state to protect us during the day's work. Nor shall the holes are dug is more than six feet from the church property. We are not trespassing and have the full consent of the village trustees to put up the poles. We will make the attempt at noon today, come what will, and the sheriff is bound to protect us."

Should the sheriff find it necessary to telegraph to Saratoga for the Twenty-second Separate company twenty strokes will be sounded on the Town hall bell—the signal agreed upon for the gathering of the militia at the armory. The company musters eighty-three men. Schuylerville is three miles east of here on the Hudson river. The town has 2,000 inhabitants. County Judge Houghton has granted the electric light company an injunction restraining the village from interfering with the poles. It remains to be seen whether the churchmen will have the backbone to offer physical resistance in the face of the injunction and the threats of calling out the military.

At War with the Whisky Trust.

NEW YORK, June 24.—The wholesale whisky dealers met again to receive the report of the committee appointed recently to devise a plan of procedure against the whisky trust. The report, which was unanimously adopted, recommends that the trust be requested to abandon the rebate voucher system so that dealers can purchase spirits in the open market. If the request is refused the report recommends the formation of a co-operative distilling company with a capital of $500,000, in shares of $100 each, shares to be taken by the wholesale liquor dealers, no subscriber to take less than ten nor more than fifty shares; and that the bylaws be so drawn as to prevent the stock from being diverted to other than the original purpose. A committee will wait upon President Greenhut of the trust, today at the Murray Hill hotel, and make the formal request above referred to. They will report the result to a meeting of the liquor dealers on Wednesday.

A Pittsburg Tragedy.

PITTSBURG, June 24.—Charles Diebold and his wife, whose residence is on South Twenty-first street, have been living together for some time. Diebold went to his home on Monday and asked for some of his clothing. A quarrel ensued. Diebold struck his wife two murderous blows with a hatchet. He buried her supposed lifeless body into another room, kissed his two children and went to the home of his mother on another street. Here he locked himself in a room, slashed his wrists and throat with a razor, inflicting injuries from which he died a few hours later. Mrs. Diebold was terribly cut, but will probably recover.

Prize Fighting in California.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., June 24.—In reply to the recent letter of President Fulda, of the California Athlewe club, the attorney general of this state says that an action brought against the club for the forfeiture of its charter would not settle the question as to the duty of the law officers of the state to see that the laws prohibiting prize fighting are not violated.

CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS.

Frightful Explosion of a Tugboat at Brooklyn.

TWO KILLED AND TWO MISSING.

An Exploding Ammonia Tank at Hoboken, N. J., Kills Henry Drake and Severely Injures Two of His Companions—Several Fatalities on the Railroads.

BROOKLYN, June 24.—The tug Alice E Carew, lying at the foot of Van Brunt street, Brooklyn, was blown to pieces yesterday by the explosion of her boiler. Of her crew of six two were killed, two men are missing and one was badly injured. The following were the killed: James Rodgers, cook; Cesar W. Squires, captain, of Indian River, Conn. Of the missing men, one is familiarly known as "Dutch" and is supposed to have been blown into the water and drowned. The other is known as "Pea Coat Jim," and is supposed to have been thrown into the river and drowned. The injured man is Matthew Bartley, pilot, badly lacerated about the hands and feet.

The Pilot's Story.

Pilot Bartley, who was removed to his home, No. 140 Richards street, Brooklyn, gave the following account of the explosion: "We intended to go out early, and that was my sole reason for returning to the boat. When I got aboard I told 'Dutch' to draw the fire and get up steam, for he acted both as fireman and deck hand. I cannot say whether he followed my instructions or not, as after giving them I went at once to the cabin to sleep.

Awoke in the Water.

"I must have been asleep an hour, when the first thing I knew I was passing through the air. A moment later I found myself in the water. My hands and feet pained me terribly, but I had strength enough left to swim to the pier. I pulled myself out of the water and then lost consciousness. When I came to I found myself safe on the pier. I must have been blown fifty feet into the air, as I remember touching bottom when I came down.

"When I reached the water it was hard work kicking loose from the bedclothes. At first I swam to the old scow, which had tipped away over, and caught hold of her side. When she came up I went up also, as nice as you please. I had just strength enough to reach it."

Frightful Explosion of Ammonia.

HOBOKEN, N. J., June 24.—By the sudden explosion of an ammonia tank in the rear basement of the pork packing establishment of Henry Hertler's Sons, Nos. 67 and 69 Washington street, Henry Drake, aged 45, of No. 252 Henderson street, was instantly killed. Thomas Kelley, aged 25, of No. 323 East Thirty-second street; and J. J. Meker, aged 30, of No. 748 Broadway, all of New York, were seriously injured, the former perhaps fatally.

Henry Hertler, one of the proprietors, had a narrow escape from death. He was buried up to his shoulders by falling timbers, but escaped with slight injury. The force of the explosion knocked down two horses standing in the yard. One of the colts Drake's body was removed to the morgue.

Only the Trainmen Suffered.

The Cause of the Gloom.

"What's the matter, for heaven's sake?" exclaimed the frightened passenger, rising and grasping helplessly about.

"Nothing, madam," replied the conductor of the Chicago suburban train reassuringly. "Don't be alarmed. Sometimes when the cars we're broke through into a tunnel, and sometimes they think there's a terrible tornado coming, but it's neither. The brakeman has just lit the lamps. That's all."

And the polite official cautiously felt his way along through the thick darkness toward the next car.—Chicago Tribune.

A Brutal Joke.

"Is there any change in your pockets?" she asked.

"Yes," said he.

"Well, give me some money."

"I haven't any."

"But I thought you said there was change in your pockets."

"So there is; there was money in there yesterday, now there isn't. What do you call a change?"—Merchant Traveler.

...STIN CORBIN IS OUT.

...e Longer President of the Reading Railroad.

...E GOVERNMENT RACES DOWN.

...Chosen in the Threading Mill ...Race Abandoned—Mr. Gladstone ...ounces His Views on the Government's ...olicy—Sarah Bernhardt Loves Stanley.

LONDON, June 24.—After an interview with Gen. Horace Porter and Gen. Winslow on Friday night, Austin Corbin briefly stated his resignation to the directors of the Reading railroad and followed it up by a brief letter mailed on the Umbria. To those who met last night Mr. Corbin said: "I have made a sudden resolve on my part and it will cause no surprise in America, as I publicly announced my intention to resign before I left. I delayed because I had important business to transact here first.

"I have no definite plans for the future except to leave for Paris to-morrow with my wife and daughter en route for Carlsbad. I may not go further than Paris before being compelled to return to London. My movements, in fact, may be uncertain."

He Owns No Mansion.

Both Gen. Winslow and Porter said they had no knowledge of the intrimacies which suggested Mr. Corbin's resignation beyond the fact that on Friday night he informed them that he had determined to take that step. Gens. Porter and Winslow leave for the continent today. They do not expected to return to America before September.

The Government Racks Down.

LONDON, June 24.—Mr. W. H. Smith in the house of commons last night announced that the government had reached a decision which would probably result in pass the housing clause in the local ...tion bill in full. The clause proposed ...opposition of a certain portion of the ...ary members to the Irish Nationalists, ...ose to extinguishing licenses, and also ...the power be conferred on the county ...cils to purchase and extinguish li...ses.

It also proposed the suspension of the ...ue of new licenses. The first proposal ...e house had approved, as far as England ...ales were concerned, and the government ...ded to proceed with the proposal as re...ding Scotland and Ireland. The pro...al to confer upon the county councils ...power to purchase and extinguish ...enses would not be proceeded with.

Disposal of the Moneys.

In accordance with the government's de...sion the proceeds of the licenses to be ...ed as an endowment by which the moneys ...ised for the extinguishment of licenses ...ld be invested and accumulated until ...ficient sum had been secured. Interest ...ld be applied. The ministry trusted ...t the practical result of the change ...ld be to divert the money annually ...rked for the purpose of extinguishing ...enses under any reform of the licensing ...w that parliament may adopt.

Mr. Gladstone's Views.

Mr. Gladstone thought that the proposed ...endment threatened difficulty. It would ...e better that the government should con...der the propriety of giving up the idea of ...ducting the bill. The issue of no one ...ticular effect, and its withdrawal would in no ...y weaken the position of the government. ...r. Smith said the government could not ...ept the proposal of Mr. Gladstone, as the ...use had received the approval of the ...use by a large majority. (Cries of "Only ...e.") The government, however, ...ught it would be disposed of by parliament. ...r. Smith further said, in answer to a ...estion by Mr. Darling, that parliament ...uld deal with the money as it might ...ose.

Mr. Smith moved the appointment of a ...ect committee to inquire into the ques...n of the confirmation of bills from ses...n to session. Agreed.

De Laveleye on Our Silver Bills.

BRUSSELS, June 24.—M. Emile de Laveleye, in a letter expressing his views on the ...ver question, says that either of the two ...erican silver bills will injure the cause ...international bi-metallism, but neither ...uld possibly injure America. Free coinage, ...he believes, would be less harmful.

NEW LONDON, Conn., June 24.—Arrangements are completed for the 3-mile race between Yale, Columbia and Cornell freshmen at 6:30 this evening. It will be rowed over the lower end of the course from the naval station to Winthrop's Point, and Richard Trimbell will act as referee. DECLINED WITH THANKS.

Col. Robert B. Ricketts Refuses to Be a Gubernatorial Candidate.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., June 24.—Considerable pressure from hosts of friends throughout the state had been brought to bear upon Col. Robert B. Ricketts, of Gettysburg fame, who ran for lieutenant governor on the Democratic ticket in 1886, to allow his name to go before the Democratic state convention as a candidate for governor. Col. Ricketts sailed for Europe on Saturday, and before leaving sent to the publication in The Wilkesbarre Sunday Morning Leader a letter in which he expressed deep gratitude to his friends for their kindly expressions and efforts in his behalf in connection with the gubernatorial nomination, but assured them that it was utterly out of the question for him to allow his name to be used, as his private interests and the condition of those interested in them would positively not permit it. The letter went on to say that if none of the other candidates mentioned enlist the majority in convention assembled that the county of Luzerne had in the person of Hon. Stanley Woodward, the son of an eminent chief justice of the state and the nephew of an eminent judge of the supreme court, and himself an honored member of the bench, a candidate who would have his name inscribed on the banner of democracy as its candidate for governor, and one who would surely lead a contest that would result in victory if victory were possible under any banner; at any rate he would infuse such renewed life and vigor into the ranks of the democracy of the state as has not been witnessed in many years. The letter closed with a reiteration of the impossibility of Col. Ricketts' acceptance of the nomination and a renewal of his assurance of gratitude to his friends.

Kings County's Penitentiary Afire.

BROOKLYN, June 24.—The upper portion of the workshop of the Kings county penitentiary was burned yesterday, causing a loss on the building of $30,000. Contractors interested in the work being done by the convicts lose about $60,000. Over four hundred prisoners were at work in the workshop when the fire was discovered. They made no attempt to escape, and were taken to the main building and locked up in their cells without trouble. The fire is thought to have been caused by spontaneous combustion, as it may have been of incendiary origin.

THE PRIZES OF LIFE.

MANY OF THEM ARE WORTHILY AWARDED TO THE STUDENT.

But Diplomas Have Been Won by Those Who Do Not Graduate from School or College—A Few Notable Examples of Recent Date.

Graduate.

The transitive form of this verb has the following dictionary definition among others: "To admit to an honorable standing." So when the bright young man or woman of today completes a school or college course creditably, and some cloudless June afternoon leaves the rostrum amid a shower of bouquets and with diploma in hand, he or she has a right to feel that honest endeavor has met with well earned recognition, and that the parchment, pompously phrased and sonorously signed by the president and professors of the institute of learning, is of value chiefly as recording the fact that work of a certain nature has been done in a manner advantageous to the student and satisfactory to the preceptor.

But in the ordinary acceptance of the term a large number of people never graduate. That is, they take no scholastic degree, not because of lack of inclination so much as lack of opportunity. Yet life graduates them, or sometimes death, in the broad meaning of the definition "To admit to an honorable standing." Who, for instance, could ask a grander diploma than that awarded to dum Bobillot, soldier of France, hero of Tonquin, who died on the field of honor, and by the sacrifice of his life in firing a countermine secured the safety of a thousand lagured comrades.

The torn and mangled corpse of the young brave rests beneath the sod of a foreign land, but at the capital of the republic he loved and for which he fought stands a statue of the gallant sergeant as a perpetual reminder of the fact that France honors those who fall in her service. Bobillot is depicted as leading a forlorn hope, an act of heroism which brought him the cross of the Legion of Honor. The cross arrived after his latest and fatal deed of daring and was placed upon his heart when the torn form of the gallant youth was laid to rest.

Courageous as Bobillot but more fortunate in the event was Steven O'Connor, a native of New York and a resident of Rockford, Ills., who entered the regular army before the war and fought through the great struggle as a private. He won his diploma in a peculiarly gallant manner by saving the life of his captain on the field of battle in the last year of the contest between the sections. It did not take the form of a degree of master of arts, but that of a second lieutenant's commission, and O'Connor in a higher rank still enjoys the honor gained by daring.

But "peace has its victories as well as war," and Commencement day comes as well to the enduring civilian as to the undaunted soldier. With sorrow and admiration I recall the story of Willis Apthorpe's self sacrifice. He was an obscure but ambitious telegraph operator, stationed at Water Valley, Miss. When the yellow fever desolated the southern country some twelve years ago he stuck to his post while others fled.

DIED WHILE ON DUTY.

He nursed the sick, he buried the dead, he gave courage to the living. Night and day he toiled, one hour at the key, another at the bedside of the suffering. The Chicago Times asked him for daily reports, and no more pathetic picture of endurance ever fled northward along the willing wires than those he sent. One day he telegraphed Managing Editor Dennett: "If I live through this may I have a place on The Times?" Promptly the answer went back: "Certainly. Your splendid work warrants me in offering you a position. Come here whenever you can."

COL. THOMAS JONES.

Next night there was no bulletin from Water Valley. Instead came a brief message to the editor signed by Mrs. Apthorpe, "Have just found Willis lying dead on the floor of the office." Overwork, devotion to duty and miasmatic surroundings had done their work and at the moment his future was assured and a field for his ambition lay displayed before him the modest, self-sacrificing young southerner was called hence to receive from a higher power the diploma he had earned on earth.

So life's lesson must be learned and life's honors gained—sometimes in the class room where no dangers lurk greater than those connected with the wrong demonstration of a problem or the faulty construction of a sentence, and sometimes in stern combat with a visible foe or with unseen but equally deadly disease. All honor to the student who like Solomon seeks wisdom, but let us keep as well in memory the ones who have graduated on other fields than those of learning.

"Bid beat and storm and battle cries
They bravely sought to carve their way;
They fought, and fell, and gained the prize
That marks manhood's commencement day.

For them no broad and lettered scroll
That tells of bookish triumphs won.
They found where war's deep thunders roll
The guerdon of their duty done.

Or else in swamps by fever swept
They grappled with an unseen foe;
And by the sick bed vigil kept
Until the summons came to go.

No roses of the June time bloomed
Beside the ghastly paths they trod;
They walked, severe, sublime, and crowned,
Along the appointed ways of God."

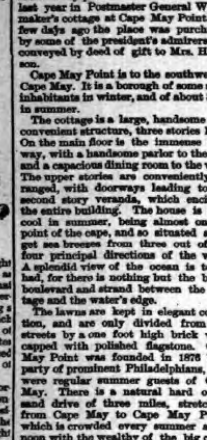
A COTTAGE BY THE SEA.

This Handsome Present Made Mrs. Harrison by Friends.



MRS. HARRISON'S COTTAGE.

President and Mrs. Harrison now know where they will spend the summer. They passed the heated term of last year in Postmaster General Wanamaker's cottage at Cape May Point. A few days ago the place was purchased by some of the president's admirers and conveyed by deed of gift to Mrs. Harrison.

Cape May Point is to the southwest of Cape May. It is a borough of some sixty inhabitants in winter, and of about 5,000 in summer.

The cottage is a large, handsome and convenient structure, three stories high. On the main floor is the immense hallway, with a handsome parlor to the east and a capacious dining room to the west. The upper stories are conveniently arranged, with doorways leading to the second story verandah, which encircles the entire building. The house is very cool in summer, being almost on the point of the cape, and so situated as to get sea breezes from three out of the four principal directions of the wind. A splendid view of the ocean is to be had, for there is nothing but the beach boulevard and strand between the cottage and the water's edge.

The lawns are kept in elegant condition, and are only divided from the streets by a one foot high brick wall, capped with polished flagstone. Cape May Point was founded in 1878 by a party of prominent Philadelphians, who were regular summer guests of Cape May. There is a natural hard ocean sand drive of three miles, stretching from Cape May to Cape May Point, which is crowded every summer afternoon with the wealthy of the big cities in handsome turnouts drawn by thoroughbred steeds.

NAMED FOR GOVERNOR.

Col. Thomas Jones the Nominee of Alabama Democrats.

As Alabama is not a "close" state politically it is altogether probable that Col. Thomas Jones, of Montgomery, who recently received the Democratic nomination for governor, will be the next chief executive of the commonwealth. Col. Jones is a native of Georgia. At the outbreak of the civil war he entered the southern army as a member of the staff of Gen. Gordon, and remained in active service until the declaration of peace. Then he made Montgomery his home, and has resided there ever since. In two crises—the Birmingham riots—he handled the militia under his command with skill and prudence. He has been a member of the Alabama legislature, and his personal and party friends declare that if elected he will fill the gubernatorial chair with dignity and ability.

The pearls found in western rivers are often of peculiar formation. One recently taken from a Wisconsin stream is oddly shaped and speckled. A New York manufacturer, who purchased it, for some weeks puzzled his inventive mind as to the best manner to mount it, and at last decided on forming it into a crab with gold extremities and two small, fancy colored pearls for eyes. The ornament is set as a lace pin.

YOUNG FOLKS' COLUMN.

AMUSEMENT AND INSTRUCTION FOR BRIGHT GIRLS AND BOYS.

How Tommy's Conscience Was Awakened When Lost: Changed Him from a Merry Winner to a Sorrowful Loser at a Game of Marbles.

Through my open window summer breezes stray;
Bring the shouts of school boys with their magic playing;
Merry little urchins, full of fun and noise.
Not a care or trouble. Happy little boys!
Watch that little fellow; hear him gaily jest;
He is very lucky, winning from the rest.

TOMMY STILL IS WINNING.

I hear a girl's voice saying: "Tom, you must not play
And keep the marbles that you win. What will mamma say?"
"Oh," replies young Tommy, with a happy smile,
As he adds more marbles to his growing pile,
"Nobody's a-cheatin'; we're all a-playin' fair,
And I've almost certain mamma wouldn't care."
So the game continues. Tommy still is winning.
And he never questions whether he is sinning.

TOMMY'S LUCK IS CHANGING.

Tommy's luck is changing, and the happy smile
Leaves his face as quickly as the marbles leave his pile.
Now the game is ended and he counts the cost;
Crockeries, nibs and agates, all, oh, all are lost;
"Give me back my marbles!" Tommy wildly weeps.
"Mamma says it's wicked when you play for keeps!"

—St. Nicholas.

How George Ran Away.

I am afraid George was naughty, for all the time he kept thinking how nice it would be to do just as he pleased. Finally he said:

"Mamma, I think I'll run away."

"I do not understand you, dear," she answered.

"I don't like to be bothered," he said, "and I want to be like Whittington."

"Very well, you may go if you are not happy in your home," replied the mother. "I will help you get ready. You need not run away." Then she tied some of his clothes in a handkerchief and put the bundle on a stick over his shoulder, like the picture of Whittington. She kissed him good-by and opened the street door for him. George looked pretty solemn as he went down the steps. In a minute he went back and rang the bell. Mary let him in and he ran into his mamma's room.

"May I sleep on the back porch to-night?" he asked. His lips trembled a little.

"No, dear. Your papa doesn't like to have tramps on the back porch," she replied.

"Then I can stay in the stable with John?"

"Oh, no! You had better run away at once, a long way off, where you can do as you please."

Poor George was in tears now. "Oh, mamma, mamma!" throwing himself in her arms, "I do love you so, and I don't want to run away. I hate to do as I please. May I come home again to live?"

"Dear little boy! Mamma is glad you have learned your lesson with so little heartache," answered the mother as she took her sobbing boy in her arms. George never wanted to run away again.—Nursery.

The Grumbler.

HIS YOUTH.

His coat was too thick and his cap was too thin;
He couldn't be quiet, he hated a din;
He hated to write, and he hated to read;
He hated to cipher in very deed.
He must study and work over books he detested;
His parents were strict, and he never was rested.
He knew he was wretched as wretched could be;
There was no one so wretchedly wretched as he.

HIS MATURITY.

His farm was too small, and his taxes too big;
He was selfish and lazy and cross as a pig.
His wife was too antic, the children too rude,
And just because he was uncommonly good.
He never had money enough or to spare;
He had nothing at all fit to eat or to wear.
He knew he was wretched as wretched could be,
There was no one so wretchedly wretched as he.

HIS OLD AGE.

He finds he has sorrows more deep than his fears;
His grumbles to think he has grumbled for years;
His grumbles to think he has grumbled away
The best part of his fortune, his life's every day.
But, alas! 'tis too late, it is no use to say
That eyes are too dim, that his hair is too gray.
He knows he is wretched as wretched can be;
There is no one more wretchedly wretched than he.

Behavior at Table.

Do not sit a foot away from the table, neither sit jammed up against it.

Do not eat soup from the end of the spoon, but from the side. Do not draw in your breath or make other noises when eating soup.

Do not eat fast, but always take plenty of time.

Avoid taking huge mouthfuls or filling your mouth with too much food.

Never put your knife into the butter, into the salt cellar or into any dish.

Do not play with your napkin, or your goblet, or your fork, or any other article on the table.

Above all avoid speaking when your mouth is full.

TWO REMARKABLE PREACHERS.

One Is the Oldest in the World, the Other Is a Woman.

Here are pictures of two preachers well known in the localities where they reside and each famous in a way—the man for being the oldest living minister in the United States, and the woman because she is the wife of a pastor and is thought by the members of her husband's congregation to be the better pulpit orator of the two.

Rev. John Atkinson lives in an old fashioned country house about a mile from the city of Benton Harbor, Mich., and Bishop Merrill is authority for the statement that he is older than any other preacher in the United States and probably in the world.

Father Atkinson was born Sept. 20, 1797, in the village of Flemington, N. J., and secured his ministerial license Aug. 14, 1814, so that he has had seventy-six years of pulpit work. The year of his ordination he preached through an interpreter to Joseph Bonaparte, ex-king of Spain. After that he went on circuit, as all Methodist ministers had to do in those days. Later he established himself in Kentucky as a teacher. He also did active work in Illinois, forming the first Methodist church at Quincy, and acting as agent of the state conference.

FATHER ATKINSON AND MRS. JACKSON.

Mr. Atkinson preached his last sermon when 86 years of age. His memory is remarkable, and he quotes texts of discourses delivered by him seventy years ago.

Mrs. C. L. Jackson is a regularly ordained minister. So is her husband, the latter being pastor of the Christian Church of the Evangel, on Leonard street near Meserole avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Jackson is an evangelist, and when he leaves town, which is quite often, his wife fills the pulpit. That she does it well is evidenced by the fact that when it is known the sermon is to be from her lips the church is crowded to the doors.

She is a slender, handsome woman of 25, graceful in movement and thoroughly feminine in every way. She has a sympathetic, musical voice and makes a beautiful picture as she stands at the head of the desk. Her hair is light, abundant and curly, her eyebrows dark and her eyes brown. When in the pulpit she wears a black silk gown, with no jewelry. She preached her first sermon when 16 years old. She was at the time a theological student at Mercer, Ind. She is the mother of two little girls and presides over a charming home.

Only an Idle Tale of Elder Days.

One by one the picturesque figures of the past lose their actuality. We are not now allowed to believe that William Tell ever existed save in the imagination of some Swiss romancer, and historians cast serious doubts on the veracity of the chronicles that have to do with tales of good King Arthur and his Table Round. Romulus, Remus and the wolf may live in story books, but the severe writer of facts accords them scarcely an incredulous line in his learned papers relative to the origin of the Roman empire. And now the Colossus of Rhodes must go—that giant figure that bestrode the port and beneath whose feet rich galleys sailed in to the harbor wall.

Messrs. Bartholdi and Eiffel, the makers of the statue of Liberty Enlightening the World and the great tower at Paris, have, after careful calculation, declared that the Colossus, as described by ancient historians, could not possibly have existed, for technical reasons. They say that they have proved, as conclusively as modern science can, that the legend of the Colossus is as mythical as that of Hercules or any other of the dun gods of old.

Of Course Not.

Bilkins—There, old fellow, cheer up! Never mind if she has jilted you. Look around for another. Remember there are plenty of good fish in the sea.

Tompkins (dolefully)—Yes; but, confound it, I didn't want to marry a fish, you know. —Lawrence American.

Too Suggestive.

"Molly," said the young and popular left fielder of the Neverwents, "you're a good girl and I like you. But I wish you wouldn't carry that."

"That what, Billy?" asked his fiancee.

"Mud! It's too suggestive."—Lawrence American.

Of No Use to Him.

Count Otovitchski (handing brakeman his copy of the St. Petersburg Mail and Express)—Perhapski you like to lookovitch at that, my friendski.

Brakeman (glancing at it)—Thanks, colonel, i don't read nuuse.—Puck.

Not Much to Know.

"Do you really think Gus knows his own mind?"

"Of course he does. Why?"

"Oh, its all the same if he does. I always said he didn't know much."—Lowell Citizen.

Proof Positive.

Hotel Guest—Now you are sure this bed is quite clean?

Bell Boy—Yes, sir, the sheets were only washed this morning. Just feel 'em, they ain't dry yet.—Ohio State Journal.

Earning His Fee.

Cora—Oh, doctor, mamma scolded me for holding pins in my mouth. Is it really dangerous if you swallow them.—Epoch.

Hidden Power.

Friend—Your daughter does not look strong.

Father—You should hear her play the piano.—Chicago Times.

A Pertinent Question.

Young Goslin—Mr. Roks, I wish—er—that is, I desire—er—the hand of your daughter.

Roks—What's the matter with the rest of her?—Judge.

Police Notes.

Last evening an unidentified loafer who was under the influence of liquor annoyed pedestrians who happened along Front street by begging money from them. Policemen Flanagan seized him and locked him up in the station house, where he spent the night. When arraigned before City Judge Codington this morning he gave his name as Thomas Grady. He pleaded guilty to the charge and Judge gave him the choice of paying a five dollar fine or spending ten days in the county jail. He will recuperate.

Thomas Dowd engaged in a fight in the Cleveland several weeks ago and a warrant was issued for his arrest. It remained in the hands of the police one night and has since rested secure. But becoming tired of being hunted by the officers he yesterday gave himself up. This morning he pleaded not guilty to the charge and Judge Codington set his trial down for Friday afternoon at ten o'clock.

Policeman Lynch yesterday afternoon found William Walrod of Bound Brook disorderly about the streets in a drunken condition. He promptly arrested him and later in the day Walrod was arraigned before City Judge Codington. He pleaded guilty to the charge and the judge imposed a five dollar fine, which was paid and Walrod went on his way rejoicing.

Overture	Orchestra

The singing of the Misses Sharp was well applied, as was also the violin solo by Mr. Cook. Miss Ferris of New York rendered her recitations in a pleasing manner and at the conclusion of each she was called upon to respond to an encore. The hall has been awarded several medals as prizes for the excellent manner in which she recites and is considered a very good elocutionist.

Sixteen Prisoners Pardoned.

The Court of Pardons held a short session in Trenton yesterday and set free sixteen criminals, among whom was William Hayes, sentenced from Essex county in November, 1889, for one year, for keeping a disorderly house; Ralph Quigley, sentenced from Essex county in May, 1888, for six years, for assault and battery; Morris O'Brien, sentenced from Hudson county in May, 1888, for three years, for breaking and entering; William Reilly, sentenced from Hudson county in July, 1889, for two years, for breaking entering and larceny; William Gardner, sentenced from Gloucester county in September, 1888, for five years, for entering and larceny; Benjamin Hill, jr., sentenced from Gloucester county in December, 1888, for two years, for grand larceny.

We All Congratulate Him.

Ex-Chief Carey yesterday purchased the Dunlap building, corner West Front and Somerset streets, of Mr. Abram Dunlap.

The building is 60 feet front, by 60 feet deep, and four stories high, with cellar, is built of pressed brick, and is estimated to be worth $25,000.

Mr. Carey's friends are taking care of him in good shape. It pays to do your duty, apparently, even though bad men may for a time obtain the upper hand. The day of reckoning is coming in the sweet-by-and by, however.

Base Ball.

The Young Crescents of this city won their second game of ball by defeating the Young Arlingtons yesterday by a score of 23 to 7. The batteries were J. and C. Shipherd for the Young Crescents, G. Mattie and W. Boos for the Young Arlingtons. Score by innings:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7
Young Crescents	11	2	3	2	3	0	1—23
Young Arlingtons	0	0	0	0	1	0	0—1

Trains Delayed.

Yesterday afternoon a schooner which was passing through the drawbridge over the Newark Bay at Elizabethport struck the draw. When the captain of the vessel saw that he could not get through, he ordered the draw opened, which was done by means of the cable which works the draw by using it undue. The mishap delayed all the Central trains for an hour or more.

Westfield School Closed.

The primary department of the Westfield public school held its closing exercises in Library Hall last evening. The programme consisted of recitations, singing, etc. The hall was not large enough to accommodate the large crowd which applied for admission, and many were turned away. The graduating exercises will be held to-night.

Reform Hall Thursday Evening.

The Rev. A. A. Phelps, an eloquent temperance orator, will give one of his best addresses at Reform Hall to-morrow evening, which will be followed by a rousing temperance song service. Admission free. All are welcome.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following real estate transfers were recorded in the county clerk's office:

Cyrus A. Todd and husband, of Plainfield, to Walter Whitehead, of Dunellen, land in Plainfield on the side of Dunellen avenue and Seventh street; 100x200 feet.. 1,500

A GIPSY CARNIVAL.

HOW THE SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS CONDUCTED IT.

Pretty Women in Gipsy Costumes Refresh and Amuse 200 Good People.

The lawn between the residence of Mr. Charles Potter, Jr., and Mr. R. M. Titsworth on West Seventh street last evening presented a very attractive appearance. It was lighted by hundreds of Japanese lanterns and electric lights and was dotted by tents and booths which were peopled over by pretty young ladies dressed in gipsy costumes.

The occasion for such a grand display was a "Gipsy Carnival," given under the auspices of the Ladies Society of the Seventh-Day Baptist church. Fully three hundred persons attended and enjoyed the festivities of the occasion.

As one entered the grounds the first thing that greeted the eye was a large lemonade booth when was presided over by Miss Mabel Potter and Miss Grace Lewis.

Further down the lawn was a spacious tent in which refreshments were served by the obliging young ladies in attendance. They were the Misses Mary and Lulu Lewis, Miss Mabel Mazson, Miss Bessie Titsworth, Miss Ernestine Smith, Miss Ida Spicer and Miss Ida Randolph.

The gipsy well which was at the left as one entered was also well patronized. It was presided over by Mrs. George B. Titsworth, assisted by the Misses Ethel and Edith Titsworth.

There were several other booths which were in charge of beautiful young ladies, all receiving their share of patronage.

Then, too, if a person wanted his or her fortune told a five cent piece would buy the bill, and a little tot would give you a card with your fortune imprinted thereon.

Edison's phonograph was also on exhibition on the lawn, and amused a large number of persons by interpreting songs, some of the most popular being, "Down on the Farm" by George Thatcher, and a solo with a banjo accompaniment by Sam Devere. A selection by Coppe's Seventh Regiment Band was also listened to with much interest.

A short entertainment had been arranged, and shortly after nine o'clock the audience assembled around an improvised stage, which had been erected at the extreme end of the lawn, and listened to the following program with much interest:

1. "A Magic Mirror.
2. An Organ Solo..... Mr. A. L. Titsworth.
3. "The Gipsy Queen's Song"..... Mrs. Edward Stillman and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gorton.
4. "The Gipsy Countess" Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Titsworth, assisted by a full chorus of Young ladies and gentlemen in full costume with undoubted success.

Each number on the programme was loudly applauded, but none of the participants responded to an encore.

The general committee who had charge of the affair is composed of Mrs. A. L. Titsworth, Chairman, assisted by Mrs. N. V. Hall, Mrs. Grace Lewis, Miss Mabel Potter, Miss Florence Potter and Mrs. Geo. B. Titsworth, who deserve much credit. The receipts will undoubtedly handsomely replenish the treasury of the Society.

JOTTINGS.

—Councilman Hageman of North Plainfield has awarded the contract for painting his new residence on Willow avenue to Messrs. Marsh & Ayers.

—Those persons who were chosen to be election officers at the recent municipal and township elections are all amazed by the ballot reform law.

—A meeting of the teachers of the Crescent avenue Sunday-school is called for this evening at nine o'clock to make arrangements for the annual excursion of the school.

—A young girl named Lizzie Rooney, had four of her fingers badly crushed at the carpet works Monday afternoon. Upon examination it was found necessary to amputate two of the digits.

—Four ounces of saltpetre dissolved in a pail of water and sprinkled on the cucumber vines, is said to be an excellent preparation for destroying the little black insects that infest them at this season.

—The flannel shirt is here in all its glory. The one annoying thing about it is that after it is washed you have to look so long before you can find it. In this respect it is not unlike a dollar chunk of tea—Exchange.

—A team of horses belonging to Mr. L. M. French, left standing in an alley just off of Somerset street at about half-past six o'clock last evening became frightened and ran away. They ran across the street and into an alley leading to the rear of the post office, but when they found that a building obstructed their further progress they stopped. No damage resulted.

—Little girls should be taught that it is dangerous to slip tight-fitting rings upon their fingers. At Junction the other day little Gussie Young fainted in school, a result of having a ring upon her finger which bugged so tight as to cause the finger to swell considerably and pain her beyond endurance. Principal Pierson sent for an instrument to clip the ring, and thus relief came to Gussie.

—The victims of lightning have been unusually numerous during the present Summer, owing to the remarkable prevalence throughout the country of storms involving electrical disturbances. It has been mathematically demonstrated that the chances of any individual being struck by lightning are about as one to 250,000, but this does not entirely reassure the nervous man who is afraid to be caught under a tree in a thunder storm.

—The case with which a horse, however vicious, can be subdued and made as gentle as a kitten, and to follow you around like a dog, when handled intelligently and made to understand that you are master, was very clearly demonstrated by Prof. Gleason at his exhibition last evening, and is to be demonstrated again to-night. Prof. Gleason informed his audience last night that he had broken in upwards of 12,000 horses, keeping a record of the time, plans and circumstances, as well as the owner of each.

G. A. R. ENCAMPMENT.

Arrangements for the Reception of the Philadelphia Post.

Winfield Scott Post No. 73, G. A. R., held a regular encampment last evening. After the usual business of the meeting was transacted the committee appointed at a previous meeting to make arrangements for the reception of Winfield Scott Post No. 114 of Philadelphia, which is to visit Plainfield next Saturday evening, reported that they had completed their programme. The visiting post will arrive at this city on a special train at 7:26 p. m. There will be an informal reception at the depot, after which both posts will proceed to the rooms on East Front street, where an open encampment will be held. At the conclusion of the regular business the members will indulge in a short parade. The line of march is as follows:

Form on Front street near Park avenue and march to Peace street, thence to Crescent avenue; to Park avenue; to Front street; to Madison avenue; to Second street; to Amphion Hall, where a banquet will be served.

Past Department Commanders from New York and Pennsylvania will be present and the Department Commander of New Jersey and his staff will also attend and participate in the festivities.

Trying to Account for the Warm Winters.

Sergeant Dunn, of the Signal Service, stated recently in a scientific lecture that the recent phenomenally warm and moist weather, both Winter and Summer in the Northern States, is due to recent but permanent changes. He, in connection with the scientists employed by the Government, has come to the conclusion that the changes are due to the increase of farming, tree planting and irrigation in the West. Large areas, once dry and bare of vegetation, are now clothed with verdure during considerable portions of the year. The winds which once swept over these lands were dry and hot, now they are cool and moisture-laden. The storms which have origin in the gulf coast, sweeping northeasterly, but are driven further North than heretofore by these changed conditions, and instead of terminating on the Atlantic near Cape Cod they pass on through Canada and New Brunswick. In their course they drag after them the warm humid atmosphere of the tropical regions, thus producing the copious rains and waves of warmth which paralyze the coal trade.

The Government experts are working earnestly on the problem, endeavoring to establish data to guage the truth or falsity of this theory, and on the result vast interests depend. With mild winters like the past as a rule rather than an exception, the clothing merchants must modify his orders, and heavy ulsters and thick wearing apparel will continue to be a part of his stock. The coal producing regions must feel the effects in a lessened demand for their output, and must either reduce the supply or seek new market.

The Patriotism of Plainfield.

Less than a year ago the citizens of Plainfield, irrespective of creed or politics, built in this city a monument to the memory and honor of its heroes among the roll of those who had died for their country. The sum of $10,000 was soon subscribed, the design selected and $8,000 paid for the erection agreed upon. It is conceded as one of the handsomest monuments that can be devised, and its cost will be up towards $10,000.—Hunterdon County Democrat.

Brother Runkle, you are a little previous. The project of erecting a monument has been under consideration for a year past, and the design has been selected, but the "necessary" for the erection of a memorial monument has not as yet been subscribed for the simple reason that the Committee which has charge of the affair have not as yet called upon the citizens for subscriptions, and furthermore the probable cost will be $20,000 instead of $10,000.

PERSONAL.

Miss Clara Dunn of Park avenue left yesterday for Canatauqua to attend the Summer assembly at that place.

Mr. and Mrs. George Fairchild of Grandview avenue have returned from a week's stay at Asbury Park.

The Rev. J. B. Cleaver, the pastor of the First church of Christ of this city, preached in the Congregational church at Bound Brook Sunday evening.

Miss Florence Peitro, of Brooklyn, Miss Nellie Boice of Bound Brook and Miss Anna Boice of Marlboro, are visiting at the residence of Dr. Charles R. Theiss on West Front street.

Mr. W. R. Mattox, the property-man at Music Hall became suddenly ill on Front street yesterday morning. He was taken to his home on Park avenue and his condition is reported as much improved to-day.

The Rev. E. H. Jenkins, the pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Plainfield W. D. Murray of the Y. M. C. A., accompanied by the Misses Murray sailed for Europe to-day. They will return about August 20.

Raynor Conklin, who died on Sunday, twenty years of age, died at his home on Dean street this afternoon at 1.30 o'clock, from that dreaded disease consumption. Deceased had been employed as foreman in Runyon's factory last. He was a member of Franklin Council, J. O. U. A. M.

A telegram was received in this city early yesterday announcing the death of Harold, the two-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. David A. Zeigler, at the home of its parents in Denver, Colorado. Death resulted from cholera infantum. The little child was the only surviving Miss Carrie Laing, a sister of Mr. H. J. Laing of West Front street, and she has the sympathy of a large circle of friends in this city in their bereavement. Mr. Ziegler has not visited Plainfield since his little son was born, but intended so doing this fall.

—Seven young men from this city have decided to go to the Y. M. C. A. encampment of college students to be held at Northfield, from July 25th to July 30th. Those who are considering the matter and will probably attend for some portion of the time. Information received by the Committee to-day will be cheerfully given by W. D. Murray, J. A. Robinson, A. R. Holmes, C. B. Brown, or at the Y. M. C. A. rooms.

BRICK PAVEMENTS.

What a Business Men's Association Says.

The Business Men's Association of Evansville, Ind., has been investigating the brick pavement question and makes the following report:

Upon full investigation we are convinced that the days of the macadam, broken rock, for graved street, of cobblestone of all three, are numbered, and that the brick street made of the proper quality of brick, regular building stone, upon proper foundation, is the coming street. It is attractive, lasting, free from dust, and all things considered, cheaper than any other pavement known to the world. We recommend that all improvement of streets by boulevarding, graveling or macadamizing, by the construction of telford, stone or gravel, no matter of what kind, shall immediately cease. Money spent in such improvements is wasted. It is better and more economical that the improved streets we have should not wear out; when worn out they ought to be paved with brick.

The Advance of Harriman, Tenn., has the following to say on the brick pavement question:

The Advance, from actual observation and from the experience of others, is a strong advocate of brick pavements, as being the most lasting, most durable, most kept in repair, and therefore the cheapest.

Board of Education Meeting.

The Board of Education held a meeting in the Franklin school building Monday evening. Trustees Kirkner, Murray and Probasco, Clerk Cook and acting Principal Goodrich were present. It was decided to station the janitors of the various schools at the entrance to Music Hall to prevent persons entering during the reading of essays. The total amount for tuition received for the year from scholars living outside of the school district was $1,882. Miss S. Lena Bass was appointed a teacher in the third grade Grammar school. After considerable debate it was decided, on motion of Dr. Probasco, to pay the teachers who were compelled to be absent from school on account of illness.

A letter from Professor Tyler of Amherst College, was read recommending Edwin S. Hunt an Amherst senior for the vacancy in the High School corps caused by the resignation of Edward H. Lewis. Mr. Goldrich was instructed to send for him, to meet the Board on Friday evening.

S. of T. Election.

At a regular meeting of Howell Division, No. 97, Sons of Temperance, held last evening, the following officers were elected for the ensuing quarter:

W. P.—Mrs. Mercer.
W. A.—Mrs. P. Manchester.
R. S.—Albert Johnson.
A. R. S.—W. W. West.
F. S.—W. Rickards.
Treasurer—Mr. Hackelfelow.
Chaplain—Mrs. Korwin
Conductor—Miss Jessie Clum.
Assistant Conductor—W. G. Mosier.
Inside Sentinel—A. H. Drake.
Outside Sentinel—Mrs. G. Rittenhouse.

Ten candidates for membership were initiated.

Drowned at Bound Brook.

The seven-year-old daughter of Captain McNulty was drowned in the canal at Bound Brook Monday. The body was recovered toward night.

Her father was taking his wife and family through on this trip, and had tied up for dinner, and the little girl strayed away from their sight with above result. A cable was stretched across Bound Brook and the remains were taken with the parents to their home for interment.

The family consisted of his wife and three brothers to the little girl that was drowned.

—It is thought that Vice-Chancellor Bird will finish taking testimony in the Hyde-Franch mill-dam case to-day.

—Sheriff Glasby yesterday morning took Harry Banner and Wm. Black to the State prison. Banner goes for one year for larceny from the person, and Black ten years for stealing a horse and carriage.

—The last socials of the Young People's Society of the Park avenue Baptist church will take place in Bound Brook at the church last evening. The affair was well attended and a very pleasing programme was rendered.

—"Installment No. 1," of an extensive list of useful articles for home and outing, cheap, appears in Edsall's advertisement in another column. Others will follow until the whole list is completed. He says you can save money by making a note of this.

—The Soldiers' Memorial Monument Committee will hold its meeting in the Republican Association rooms Friday evening instead of Thursday evening as heretofore announced, and it is specially desired that all the members be in attendance, as business of importance is to be transacted.

—The third of the series of bargains which are being offered by Mr. A. D. Van Sciver is given this week in oil cloths. The prices quoted in his advertisement he considers ought to be inducements enough to bargain hunters. The reductions in wall paper are continued this week.

—Some Bloomsbury people are not so happy as they thought they were going to be, but they know more than they did. An agent was in that town the other day selling books, and at each call he presented the purchaser a pendant mirror, to be delivered a week later day, and a sample of which he carried with him. The day arrived but the agent did not. Look out for him.

—The Central Railroad Company has fastened the iron gates for the East Bound Brook crossing but the electric light wires interfere with the passage of the gates, and they remain in "innocent disrobe." To close gates in such short distance from the Lehigh Valley crossing without the two roads working in unison would form a death trap for the unwary traveler also, rendering a signal to warn, would be obliged to stop in the act and get caught by the cars. Should one set of gates close the two complete tracks and one half the exposure would be shared by each. Until such agreement is made it is doubtful if the Central Railroad gates will be operated.

The First Artificial Ice.

Forty tons of artificial ice from Philadelphia, said to be the first in Plainfield, was received yesterday by Messrs. Newton P. Healey & Co., the enterprising owners of the meat market, No. 96 Somerset street. Each cake is 14 inches thick, 315 pounds to a cake, and, as clear as crystal.

—The Plainfield Bicycle club has been invited to participate in the parade of the King's County Wheelmen which is to take place in Brooklyn to-night.

Our College at Athens.

Few Americans are aware that we have a college at Athens. Well, we have. It is called the American School of Classical Studies. It is supported by various co-operating colleges in the United States, and its objects are the attainment of a high scholarship in classical studies and the exploration of sites in Greece famous in ancient history. The value of the school in advancing American classical scholarship cannot be computed. Here professors from our colleges who have made such studies as are possible to them in this country go for a year or two and live in the classic surroundings that will bring before them vividly the scenes of antiquity and the dry type of their text book's records.

Here, too, the ambitious student, who expects in his turn to become a teacher of the classics, can go to complete his studies. Tuition is free to graduates of the co-operating colleges and to students who are specially recommended. The Archæological scholarship of Michigan university allows $500 a year for two years as a prize to the best Greek scholar of the university. This will enable him to realize what must be the heart's dearest wish of a brilliant classical student—the study of the Greek language and antiquities at Athens. Yale has a similar scholarship.

The permanent director of the school is Dr. Waldstein, of Cambridge university, England. He spends part of each year at the school. In addition there is an annual director, appointed each year from one of the co-operating colleges. Next year the director will be Professor Richardson, of Dartmouth.

The school has already made valuable original explorations of ancient ruins. In one of its enterprises all rich Americans who desire to add to the luster of American scholarship ought to co-operate. The Greek government offers to the United States for $80,000 the exclusive privilege of exploring the ruins of Delphi, where the great temple and mystical oracle of Apollo were. The smaller village of Amyri is built on the ancient site. But buried far underground are treasures of antiquity that will throw bright light upon the most beautiful civilization the classic world knew.

French Divorces.

The London Times has solemnly collated a table of figures on French divorces, which it publishes presumably as a warning to its British readers never to let the Straits of Dover be tunneled, so as to bring the heathenish Frenchmen any nearer to England. According to these statistics, America is in danger of losing its belt as the champion divorce country. Bad as we are, another nation is worse. We are willing to hand the belt over to France with alacrity. The Times says:

> The percentages of divorces for the whole of France was 1 for every 43 married couples, but in Paris it was 1 in every 20, and in the other departments in which divorces were most frequent were the Seine-et-Oise, the Aube, the Bouches du Rhone, the Var, and the Nord, with several other departments, such as the Côtes-du-Nord, the Loiret, the Ravale, the Aveyron, the Cantal, the Corrèze and the Basses Pyrénées, had only one case of divorce in every 5,000 marriages. With regard to the ages of the parties divorced, there were more cases among men between 40 and 50, while among the women there was little difference at the three periods of 30 to 40, 40 to 50, and 50 to 60. Young divorces is sought for at an earlier age among the population of the country than among that of Paris, the following table with regard to the ages of divorced persons will, however, speak for itself:

	Men.	Women.
Under 20	10	105
From 20 to 25	186	1,146
From 25 to 30	1,061	2,951
From 30 to 35	2,230	3,415
From 35 to 40	3,009	3,125
From 40 to 50	4,561	3,561
Over 50	3,032	1,926

It is further stated that the average duration of marriages in France is diminishing, having fallen from fifteen years in 1884 to thirteen years in 1889. Of the divorces granted since the introduction of the law of 1884 (still more at a request of the husband; and in just half the cases before the courts the husbands was seeking the marriage, while as regards the causes 32 per cent. were on account of complete infidelity and 43 per cent. on account of desertion and cruelty.

Electrician O. T. Crosby read at a meeting of the electrical engineers a paper on the possibilities of long distance electric railways. Lieut. Crosby believes in them. He is satisfied that the electric motor will be better adapted to the high speed of long distances than to street cars. The street car motor is incumbered with complicated gearing that are necessary in order to reduce its speed to the rate proper upon a crowded thoroughfare and to stop it quickly. This lessens its "commercial efficiency." For long distance traction, however, this gearing would not be necessary, thus lessening the cost of the motor materially and making the commercial efficiency of the electric locomotive equal to that of the steam motor.

Hereafter the Reformed Presbyterians will decline to vote because there is no formal recognition of God in the constitution of the United States. Perhaps the best way to obtain the recognition of God in the constitution is to first cultivate his presence in the heart.

THAT SILVER CONTEST.

It Again Reigns Supreme in the House.

SENATE AMENDMENTS THE ISSUE.

They Will Be Rejected or Concurred In.

Important Bills Passed by the Senate, and the Pension Appropriation Bill Sent to President Harrison.

WASHINGTON, June 25.—The house committee on coinage, weights and measures, by a vote of 6 to 5, reported the silver bill back to the house, with a recommendation that the senate amendments be non-concurred in and a conference to be asked. Mowed (Kas.), and Hatch and Hatcher (Pa.) were not present. A lively debate ensued and is still in progress. This afternoon a vote on the non-concurrence of the senate amendments is to be taken.

Mr. Bland (Mo.) moved that the house concur in the senate amendments. With these motions pending the debate began.

Chairman Conger's Charges.

In presenting the house committee's report Mr. Conger charged that free coinage under the senate bill means a loss of 30 per cent. premium on the silver of the world. Mr. Conger charged that under the senate bill the $150,000,000 appropriated for pensions would depreciate and the gallant pensioners would suffer a loss. Mr. Conger charged that the silver (Nev.) and Hatcher (Pa.) hired lobbyists to urge a free coinage bill.

No Lobby, says Mr. Bland.

Mr. Bland said that there was no speculation in gold and if there was free coinage of silver there would be no speculation in that either. He denied that there was any lobby. If he could not get free coinage he was willing to accept the house bill with an amendment providing that the notes outstanding should not be limited to the cost price of the bullion and another amendment providing for a mint in Colorado. He predicted that under free coinage New York would take the place of London as the world's exchange for gold and silver.

Cheaper Money and Larger Prices.

Mr. Kerr (Ia.) criticised some provisions of the senate bill especially the provision that bullion owners might receive coin or certificates. Mr. Hill said he did not believe the existing conditions warranted free coinage.

Mr. Peel (Ills.) argued in favor of free coinage and said the house bill treated silver as a commodity. Mr. Townsend (Cal.) said that if he could not get free coinage he would vote for a four and a half million bill as an improvement on the present law. Mr. Kelly (Kan.) said the men who held the bonds and mortgages opposed the silver bill because it meant cheaper money and larger prices for produce.

Inflation Versus Contraction.

Mr. Bartine (Nev.) said that among his people the feeling in favor of free coinage permeated all classes. He felt it his duty to vote for any measure that pointed in the direction of free coinage. If it meant inflation he drew the line at a law that would consume the entire American silver product, for he feared inflation more than he did contraction. Mr. Wheeler (Ala.) favored the passage of the senate bill.

In the Senate.

WASHINGTON, June 25.—In the senate the conference report on the naval appropriation bill was agreed to. The postoffice appropriation bill was then taken up and considered. The following are the amendments recommended by the committee on appropriations: Increasing the item for mail depredations, postoffice inspectors' and expenses from $250,000 to $300,000; increasing the item for clerks from $7,300,000 to $7,500,000; reducing the item for mail bags and keys from $850,000 to $35,000; increasing the item for transportation of foreign mails from $694,000 to $712,000.

Mr. Wanamaker Criticised.

Speaking to the first amendment Mr. Gorman condemned the postmaster general's plan for having additional detectives to inquire into such small matters as whether the person of a postoffice is satisfied that the business of the office is reasonably well performed, whether the postmaster employs members of his own family, whether intoxicating liquors are sold in the postoffice building and other small matters. He thought that there was something ridiculous about all this. The amendment was agreed to.

Postoffices on Ocean Steamships.

In connection with the last amendment Mr. Plumb sent to the clerk's desk and had read a communication from Mr. William Potter who had been deputed by the department to arrange with the British, French and German governments for international mail service by transatlantic steamships analogous to railway postoffices. The English government, Mr. Potter says, had submitted a proposition, but had made a condition that the United States adopt the parcel post—a question which he had no power to consider, as it affected tariff arrangements.

The French officials declined the proposition, alleging their short tenure of office. But the German officials had accepted the proposition, and the amendment was to carry out the arrangement on the two lines of German trans-atlantic steamers—the United States defraying one half of the cost. Mr. Gorman opposed the amendment. The amendment was advocated by Messrs. Blackburn, Plumb, Hawley and Frye—the discussion drifting into the question of subsidy for carrying ocean mails. The amount was agreed to and the bill was passed.

Important Bills Passed.

The senate then proceeded to the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. Mr. Sherman, from the committee on foreign relations, moved to increase the compensation of the minister to Turkey from $7,500 to $10,000. Agreed to.

The amendment relating to the work of the International American conference was reached and Mr. Morgan and Mr. Reagan made speeches in praise of the Mexican and of the Central American and South American republics. The amendment, proposed by Mr. Edmunds, to limit the responsibility of the United States in the matter of the intercontinental railways was agreed to. All new amendments having been agreed to the bill was passed.

The Pension Bill Goes to the President.

The senate then took up and adopt regulations preventing and in relation to collisions at sea were passed. These bills embody the rules agreed to by the International Maritime conference. The conference report on the pensions appropriation bill having been presented the senate receded from the amendment for the appointment of two additional pension agents, and the pension appropriation bill now goes to the president.

TRUSTS ARE ILLEGAL.

Decision of the New York Court of Appeals Against the Sugar Trust.

SARATOGA, June 25.—The court of appeals in deciding in the sugar case is strongly against the trust. The judgment of the lower courts dissolving the trust are fully affirmed. In the course of a long opinion Judge Finch says:

"In all of the points which were reviewed it is found that the corporation was doing a public injury and, in avoiding the state law which declares the limit of corporate rights, proved unfaithful to its charter and duties. It is a violation of law for corporations to enter into a partnership as shown in the case of Whitteton vs. Upton (10 Gray, 580), which furnishes the reasons at length.

"If the trust had been properly formed as a corporation under the laws, the twenty separate companies would have been dissolved and not remain in existence as in this case. The present corporation or trust puts upon the market a capital stock proudly defiant of actual values and capable of unlimited expansion.

"It is now time for the state to respect the rights of ownership, and quite another thing to add to that possibility a further extension of the corporate franchise creating artificial persons to aid in such aggregations. If corporations can combine and mass their forces in a solid trust with little added to capital already in, without limit to magnitude, a tempting and easy road is opened to enormous combinations, vastly exceeding in number and strength any possibilities of individual ownership. The law seeks to protect individuals rather than combinations."

Concluding, the opinion says:

"The defendant corporation has violated its charter and failed in the performance of its corporate duties and that in respects which are material important as to justify a judgment of dissolution. Having reached that result, it is needless to advance into the wider discussion over monopolies and the problems of political economy. Our duty is to leave them until some proper emergency compels their consideration without either approval or disapproval of the material upon which the court labored. We are enabled to decide that in this state there can be no partnerships of separate and independent corporations, whether direct by the holding through the medium of a trust; no substantial consolidation which avoids and disregards the statutory provisions and restraints, but that manufacturing corporations must be, and remain several as they were created, or one under the statute. The judgment appealed from is affirmed with costs." All of the court concurred.

TO DIE AT LAST.

Murderer Kemmler Must Suffer the Electric Shock.

SARATOGA, N. Y., June 25.—The court of appeals has decided that Murderer Kemmler must die by electricity at the hands of Warden Durston, of Auburn prison. The case was entitled "The people of the state of New York ex rel., appellant, vs. Charles F. Durston, agent and warden of the Auburn state prison, respondent."

W. Bourke Cockran, of New York city, argued the case for the appellant, and contended that chapter 489 of the laws of 1889 is unconstitutional and void, because in making the agent and warden of Auburn prison the custodian and executioner in this case it assumed to confer the sheriff of Erie county of the powers conferred upon him by the constitution.

The appeal was opposed by Attorney General Charles F. Tabor. Immediately at the close of his argument, which was very brief, Chief Judge Ruger dismissed the motion for appeal and ordered that Kemmler remain in the custody of Durston and that he (Durston) proceed to execute the sentence.

Mr. Cockran, after leaving the court room, was asked what the substance of the decision was, and he replied: "The substance of it is that the great experiment is to be tried."

Nothing Will Save Him.

BUFFALO, June 25.—District Attorney Quimby has notified counsel for Kemmler that he will be produced for sentence on July 8. Mr. Hatch, counsel for the prisoner, stated that he knew of nothing which would save him from his fate.

A New Original Package Bill.

WASHINGTON, June 25.—At a meeting of the house committee on the judiciary it was decided to report a substitute for the senate original package bill. The substitute is as follows: That all property or article of commerce is imported into any state from any other state, territory or foreign country, and held or offered for sale the same shall then be subject to the laws of such state; provided, that no discrimination shall be made by any state in favor of its citizens against those of other states in respect to the sale of any article of commerce, nor in favor of its own products against those of like character produced in other states, nor shall the transportation of commerce through any state be obstructed except in the necessary enforcement of the health laws of such state." Representative Reed (Ia.) will prepare the report on the bill. Representative Adams (Ills.) was the only member of the committee who voted against the substitute. He will probably prepare a minority report. The substitute applies to all articles of commerce, while the senate bill was intended to apply only to fermented, distilled and other intoxicating liquors.

Election Officers on Trial.

JERSEY CITY, June 25.—The trial of the four election officers of the First district of Jersey City, who were indicted for conspiracy, was continued yesterday. The first witness called was Jamison T. Altemus, who declared that on the night prior to the election last fall he visited the headquarters of the Democratic county committee, and Tax Commissioner Michael J. O'Donnell, chairman of the committee, offered him a package of the Joker ballots. He saw they were stamped as if they had passed through the election box and declined to take them.

A Frightful Boiler Explosion.

COLCHESTER, Ont., June 25.—Thomas Quick and George Craig were instantly killed, and Thomas Craig, Peter Wright, Frank Bondy and ——— Lindsay, an engineer, were fatally injured here by the explosion of a boiler in Thomas Quick's factory. Low water in the boiler is the supposed cause of the accident.

He Shot His Wife's Paramour.

PHILADELPHIA, June 25.—Dennis Crowley was shot and mortally wounded last night by Joseph Beucher in front of the latter's saloon at Fourth street and Girard avenue. The cause of the shooting was Crowley's intimacy with Mrs. Beucher.

He Was 107 Years Old.

ROCKLAND, Me., June 25.—Israel Gregory died June 24 at his residence at Spruce Head. He was 107 years old in October and was a pensioner of the war of 1812.

CORNELL FRESHMEN WIN

Yale Crosses the Line Two Boat Lengths Behind.

BUT PICKS THE BASEBALL PLUM.

She Defeats Harvard in the Intercollegiate Struggle by a Score of 7 to 1—Yale Seemed to Lack Confidence and Victory for Harvard Was Generally Predicted.

NEW LONDON, Conn., June 25.—The Cornell freshmen won their race with the Yale and Columbias by about two boat lengths last evening. Columbia was one and a quarter lengths behind Yale. The time, 11:16½, is rather slow. Cornell started with a stroke of 34 and spurted to 40 when 1 mile to Yale and Columbia was about 39 to the minute. At the half mile Cornell led Yale by nearly two lengths, with Columbia's bow lapping Yale's shell. Cornell's work was good and they gained another length and a half before the second flag was reached.

Yale's Steering Poor.

Yale's steering here was poor, the coxswain giving the boat two bad swerves, two of the Yale men splashed badly, and Yale made some trouble in passing a "crab" and throwing the men behind him out of time.

After passing the mile flag Yale gained about three-quarters of a length on Cornell, while Columbia fell back a little. Coming up to the last half mile flag Cornell led Yale by two and a half lengths, with Columbia one and a half lengths behind Yale. All through this half the crews spurted and plainly showed that they were working hard. No. 2 in the Cornell boat was twisting himself in every shape in an endeavor to keep his end up, while No. 2 in the Yale boat was nearly a passenger. In the last quarter Yale reduced the lead a little, but Cornell, though badly winded, crossed the lines a winner. Columbia gained a little in the last quarter, but not enough to change the positions.

The Official Time.

The official time was as follows:

	1 Mile.	1½ Miles.	2 Miles.
Cornell	5:38	8:40	11:16¼
Yale	5:50	8:50	11:35
Columbia	5:53	8:55	11:39

The Cornell men paraded the streets after the race with brass bands, celebrating their victory. The next race will take place Thursday afternoon between Cornell and Pennsylvania University crews over the three mile course.

Yale Defeats Harvard.

YALE FIELD, NEW HAVEN, June 25.—Seven thousand persons gathered on Yale Field Tuesday afternoon to witness the struggle of Harvard against Yale for the intercollegiate baseball championship.

An unusually large delegation was present from Cambridge, with enthusiasm which denoted that they expected their favorites to win. About 400 persons with crimson banners were on the field, and they held out well against the lusty shouts of the Yale men. Scores of old alumni were present the game and vied with the graduating students in the oddity of their conveyances.

Even Money Offered.

Considerable betting was quietly indulged in. Even money was offered by the shrewd sporting men. The Harvard men had large amounts of money, but could not get as large odds as they expected. Victory for Harvard was generally predicted, and the Yale men seemed to lack confidence.

Stagg and Poole formed the Yale battery, and Stagg was at his best, though it was generally understood that he would not pitch. Bates occupied the box for Harvard, with Upton behind the bat. Promptly at 3:30 Yale went to bat. At the end of the first inning Yale had three runs, and had shut out the men in crimson. This was a great surprise.

Neither side scored in the second inning. In the third Yale made three more runs and Harvard scored one. In the sixth inning Yale made another run, leaving the score at the end of that inning 7 to 1. No other runs were made, and at the end of the game the score stood as follows:

Harvard	0	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	—	1

The railroads forming the new route are the Boston and Maine, Central New England and Western, Pennsylvania, Poughkeepsie and Boston, Jersey Central, Philadelphia and Reading and Baltimore and Ohio roads. Trains will leave Boston from the Causeway street station of the Boston and Maine road, and passengers to and from points east of Boston will avoid the long stage transfer across the city. This will prove a great convenience to the summer tourists traveling from the south to Bar Harbor, the Maine coast and the White mountain resorts.

STRUGGLING STATESMEN

They Are in Battle Array at Harrisburg.

WHO WILL WIN THE STATE FIGHT!

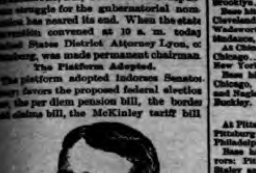
Pennsylvania Republicans Rally to the Standards of Their Favorites in the Contest for the Gubernatorial Nomination.

Palmeter, Hastings and Stone Confident

HARRISBURG, Pa., June 25.—The Republican struggle for the gubernatorial nomination has neared its end. When the state convention convened at 10 a. m. today Charles Dietrich, District Attorney Lyon, of Lewisburg, was made permanent chairman.

The Platform Adopted.

The platform adopted indorses Senator Quay; favors the proposed federal election law, the per diem pension bill, the border and Chilean bill, the McKinley tariff bill



G. W. DELEMATER.

a secret ballot law, protection of American labor and exclusion of contract foreign labor. It will also indorse President Harrison, Governor Beaver and Senator Cameron.

First Place or Nothing.

Great efforts were made by the Delemater men before the convention to induce Major Montooth to accept second place on the state ticket.

Maj. Montooth Quay Is There.

Maj. Montooth replied that he wanted nothing but first place, but the Delemater people think he will finally accept second place. Delemater is generally considered to have a sure thing for first place, but Hastings' friends express great confidence. If Montooth refuses second place, the Delemater people say it will go to either Watres, Mantle or Passmore.

"Dick" Quay Is There.

Senator Quay is not here yet, and the prospects are that he will not put in an appearance before the convention meets. His son Dick has arrived, and has been holding quiet confabs with the workers of the convention. Just what Dick is here for no one can tell, but whatever he says will be done, for it is well known that he was sent here by his father to look after his father's interests. Young Dick himself is a very close friend of the Crawford county senator and this in itself is liable to cause something of a rush into the Delemater lines.

What Hastings Says.

Gen. Hastings says that on the first ballot he will have 75 votes and Delemater 75, and the remainder he divides between

GEN. D. D. HASTINGS.

Stone and Montooth. According to this reckoning Hastings claims 30 of the 39 Philadelphia delegates, holding on to about 45 in the state. This the Delemater men say is not impossible, but they point to the alleged fact that in no way could the general secure the more than two score necessary to give him the nomination. There have been several efforts to secure a conference of the field against Delemater, but a combination of this is impossible. Their forces under a change of commanders rendered these efforts nugatory. It does not look now as if the present antagonists could combine, as no one is generous enough to sacrifice himself. Every man has a badge of some kind, and those who don't wear a Hastings or Delemater badge wear the picture of some candidate for second place.

BY A WOMAN'S WILES.

Mrs. George Ford Decoyed David N. Moore to His Doom.

OTTAWA, Ills., June 25.—David N. Moore, a traveling salesman representing the Scott Lumber company of Bellefontaine, Ohio, was decoyed to Allen park late at night by Mrs. George Ford and a man by the name of Gary and brutally beaten to death with a coupling pin. Moore was found in the morning presented a horrible appearance and the pockets were turned inside out. His jewelry, consisting of a diamond pin and ring, was missing, but in an inner pocket of his vest, securely fastened with safety pins, was found $140 in currency.

Mrs. Ford was seen at an early hour in the morning walking nervously about the streets tearing up a memorandum book and throwing it away. The cover and the pieces of the book were gathered up and identified as belonging to Moore. When confronted with these evidences the woman broke down and made a confession which resulted in her arrest and the arrest of her husband and Gary an hour later.

New Lighthouses Recommended.

WASHINGTON, June 25.—The senate committee on commerce has reported to the senate favorably the house bill appropriating not to exceed $150,000 for a lighthouse on Smith's Island, W. Va., with amendments adding to the bill the following appropriations: Light and fog signal at the mouth of the Coquille river on the Pacific coast, $50,000; lighthouse tender for use in the Thirteenth district, with headquarters at Portland, Ore., $60,000; lighthouse and fog signal at Cape Spencer, Alaska, $30,000; lighthouse on north head Cape Disappointment, Wash., $30,000; new lightships at Winter Island, Md., Fenwick Island Shoal, Md., Frying Pan Shoals, N. C., and Martin's Industry, S. C., not to exceed $70,000 each. In addition to these proposed appropriations the same committee has incorporated in this bill the provisions of the bill "providing for sundry lighthouses and other aids to navigation on the great lakes," which has passed the senate and is now pending in the house.

Bernhardt Took Too Much Chloral.

LONDON, June 25.—Mme. Sarah Bernhardt has just had a narrow escape from death. Upon returning to her hotel, after having performed at Her Majesty's theatre, she was unable to go asleep and she took what proved to be an overdose of chloral. When her attendants discovered her she appeared to be in a dying condition and physicians were hurriedly summoned. After persistent effort, lasting through four hours, and the application of powerful remedies, she began slowly to recover and is now out of danger.

JOHN L. JUBILANT.

He Gets Out of the Mississippi Scrape with a $500 Fine.

PURVIS, Miss., June 23.—John L. Sullivan has had a real taste of Miss'pppi justice, and he is out of pocket $500 and the costs of the case as a token of his disregard of Governor Lowry's command not to indulge in prize fighting on the soil of the state. There was a large crowd present in the court room when the "Big Fellow" sauntered in and took his place in front of the bar for trial. Any possibility of hearing interesting testimony was removed when John arose, and in his gruff way pleaded guilty to the indictment. Prosecuting Attorney Neville was on hand and related the story of the fight, but it was noticed that he was not severe on Sullivan.

Judge Terrall's remarks were brief, and when he had finished his resume of the case he imposed the fine stated. After the money had been paid Sullivan thanked the court, the district attorney and others, and then walked out of the court room a free man once more. Sullivan will remain in this vicinity a few days, visiting friends. He will then start for the north. After leaving the court room, Sullivan was met by several of his bosom friends, who congratulated him on his escape from imprisonment. They then adjourned to a neighboring hostelry, where they had a jollification meeting. It was generally conceded that the result of the trial would have been different had not Prosecuting Attorney Neville favored him.

To Fight Near Washington.

WASHINGTON, June 25.—The Sullivan-Jackson fight when it comes off, it is said now, will take place very near the national capital. The fight, it is said, is to take place under the auspices of the Virginia Athletic association on the Virginia shore of the Potomac, near Washington. They say they can do this without interference, for the law of Virginia plainly states that no sheriff or police officer has any jurisdiction over the property of the club. The only remedy is the repeal of the law and for this purpose a special session of the legislature would have to be called. The Virginia legislature does not meet in regular session for nearly two years. The management estimated that the opening performance at their new grounds will be a bull fight. This proposition would bring out all the objection that could possibly be made and the matter would then have to be settled by the courts, which, the incorporators say and appear to believe, would uphold the law as passed by the last legislature.

A QUADRUPLE HANGING.

Four Men Pay the Death Penalty in Tennessee.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., June 25.—Frank Brenish, a white man, and Parker Harris, Ed Carr and Hardy Ballard, negroes, were hanged in the city jail Tuesday. Brenish, Harris and Carr murdered their wives and Ballard killed a street car driver. The negroes were hanged at the same moment, but as Brenish expected to going on the gallows with them his wishes were respected and he was hanged later.

Brenish suffered death for a horrible crime. His wife had left him because of his brutality, and though he importuned her to return she refused. He met her on the street the evening of July 5, 1889. She was accompanied by her sister and her 4-year-old daughter. As she attempted to pass him he spoke to her, but she stepped on to the car and rode away. He followed upon her from behind and cut her throat. Then he drew the bloody blade across his own throat.

The surgeons inserted a silver tube and Brenish lived, but twice he endeavored to carry out his original intention by tearing out the tube. Parker had implicated Brenish's crime. He then attempted suicide in the same way, but recovered, and was duly tried and convicted. At 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 9, 1888, Ed Carr entered the station house, pistol in hand, and announced that he killed his wife, Emilie Carr. He gave as a reason that his wife was unfaithful to him. Last Christmas, at 8 o'clock in the evening, M. E. Pinkerton, a street car driver, was stabbed to the heart by Hardy Ballard, a negro. Ballard boarded his car and upon being requested to deposit his fare advanced to the front platform and with the words, "Here's your nickel," stabbed Pinkerton in the left breast with a knife. Death resulted in a few moments.

A Home for Aged Farmers.

NEW YORK, June 25.—At the afternoon session of the Farmers' Relief convention a resolution was adopted signifying its objection to any change in the immigration laws and pledging its members not to support any candidate for congress who did not think so. The next farm fest will be held in Milwaukee in 1890, and the next convention in Washington in 1892. The headquarters of the Farm Relief will be at St. Louis. Resolutions were adopted to agitate the Australian ballot reform system and the election of the president by a popular vote instead of by elections as at present. A committee was appointed to examine a parcel of ground, some twenty acres in extent, located in Florida, which has lately been presented to the board for the purpose of establishing a home for old and disabled members. A resolution expressing the sympathy of the board with all matters looking to the bettering of the condition of all workmen was unanimously adopted. During the afternoon Gen. Sigel addressed the delegates and closed the convention. He was heartily applauded.

Dunbar Diggers Confused.

DUNBAR, Pa., June 25.—The whereabouts and condition of the entombed miners are mysteries still. The rescuers seem satisfied with the progress during this day. The course of the diggers was again slightly changed. This has been construed as another evidence that those in charge of the work are confused and to an extent lost. The diggers themselves disagree as to their location and seemingly are as completely lost as ever was an exploring party. They may find themselves at any moment; they may not locate themselves for a week. But little confidence is placed in the predictions of the mine inspectors. This uncertainty, waiting and watching, is wearing out the very lives of the families of the unfortunates.

New Liquor Licenses for Boston.

BOSTON, June 25.—Upon the rough estimate made of the present population of this city as shown by the census returns there is an increase of something like 45,000 people. Under the law ninety-six new liquor licenses could be issued. The board of police will not issue these licenses, however, until the official returns have been received.

Over Fourteen Years for Betsleger.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., June 25.—Nicholas M. Betsinger, the well known Marcellus Falls apiarist, convicted of assault upon his adopted daughter, has been sentenced to the Auburn state prison for fourteen years and ten months. A motion for a new trial was denied.

Identified.

The burning of the Whittier school building at Fortress Monroe a short time since recalls to mind an amusing incident which occurred there about the close of the war. At that time there was a mania among the colored people for education, and the school was made up of all sexes and ages. At the end of the year an exhibition was given to show what progress had been made, to which a number of prominent people were invited. The teacher stated that if any person in the audience wished to set the students any question they could do so. A strapping big fellow, who wore only a shirt, trousers and pair of government shoes, was the first to rise. He stood along very well until he reached the word "biped." Here a gentleman in the audience interrupted, when the following dialogue occurred:

"My man, what is the meaning of the word biped?"

"A biped is a beast."

"Why is a beast be biped?"

"Because it has four feet."

"Are you a biped?"

"No, sir."

"Why?"

"Because I hasn't got four feet."

"What are you then?"

"I'se a cupid!"—New York Tribune.

BALLAD OF A BLIGHTLESS BEING.

I don't know why I shouldn't flirt
Like other girls—and yet
Somehow whenever I attempt
To daily or court
My eyes seem to fix the world
With wonder and amaze.
O dear! I only wish I had
Some little feeling ways.

My sisters often used to try
To put me on the town,
And once I learnt to roll my eyes—
A cripple knack—
But all the men on whom I turned
That sudden alluring glance
Looked scared and pale, and asked me if
I had fits. 'Twas dreadful.

I practised blushing till maroon
(Who always fears the worst)
With apoplexy in her mind,
Forbade me last I burst.
I've simpered, bridled, tossed my head,
Sighed, pouted, all in vain;
Society with one accord
Pronounces me insane.

So noiseless voices I resign
My last forlorn hope.
It's hard to teach an elephant
To dance upon a rope—
But if I possibly can
These puzzling earthly days,
Perhaps in heaven I shall have
Some little witching ways.

A FEMALE LIVERYMAN.

SHE RUNS A BIG STABLE BETTER THAN MOST MEN COULD.

The Only Woman in the Business in New York City—She Drives Sharp Bargains, but She Holds Her Trade—How She Manages and How She Lives.

A wide awake, energetic woman keeps a livery stable at No. 108 West Forty-ninth street. Her name is Annie Childs, and she is fair, plump and not yet 40. Mrs. Childs has a clear, ruddy complexion, an elastic step and an easy, unconscious style that tells its own story of genteel associations and intelligent observation.

This courteous and thoroughly efficient business woman is known from one end of the livery trade to the other. "You'll not find a man in a livery establishment in New York who knows the business better than Mrs. Childs," a prominent liveryman said to a reporter. "Oh, yes, she's got a husband, but it's Mrs. Childs who is known to the trade. She is in full charge of the stable, and when I say that I mean that she's the boss. I'd trust her with any branch of the business in preference to most men. The fact is she's up to snuff and no mistake. If you don't believe it go and see for yourself."

The reporter did go and see for himself. It was early in the forenoon, and business was quiet, therefore Mrs. Childs was upstairs in her comfortable housekeeping apartments, and to her baby's delight the visitor was ushered into a bright little office, the distinguishing feature of which was its extreme cleanliness. The walls were lined with pictures of famous horses. There was an oval mirror over the marble basin and on the mantel a vase of flowers.

Mrs. Childs, who was called through a tube, made her appearance in the space of exactly one minute by the reporter's watch. She came down smiling, and a goodly sight to see in her trim black jersey and bright, silky looking gray poplin skirt. Her collar was fresh from the iron, her hair tidily done and her finger nails neatly manicured.

She sat down quickly, and opened the conversation quite as gracefully as many ladies do in their own drawing rooms.

"So you think it odd to see a woman in the livery business, do you?" she said laughingly. "Well, I have never thought of it in that light, but perhaps that is because I have never had time to think much about it. It has taken pretty much all my time to get through with the active business of it for the last sixteen years. I am English, was born and reared at Edmonton, near London, and grew up with horses for my playfellows, as so many English girls do. I have never seen a horse yet that I was afraid of, and I am called a good horsewoman. I do not mean to say that I am a crack horseman and so are all his sons, including my husband, so you see I have always been surrounded by horses.

"When we came to America my husband wanted to open a boarding stable, but he had other business to attend to and could not give his personal attention to it. He never thought of my going into the business, but I saw that he needed me and I immediately announced my intention of carrying it on myself. We opened a stable in Eighty-fifth street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues, and there I conducted it on a small scale, keeping my office in the sitting room. My business gradually began growing larger until the little writing desk which served me in the sitting room would do no longer, and I moved down stairs and went into business professionally. From that time on I have conducted every detail of the business without help, save that of the ordinary hands employed about the stable, and you see the whole system that I have made it a success. I take orders, see that they are properly filled, attend personally to getting them out, receive customers, keep books, buy all the carriages, harness and occasionally horses.

HER PERSONAL SUPERVISION.

"Another branch of the business consists in selling vehicles for my customers who are also owned—in fact, I attend to everything in connection with the business, and have never yet been cheated in a single instance. I find that horsemen treat me with the greatest respect, never indulging in coarse language in my presence. I assure you I couldn't be treated better if I were dear old Queen Vic herself. Then, too, I don't think they would try to take advantage of me as they do of a man. The men I deal with always seem inclined to favor me, and I assure you I drive a very sharp bargains. I know by actual experience that I am a more economical buyer than my husband, and, for that matter, I think women always look sharper to the pennies than men. The men in my employ obey me implicitly. I never have any trouble with them, but I keep a sharp lookout that they do their duty. I attend to every order that leaves the stable in the course of the year, and in order to do it am often obliged to stay up until 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning.

"I think the absence of tobacco smoke and dirt from the office has been a drawing card for my stable. It's rather pleasant, even for a man, don't you know, to sit down and give his order in a clean, quiet spot. I receive all complaints, for they are sure to come sometimes, no matter how careful you are, and, when I have a breathing space I go out and collect bills. Collecting requires tact and patience, but I have never had any trouble with it. My most fastidious customers are of course ladies, but I usually manage even to please ing them. After having done right by them once they are almost sure to come back again, and in this way I often keep their custom from year to year.

"And how about your home life, Mrs. Childs?" "Oh! it goes on beautifully. You don't think I'd sacrifice that to my business, do you? No, indeed. I have three little children and my husband to provide comforts for, and I never neglect them. In the first place, I have excellent health, and can command a great many dollars into a day. I keep a capable servant, give my self to the morning, and see that everything is set going before I go to the office. When I want anything particularly nice to eat I manage to prepare it before business hours. I do all the sewing for my children, too. We rent a farm at Westchester, and in the summer time we live there, driving in and out early in the morning and necessarily very late at night.—New York Press.

A Wash for the Eyebrows.

The red oxide and vaseline ointment for the growth of brows and lashes is quite harmless. There is only one grain of mercury to the ounce, you know. Apply the ointment with a camel's hair brush, or with your finger along the edge of the eyelids and on the eyebrows before retiring for the night. Wash it off in the morning with a clear, clean bit of soft rag, which as much baking soda as will lie on a five cent piece has been dissolved.—Exchange.

How to Trim a Hat.

For trimming hats the velvet or silk recettes are much in vogue. They are easily made—after one knows how. You must conclude how large a rosette you want, and widen or narrow your material to suit the size. The rosette most fancied is just about the size of a rose, and the material, cut on the bias, is folded to be an inch wide. The strip is then gathered and drawn into shape, it being fastened in that way on a circle of stiff net. Sew it securely and do not attempt to plait it to shape—it must be drawn. One, two or three recettes are used, and the number usually decides the size. An eighth of a yard of velvet, cut on the bias, will make one medium sized recette, and this seems to be that best liked. Amateurs usually err in over trimming a hat or a bonnet; so, as straw ones are not at troublesome to arrange as those of velvet, do not commit this fault. If you cannot see the really good styles in any other way, then look at them in the milliner's window. Read her ideas and imitate them and outwardly imitate. Chapeaux "just tossed" together always look what they are, and the one to which a proper consideration and time has been shown is the one that approaches the nearest to being "a love of a bonnet."—Ladies' Home Journal.

How to Keep Your Bodice in Good Shape.

Blouses may come and go. Cost basques may have the same experience, but the trim, well fitting postillion basque is always in good form if it fits well. A basque that fits well is one that is not too tight to permit easy movement of the arms, and is one that does not need to be closed with a shoe buttoner. The wise woman who wants to keep her basque in good shape puts on her bonnet before she assumes it. Then, let there any fickle fingers of the inside belt should be drawn together, and it isn't the best thing to have the belt very tight, for then does not the basque fit close and does make the drawing of it together more difficult. By the by, no matter how you may be tempted to put large buttons on your basque, only use a goodly few, for ones are considered good form. There must be a great many of these, so that the possibility of the opening standing apart from an inch and a half to two does not exist. You think people don't have such ill fitting basques? Just wait till the next time you get into a street car and be satisfied that this is the truth.—Detroit Journal.

Clean Beds in the Sick Room.

In all cases attended with fever and incapacity for motion of the patient a mattress is preferable to down or feather beds, and neither in health nor sickness should such beds be used, as they are rarely aired and aired while the other is occupied. These beds may be either in the same or adjoining rooms; a sofa bedstead is useful for one of the temporary changes. Where the patient is confined to one bed an agreeable way of airing it is occasionally to lift the bed by means of pulleys, going in at the middle, raising them gently, so that the air may enter at the sides without uncovering the patient, and then letting them down as all the bed is heated air. This process may be once or twice repeated.—New York Ledger.

Toast for House Plants.

"Tell me, please, what spell you cast about your plants that they flourish so vigorously?" I asked a lady friend as I examined the lovely blooms which seemed to have fairly captured the big bay window. One miniature tree of heliotrope flooded the room with its sweet perfume. "Of this plant," she said, "is considered by some extremely fragile, but it in reality only requires plenty of sun and water to grow almost luxuriantly. Like most things plants are too often allowed to die for want of sufficient moisture. An English recipe has, however, furnished me with the secret by which I am repaid all the year round through a succession of lovely blossoms. Delicate plants I water occasionally with toast, which they absorb and flourish in a wonderful manner. Then I have found that seeds which absolutely refuse to sprout in the ground may be coaxed into a vigorous existence by giving them a bath of camphor and water, putting them in the sun and letting them remain until they burst, when they are placed in the earth."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Woman and Her Parasol.

During the warm months, when they carry sunshades, women have a special way of being reckless. They will plunge right into the midst of a crowded street, holding their parasols close over their heads, seeming wholly to forget how it shuts off their view and endangers the safety of their transit. One day on Broadway, but for the timely interference of a man who was crossing, a woman would have been trampled under the feet of a car horse, simply because she was trying to get around with her parasol tilted carelessly over her shoulder at an angle that entirely shut off her upper view of the street. And because she could not see it she seemed as serenely unconscious as an ostrich that all the street there was not immediately to the front and left of her. Even at the risk of getting a little heated in crossing the street in the glare of the sun it would be wise for every woman to close her parasol when she comes to a place where she must risk her life.—New York Evening Sun.

A lady asks how to make coffee jelly. The following recipe is said to be excellent: Soak one-half box of gelatine in one-half cupful of cold water. Make a quart of strong, clear coffee, and strain it. Sweeten to taste with white sugar, making it a little sweeter than would be desired if the coffee were to drink. Set it on the fire until it is boiling hot, then pour it at once on the gelatine. Put into wet molds to stiffen; then turn out. This is nice served with ice cream or with cream alone.—Boston Herald.

Muslin should be washed in a lather of cold water. Never put it into warm water, even to rinse it. If the muslin should be green add a wineglass of vinegar to the water in which it is rinsed; if blue, the same quantity of ammonia. For black and white muslins use a small allowance of sugar of lead.

The will of Maria M. Houstington, filed in the probate office, Springfield, Mass., bequeaths $1,000 to the American board, $1,000 to the New York Methodist episcopal mission, $500 to the Woman's board, $500 to the American Missionary association and $500 to the Missionary society.

Silver link purses for ladies' use are now made long, with an opening in the center to close with rings, like the netted silk purses.

ROCKING THE BABY TO SLEEP.

Just when the night shadows hover,
Just when the day fadeth down,
Just when the bluebs brightly cover
Gleameth a crescent, a crown;
Just when the crickets are chirping,
Just when the gold streak of west yawns,
Sweet 'tis to sit in the twilight,
Rocking the baby to sleep.

Oh, the door little hands that are striving
In tired and tender unrest,
Oh, the murmurous voice that is purring!
Oh, the head cuddled close to my breast!
Floateth in fragrance of flowers—
Borrowful swift the years leap—
Sad 'tis to sit in the twilight,
Rocking the baby to sleep.

Hush! for the white lids are falling,
Hush! the rose lips are apart,
Hush! for I hear a voice calling
Deep in the heart of my heart:
"Trust your lamb to the Shepherd,
Trust him your treasure to keep!"
Hush! lest you waken the baby,
Hush for the baby's asleep.
—Good Housekeeping.

WOMEN BILL COLLECTORS.

A Profitable Occupation for Girls and One That They Enjoy.

Bill collecting is a new job for the women of this town. One of them came in to see a Broadway business man today and talking about it he said: "I had heard that there were a few female collectors in New York, but I had never met with one. It is a good idea, it seems to me. The man had suggested that bill I would have delayed paying for a few days, until I had made my own collections. But she came at me in such a quiet, business like way that I had nothing to say, and went right up to the desk and drew a check for the amount."

One of these collectors, an attractive young lady, talked freely about her occupation. "I enjoy collecting bills very much," she said. "I have plenty of outdoor exercise and the experience of meeting new people every day is pleasing."

"Are you confined exclusively to business houses?"

"Oh, no, I go to the residence parts of the city. There I have a little amusement, which I quietly enjoy. The servants meet me at the door with silver card servers and take my card to the lady or lolding out of the house. This was at first somewhat embarrassing and I resorted to business cards, but that plan did not work well. Word soon got to the drawing rooms to call again. I had to drop that programme, you see. Now, when the servant asks my name I say no matter, or something of the kind. I prefer to see the person I want to find. Often the lady of the house thinks an old friend has called and has a surprise in store. She rushes into the room, where I await her coming with a face beaming with expectant delight. Her disappointment when I make known my business and present my bill is great.

"Sometimes the lady, supposing that I am making a call, sends word that she will be down presently and then sets about making preparations for the interview. I have waited twenty minutes or more in this way."

"Are you successful among business men?"

"Business men nearly always pay with promptness. Occasionally I meet a crank, but the downright kickers are hard to find."

The fair collector said that she had been accustomed to bookkeeping. On throwing up a situation she looked around for something else. The opportunity to collect bills happening to present itself, she took it as an experiment, thinking that something better would follow, but she was delighted with her new business and did not mean to leave it.

"Do you collect old accounts?" she was asked.

"Yes. I have collected bills that have been running for a long time. Nearly always I am pleasantly and cordially received, even in these cases. Seldom do I go more than twice to collect a bill. The firm that employs me says it is like doing a cash business."—New York Press.

About Towels.

First of all, have plenty of towels. Comfort and cheapness depend upon it. You can better afford to go without any ornaments whatever than you can afford to have a scanty supply of towels. I have visited where there were not enough, and been most uncomfortable. After one or two lessons I learned to carry two or three towels in my trunk, although it is pleasant to add that I seldom have to use them.

Have them of a good size. They are more satisfactory and wear enough longer to pay for the difference in original cost. Somehow one feels dryer if she has had enough of a linen surface to dry upon. A friend of mine begs me not to forget to mention the misery and discomfort produced by the "summer resort" towel, about one-third as large as it should be, coarse, linty and new, wetting through with the mere taking of it in the hands and before one has wiped at all. Most of us know this towel, and love it not.—Juniata Stafford in Good Housekeeping.

Where Hading's Beauty Lies.

Jane Hading's chief points of beauty are her brown hair and skin. Her mother she has used for years a certain chemical water which does not dye the hair, but which makes it more brilliant and has the effect of making it wavy with a tendency to curl. Her hair is never curled with irons, and the consequence of it has long been a subject of envy among the ladies of society.—New York World.

When it is necessary again to send for medical advice, if it is at all possible, before the physician goes out for his morning round of visits. Do not delay till he has come in tired, having possibly been in the sick room in which you live. No one outside a doctor's family knows the unnecessary wear and tear caused by late calls.

An old woman named Baldwin died in Aurora, Ills., and the next day friends, while looking about her house, found a package containing $5,000 in money and gold. Stimulated by this discovery they made a systematic search, and, in digging up the cellar, found a tin can containing $6,000 in gold.

Wine of coca is a favorite, whose use is to be recommended with caution and reservations. Admirable as it is in cases of necessity, its continued use is to be likened to the constant overindulging of a piece of fine manchester, the result of which can but be disastrous to its integrity at the last.

A high medical authority says nothing so quickly restores tone to exhausted nerves and strength to a weary body as a bath containing an ounce of aqua ammonia to each gallon of water. It softens the flesh firm and smooth as marble, and renders the body pure and free from all odors.

One of the oddest silver brooches shown resembles a dilapidated shoe, turned down on one side, with broken laces. A dozen small diamonds glittering from the sole take the places usually occupied by nails.

Exercises at St. Mary's.

The closing exercises of St. Mary's parochial school took place in the school hall at half-past two o'clock yesterday afternoon. An interesting programme had been arranged by the Sisters who have charge of the school. It consisted of singing, recitations, etc., and was well rendered by the scholars. Among those who participated were Miss Julia Day and Miss Maggie Sheehan rendering a duet which received hearty approval.

Another interesting feature of the programme was a recitation delivered by Miss Sallie Rafferty. Miss Allie Quinn and Miss Jule Stadler followed with a duet, which was well received. The recitations by Master Higgins and Miss Annie Boone concluded the programme, which was interspersed with singing by the scholars of the school.

Father Stafford then addressed the scholars, very feelingly advising them as to how to spend their vacation and congratulating them on their success during the past year.

THE SILVER INIQUITY.

W. B. S. TAYLOR CALLS ATTENTION TO THE PRESENT DANGER.

Dancing the Government.—Flour at $12 per Barrel.—Silver Millionnaires, Anxiety for the Poor Man.—How Bi-Metal-ism Oppresses India.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—Are the people making their voices heard as they should against a small but audacious band of silver mine owners who would force the country to take their product and pay gold for it? For, to make silver certificates redeemable in gold, is nothing else but this. It is a roundabout way, but just as sure as making silver legal tender for all debts and government dues.

But why will this injure us?

IT IS SURGING OUR UNCLE SAMUEL.

It is forcing him to become a partner in a "ring," so that the other partners may unload upon him a depreciating metal and rob him of his hoards of gold.

Even the arts—the only real use for silver in this age of the world—are to be robbed by this combination, so as to put, and keep up the price upon our government until it can positively take no more and the corner breaks.

TWELVE DOLLARS A BARREL FOR FLOUR.

Where will silver be then? Even its certificates will not be with the silver men, but those not with the government will be in our hands, the people's, and we shall have to take ten or twelve dollars in them to buy a barrel of flour, or any other commodity, purchasable for a five-dollar gold piece.

A DECEPTIVE TRUTH.

But how is it that we can get so much now for a silver dollar as we ever could?

Senator Jones presents—with a great flourish—a table to prove this, and it is a truth, but a fatally deceiving one, like other statistics of the silver men. In small quantities, no one hesitates now to sell goods or even give you gold in exchange for your silver or its certificate; no bank in Wall street would be so doing. But when so much gold has left the country that there is not enough remaining for the necessities of our business with foreign merchants, who will not take silver except at a great discount, gold will go to a corresponding premium in this country; that means a discount on silver; and that, the refusal of silver by every one not compelled to take it; and that means that gold will be hoarded as it was during the war; perhaps even by some of the very men who now scratch the elevator cry "gold bugs," against the evil of a single dollar of finance on the only basis that is fairly sound.

WHAT ASSURES THE STABILITY OF GOLD.

The stability of gold is assured by the fact that, on the average, it always has, and still does, cost about as much to produce as it is worth. No agreement of Nations could give it such secure value as money as this fiat of nature.

But silver, which costs less than half as much to produce as it once did; which was demonetized nearly all over the world about twenty years ago and has been falling faster, and faster, ever since; who can tell where its fall will stop when the United States can no longer buy or redeem it, and, like a drowned up torrent, it is let loose to find its level? Will it not be a regular Conemaugh Valley affair to most of the poor people of this country?

WILL YOU WALLOW INTO MY PARLOR SAID THE SPIDER TO THE FLY.

Oh, yes, poor man, the silver men are your friends. Believe them: your pockets are to be filled with hard dollars and you can make the wicked creditors, who trusted you because you were supposed to be "gilt edged," take them or go without. But, pause! Have you found out how you are to get a single seventy, or it soon may be fifty, cent dollar into your pocket without giving its full value in labor or commodity? You took "trade dollars" for your labor once, did you not? And when the government stopped redeeming them some of you had to sell at eighty-five cents did you not? And yet they had more silver in them than those the corporations of the country, in league with the silver men, are unloading on you even now at the rate of twenty-four hours' coinage.

PAPER SECURED BY GOLD BULLION, GOLD ONLY FOR FOREIGN USE.

The fact is the government has no more right to sustain silver by purchase than iron, copper, zinc, wheat or any other commodity. Let it stick to its level, and let us all have silver forks, spoons, etc., instead of plated silver fakes. In fact we now are in the arts, for, even fractional currency, paper is more convenient while far less expensive to the government.

BUT WILL GOLD LEAVE THE COUNTRY?

Those who have kept up with the discussion know that it has been demonstrated again and again that it will not. That the silver men, who at first so vehemently denied it have lately gone on another tack, and now say, "Let it go, silver will fully take its place." So we need not go over the most lengthy part of the argument, but merely refer to said speeches.

How "silver will take the place of gold," we have shown, and it can be further seen by looking at India, where the government makes the silver rupee the unit of value at about one-tenth of a pound sterling, and legal tender for any debt of a pound sterling, and the government has limited the coinage of gold standard for herself.

BI-METALISM FOR CONQUERED INDIA.

So the English merchant who owes a Hindo house, say one hundred pounds, takes some seventy-five pounds to a banker and gets a bill of exchange for one hundred rupees a month and so on. Yet if the Hindo wants one hundred pounds worth from England he has to sell twelve hundred and fifty rupees for it. This may be good enough for oppressed India where the natives work for a few cents a day and live on rice and curry, but do we want foreign merchants to have the chance to treat us the same way? Yet the silver men attempt to bring this part of the subject, as they do every other, with wholly irrelevant references and arguments. They tell us that we cannot be placed alongside of India, because we are a superior people, have a more vigorous climate, and are on the opposite side of the world. What has all this to do with the subject? It would be more germane to the matter if they would prove that a steady diet of hominy and gimcos is superior to rice and curry. At present, American arts are willing to be reduced to either. This is a terribly serious matter, but arguments that cover hundreds of pages cannot all be refuted in an article of this length. There seems little hope in Congress. Our hope is in the good sense and brave patriotism of President Harrison.

It is in a nut shell, and he probably knows it all. Coining over twenty-four millions a year, which will probably have some time to be melted over and sold for what it will bring, is grossly extravagant. Yet we are hearing that and the increase of the white metal is of our small bills for the sake of pleasing our deluded brothers in the West. But they must not press us too far. Either free coinage or the bill to commit the Government to take fifty-four million ounces — not dollars worth mind—a year, will at first raise the price extravagantly and rob the arts, but, by an by, it will come down like the stick of a rocket and everything with it. The silver millionaires will enjoy the dance—probably in Europe—and we will have to settle with the piper. W. B. S. TAYLOR.

TWELVE DOLLARS A BARREL FOR FLOUR.

Warning to Bicyclers.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—Many complaints having come to me that the Borough Ordinance prohibiting bicycle riding on sidewalks, is daily violated, to the annoyance of pedestrians, I wish to call the attention to those whom it may concern to the ordinance, which is as follows:

"Sec. 1.—That between the hours of seven o'clock in the morning, and nine o'clock in the evening, it shall be unlawful for any person over eight years of age to have, ride, or use any bicycle or other vehicle except baby carriages, and carriages for invalids, upon any sidewalks of any of the streets or avenues of the Borough of North Plainfield."

The punishment therefor is a fine not to exceed five dollars or imprisonment in the lock up not to exceed five days.

It is hoped that all bicycle or tricycle riders will strictly obey said ordinance, and thereby not become liable to arrest.

CHAS. PLACE, Mayor.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following real estate transfers were recorded in the county clerk's office:

Kezia A. Todd and husband, of Plainfield, to Edward Wilmot, of Plainfield for the north-west side of Dunellen avenue, and south-east side of Front street, Dunellen, $1,500.

Benjamin Westervelt and wife, of Cranford, to the Roselle and South Plainfield Building and Co., lot of land in Cranford township, 7 24-100 acres, $1,163.

A Casino for Plainfield.

A number of wealthy residents of this city have purchased the Arnold property at the corner of Seventh street and Arlington avenue, and will at once commence the erection of a Casino on the premises.

When completed this building will be used for private theatricals, balls, etc., and it is said will be one of the finest structures in the city.

—Marshal Becker and another borough marshal last evening visited the house of ill fame that is alleged by another paper to be in existence in the borough and report that the place is occupied by a German family who are apparently respectable, and that is now nothing of a suspicious nature about the house.

Minstrel and Editor.

Among the real estate transfers in Union county recorded in the Journal of yesterday, is that of George Thatcher and wife, of Plainfield, to Alfred E. Pearsall, of Westfield, 118 x705 feet, land on Jerusalem road, which runs from Westfield to Scotch Plains, price $4,500.

George Thatcher is the celebrated minstrel, of Thatcher, Primrose & West, one of the jolliest band of jokers that ever graced the minstrel stage. He hasn't been well, of late, but is better now. When he tickles either Plainfield or Westfield with his genial personality they laugh all over and when he goes away on a minstrel tour they laugh at the memory of his happy presence till he gets back again.

He makes lots of money, Thatcher does, but Pearsall seems to beat him at this. Pearsall is editor of the Westfield Standard, and at the same time fills several columns a day of the New York Commercial Advertiser, drives a spanking team—his own—lectures on prohibition, teaches Sunday school, gives humorous readings, follows several other specialties, and then hunts around for something to occupy his spare moments. Thatcher had the property and wanted the money, Pearsall had the money and wanted the property, and they met and changed jokes.

Pearsall just fill the Westfield Standard with jokes, column after columns of them. Where George Thatcher gets off one joke Pearsall gets off a round hundred and never has a laugh. That's where he makes so much money. There are good many folks who think his prohibition editorials are jokes, but Pearsall says he's in earnest about that, he believes he can fill Jerusalem road in politics, the same as he is in the purchase of his new property.—Elizabeth Journal.

Piece and Peace.

Without saying a word to the Africans, whom one would suppose chiefly interested, England and Germany have parceled out a portion of the Dark Continent to suit themselves. England gives up the island of Heligoland in the North sea, on the borders of Germany, near the city of Hamburg; in return she gets Vitu and Somaliland in Africa. In brief, England will get a coast line of 800 miles and the exclusive protectorate over Zanzibar. Germany has the country northward from the first degree of south latitude to the Congo Free state. The island of Heligoland will make an important naval station for Germany and belongs naturally to her, while it was comparatively valueless to England.

Of course these arrangements are subject to ratification by the British parliament, but that is probable. At any rate it is gratifying indeed to find that the African differences between these two great nations will thus be peacefully settled. There is a growing conviction on the part of mankind that arbitration and war is the proper method of settling international difficulties. Even a few generations ago such a dispute as that concerning Africa could only have been decided by recourse to arms. Both nations are to be congratulated on this amicable solution. As to what the Africans think about it—well, that is no matter.

Taking Her Senses.

A girl enumerator furnishes to The New York World an amusing account of her experiences in taking the census. First she went to the United States census office and found it full of men, with a few women scattered about. A lady informed her there that sixty women in New York had applied for places as enumerators, and thirty-five of them had been accepted, while of the men three-fourths were rejected. "Doesn't that show that women are smarter than men?" asks the girl.

Being accepted, she took the oath as follows:

"The man read off very fast something about keeping secrets and being loyal to the United States of America, and when he got through I said "Yes" and kissed a Bible and signed my name as well as I could.

She got the book of instructions next. Of this she writes:

I had a whole week to study up the little book of census instructions. It ordered me to sit up nights and write up my reports because the government was in such a hurry. The idea! I knew enough to do that without being told. It wasn't very hard on studying for my examination in the public school where I was graduated. The little book ordered me to be very polite to people. "Be sure to say please," it said, and I followed that direction. Perhaps some of the men did. The book also told me how to threaten stupid people who would not answer questions. I didn't have to do that.

This pretty girl seems down on the men for some reason, and never loses an opportunity to give them a stab when she can. Once more contrasting the stupidity of men with the cleverness of women, she says:

I took only 300 blanks, but before I got home they full like to break off my back. I never asked the men I thought about that. But I was asked. I had said $2 for a fountain pen and 10 cents for a bottle of ink. Some of the enumerators carried little bottles of ink in their lower left hand vest pockets. One of them upset his bottle on the bottom of his vest and ruined a brand new suit forever. I don't think any of the lady enumerators were so foolish or clumsy as that.

Her prejudice against men was not returned on their part. However, for the second day out she received an offer of marriage, a sure enough, dead earnest one, from a "big stevedore" whose wife had departed this life eight months before. It is not flattering to women in general to find that the only rudeness or insult she encountered, even among the tenement houses of New York city, came from her own sex. She is sure all the men she came in contact with were "perfectly respectful." She was obliged to have one woman arrested. This part of the story is delicious:

The only person I had any serious trouble with was a woman who kept a shop. She had her sleeves rolled high, and popped up a pair of red arms and elbows when I told her who I was.

"So there isn't men enough," she began, "but they must send around a sup of a girl to take my census."

She seemed to regard my presence as an affront.

"Not one word do you find out from me," she added. "Let them send a man who knows his business if he don't know my weapon."

I argued awhile and she grew more and more angry. Finally she began to abuse me and I ran away. I came back in a few days to get the facts and she came down off her pedestal and gave the information asked.

How to keep cool this summer. Don't allow your ice bill to be handed in till the hot weather is over.

Friday, July 4, is the time for the four new states to be legally entered on the glorious flag. That is the day that when a new state comes into the Union her star shall be added to the flag on the 4th of July next following her admission.

Worse and worse. Professor Amos, of Harvard, says in extenuation of the disfigurement of the statue of John Harvard by students: "I believe it was simply a foolish action, repented as soon as the perpetrator came to his senses." Came to his senses! He was out of them then. But a Harvard student would not get drunk. Oh, dear, no!

DELAMATER NOMINATED.

He Wins the Fight on the Third Ballot.

WHAT THE PLATFORM DECLARES.

The Other Nominations: Louis A. Watres for Lieutenant Governor, and Thomas J. Stewart for Secretary of Internal Affairs—Monteith Refused Second Place.

HARRISBURG, Pa., June 26.—It was very late Wednesday afternoon before the Republican convention reached the business of nominating candidates for governor. Col. John J. Carter, of Erie, in an eloquent speech then nominated Senator Delamater for governor. He said: "We meet today as Pennsylvanians, and will deal with matters concerning this commonwealth as become men and citizens of a great state. The Republicans of the northwest have not commissioned me to detract from the merits of any gentleman claiming the suffrages of these delegates, but I place before you the name of one who has done the state some service and who is not altogether unknown in the affairs of the nation. He is a true and tried friend of American industries. A typical American, who loves freedom and hates oppression, and misery under whatever guise they appear. Such a man is George Wallace Delamater, whose name I have the honor to present for the consideration of this convention as the chief executive of this great Republican commonwealth."

Cheers for Delamater.

The convention then broke into the wildest enthusiasm. Cheer upon cheer and the most enthusiasm prevailed. C. Stuart Patterson seconded the nomination of Senator Delamater in a brief speech.

Gen. Hastings Nominated.

Adjt. Gen. Hastings was nominated by George W. Orlady in the following speech: "Central Pennsylvania presents for the next governor of this state a man whose election is assured by 50,000 majority, who represents no faction, who is the undisputed owner of his own manhood, who comes from the common people and who will receive the cordial and zealous support of the whole rank and file of the Republican army of progress. This nomination is taken from the character of its candidates, its carefully selected delegates and its audience, with an almost unanimous concurrence. Let us work with zeal and decide carefully.

"The candidate I name has the full party strength of every solid district in the commonwealth. I nominate for your consideration a man whose election is sure, regardless of whom the opposition may nominate, and whose election will begin and continue offensive and whose public life has alienated no member or class of the party. I nominate as next governor of Pennsylvania the Hon. James A. Hastings."

Cheers for Gen. Hastings.

When the speaker mentioned Hastings' name the convention cheered again and again, and the chairman restored order only after much pounding of the gavel. W. I. Shaffer, of Delaware county, seconded Hastings' nomination.

Mr. Stone's Name Proposed.

W. E. Rice nominated Secretary of State Charles W. Stone for governor. He said: "We are here to satisfy no man's ambition, but honestly and patriotically to select him who in our judgment is best fitted to discharge the responsibilities of this position. I nominate Charles W. Stone, and on every farm, at every forge, at every bench, in every mine, the nomination will be ratified." W. W. Brown, of McKean, seconded Mr. Stone's nomination, and said: "It is a hot day, but it will be cold between now and November if we are not careful what we do today." He said that Stone could carry the state by 100,000 majority, no matter who was put up by the Democrats. The party would have an able bodied man, not a wounded man, with him as the leader."

The Platform Adopted.

Following is the platform adopted in full:

Once more the Republicans of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in convention assembled, send fraternal greetings to their party brethren throughout the nation and congratulate them and ourselves upon the victory won in 1888 by the party of Republican principles and the patriotism of Republican citizenship. For the chairman of our national committee, Mr. Quay, we have no words of gratitude for his unselfish services in the last presidential campaign, and commend his bearing under the slanders of his opponents and leadership of our party as pre-eminently patriotic.

As a citizen, a member of the general assembly, as secretary of the commonwealth and as senator of the United States, as state treasurer by the overwhelming suffrages of his fellow citizens, and as a senator of the United States, he has won and retains our respect and confidence. In keeping with the sympathy and the duty of our party we make the following declaration of principles for the betterment of political government and the benefit of our fellow citizens:

Pensions—War Claims.

We believe that every lawful voter has the right to cast a free ballot at every public election and hence is properly responsible and certified; and we call upon congress to adopt such legislation as will prevent a suppression or falsification of the votes of our citizens at elections for officers of the national government and will end political slavery throughout the nation. Our care for the welfare of the living and the dead of the battle carried triumphantly the principles of Republican faith will end only when the last loyal arms children whom I told her who I was.

"So there isn't men enough," she began, "but they must send around a sup of a girl to take my census."

She seemed to regard my presence as an affront.

"Not one word do you find out from me," she added. "Let them send a man who knows his business if he don't know my weapon."

I argued awhile and she grew more and more angry. Finally she began to abuse me and I ran away. I came back in a few days to get the facts and she came down off her pedestal and gave the information asked.

They also requested the board of overseers to consider the subject of allowing alumni of five years' standing to vote by letter at all elections of overseers.

The five overseers elected were: Henry W. Torrey, class of '32; Solomon Lincoln, class of '52; George B. Shattuck, class of '53, Henry S. Spaugh, class of '64, and Francis Rawle, class of '69.

The pairs were Messrs. Atkinson (W. Va.) and Mr. Phelan, McCormick and Morgan, ...and McCarthy, T. M. The only absentees were Mr. Fitch (N. Y.), whom Mr. Tracy announced to be home sick, and Messrs. Wright (Pa.) and Caldwell (O.).

All the other amendments were disagreed to, a separate vote being taken only as to the fourth. On motion of Mr. Conger it was ordered that a conference committee be appointed. The conference report on the diplomatic consular appropriation was presented and agreed to.

The Election Bill.

Mr. Cannon from the committee on rules, reported an order providing that the house will consider the national election bill, the previous question to be ordered at 2 o'clock July 3, that during the last two hours amendments may be offered in the line with debate under the five minute rule, this rule not to interfere with appropriation bills. Mr. McMillan attacked the bill, charging that those who proposed it were tired of being elected by the people and wanted to be elected by the government. Mr. Cannon said that the proposition in the bill were monstrous and defending. Mr. Cannon said that this bill was proposed to extend a law which had been on the statute books for twenty years.

O'Neill Attacks Cannon.

Mr. O'Neill (Ind.) intimated that there had been frauds in Mr. Cannon's district and asked if the bill would prevent the buying of votes there. Mr. Cannon rejoined by denying the charge and said that the gentleman demonstrated to the country why he was content in his occupations and that his tongue was a slander to any man on the floor. Mr. O'Neill attempted to reply against the speaker's gavel, and it was necessary finally for the sergeant-at-arms to bring forward the great mace to restore order.

A motion of Mr. Springer to table the resolution was lost—yeas, 116; nays, 133—Mr. Coleman (La.) voting with the Democrats. The resolution of the committee on rules was then agreed to.

SALVATOR IS KING.

He Defeats Tenny and Makes a New Record.

NEW YORK, June 26.—Salvator won the match race yesterday and made a new record for a mile and a quarter. Over 15,000 people went down to Sheepshead Bay race track to see the contest between Salvator and Tenny. It was one of the grandest ever seen on an American race course. There was no delay at the post, and they were sent away at once. Salvator took the lead and made the pace a very fast one. Passing the stand Salvator was half a length in front of Tenny, and this lead he increased to a length and a half on the upper turn.

As they reached the far turn Salvator drew away and was leading by nearly three lengths. Then Garrison commenced to ride and whip and Tenny closed up the gap inch by inch. At the last sixteenth Tenny was gaining fast on Salvator, when Murphy brought the whip down twice on Salvator and he managed to keep his head in front to the wire, winning by about half a head. Time, 2:05.

Black Eyes in Newfoundland.

HALIFAX, N. S., June 26.—The steamer Harlaw, from the West Newfoundland coast, is here, and her captain, Mr. Farquhar, confirms the statement that he was refused permission to land goods at Bay St. George unless he would give bond to be responsible for all duties and charges which the consigners might fail to pay. The captain declined to accede to this demand and proceeded to Bonne Bay. On his return the goods were landed, the consigners having received written permission. The captain also confirms the report of a conflict between islanders and French at Port au Port last week. Several of the contestants received black eyes and severe, murderous bruises. The trouble arose from the French wanting to take bait out of the Newfoundlanders' nets. The people on the west coast are still determined not to pay no taxes until they receive better protection.

MR. CALL'S INTERPOLATIONS.

They Caused a Great Uproar in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—The members of the United States senate were surprised on picking up The Congressional Record to find nearly twenty-eight columns of a speech supposed to have been delivered by Senator Call before the senate on June 2, on a question of privilege, in reply to certain charges against him contained in a speech by W. H. Culberson, then in the senate. The remarks actually delivered by Mr. Call on that occasion have not been occupied less than a column of The Record. Mr. Call had obtained from the senate, however, permission to print some papers with his remarks, and these remarks had been withheld for revision that the papers referred to might be incorporated with them.

The most remarkable part of the addition of the twenty-seven columns made by Mr. Call to his original remarks was a table in which he made a comparison of his work in the senate during the Fiftieth congress with that of other senators. Through Mr. Call's statement are striking headlines (presumably written by himself), of which the following are samples: "Senator Call Shows That He Has Been Eight-fully Connected With All Public Enterprises," "Mr. Chipley as a Railroad and Land Grant Lobbyist," "What Shall Be Said of the Writer of the Chipley-Walker Pamphlet?" "Degrading Spectacle," "Senator Call's Services Have Been for the People's Good."

The surprise of the senators at this statement in The Record was followed in some cases by anger and the matter was discussed at great length.

Mr. Call was interrupted in an address upon his Cuban annexation scheme by a motion from Mr. Sherman that the senate go into executive session. This was carried. Senator Ingalls offered a resolution instructing the committee on privileges and elections to inquire as to what right Mr. Call had to insert his defense in The Congressional Record.

This precipitated a fierce debate. Mr. Call justified his action on the ground that he had been refused the senate to print extracts in vindication of his career. Senator Ingalls exclaimed: "The senator from Florida has, by judgment, not only grossly violated and abused the privileges of the senate, but he has deliberately falsified the ...ords as to what occurred on the day that the transaction took place."

WHY HE WENT MAD.

He Feared He Would Be Charged with the Cronin Murder.

CHICAGO, June 26.—Frank Collier, the well known Cronin lawyer who, as the special delegate of various British-American societies, journeyed to England and presented to Queen Victoria the felicitations of her former Chicago subjects on her jubilee, told a strange story last night in narrating his recent experiences. Mr. Collier arrived here from the State Insane asylum yesterday, where he declares there has been a conspiracy to keep him.

The release was after an extended examination in which he was conducted by Mr. Collier in person, and in which dozens of prominent people, lawyers, physicians, school teachers, judges and others testified that in their opinion he was not insane. Mr. Collier said that for a time he had been demented, but that he had long since recovered.

After his formal release he went into the remarkable details of his case. He began, he said, to be irresponsible on the 5th of August, 1889. "I recall that on that day," he continued, "I tried to remember where I was on the night of the Cronin murder.

"A fear seized me that I would be charged with the murder. I was known to be anti-Irish, and I had relations with British societies and with the British government that if they were brought out in court would have been dangerous."

Mr. Collier related at length how such thoughts haunted him, and how in his desperation he went out one night and followed over the whole track like the Cronin assassins, and on the spot in Lincoln park described so minutely by the suspect, Woodruff, attempted suicide.

The latter failed to discharge, and Mr. Collier, according to his own story, threw upon three the weapon into the lake at that point. He declares that as a matter of fact he knew nothing of the Cronin murder, and that he now fully recognizes the insane character of a fear that he would be tried for the crime.

Taylor on "American Journalism."

BOSTON, June 26.—At the session of the National Editorial association Col. Charles H. Taylor, of The Boston Globe, president of the Boston Press club, read a very entertaining paper on "American Journalism." The speaker defended the newspapers against the charge of sensationalism, and argued in support of his proposition that journalists should be more dignified, and that there should be an end of facetious insinuations upon the impecunious condition of the editorial profession. The relations of the editor with the business manager were discussed. The editor must make a paper that the business manager can sell, and each must learn from the other. The delegates present numbered 247.

WOMAN AND HOME.

THE SAD TIME IN A WOMAN'S LIFE, WHEN SHE HAS NO PLACE.

The Happy, Careless, Motherly Woman. Some Things Never in Fashion—Fifth Avenue Belles—It Was a Woman's Idea—An Old Writer—Gentle Hints.

There is a time in a woman's life when she is too old for the dance and frolic of the young, and too young for the quiet corner of the old. No class claims her. She feels often like an alien from the cozy mooseuddle of womanhood. In charitable work and in social life the invisible line is passed. No one invites her now to preside at the tea table or to stand on the side of flowers with her gracious smiles. Neither is she asked to give the dignity of her age and position as one of the patronesses of the fair. She is long ago shelved as if she dresses in the gay colors her soul loves, or scolded (by her family) for always wearing black.

She has no part in the play, but is quietly relegated to the position of stage setter and prompter while younger and older women pose and win applause. Her beauty is not to be seen. She has lost the fair girlish face which is the prophecy of what it will be, nor the sweet old face which is the history of what it has been. White hairs have not crowned her with glory, and she has lost the golden curls of her youth. The blossom has faded and the fruit does not yet compensate for its loss.

The trials of the transition state envelop her in the home. Sometimes she feels that her husband is almost deserting her for the young daughter who is like a second edition of the girl he fell in love with years ago. The solving of the domestic problem has not made such drafts upon his mental and physical resources as in his upon hers. He is a comparatively young man, and no one dreams of asking him to step aside from any familiar path.

As for her—she wonders if she is not a childless woman. She was necessary to her little children, but her growing sons and daughters do not seem to need her, at least they do not cling to her with the tender caresses of their babyhood. Studies, teachers, classmates and embryo love affairs fill their lives so full that the mother almost feels crowded out.—Harper's Bazar.

The Happy, Careless, Motherly Woman.

But there's something white waving in the air further down at the other corner. It isn't—yes it is—a baby. The woman's hands are so full she can't wave anything else but the baby, and he likes it. Careless women's babies always do like all manner of irregular things, and thrive on them. And she is such a careless, happy-go-lucky woman, with her bonnet all awry, her arms full of bundles, and the baby almost upside down on her shoulder. Such an indignant woman for a moment when she ran up against the corner and got pitched over when she saw the mistake she has made. Over the cobble stone, through the mud, quite as a puddle she hurries, her face growing more crimson, her bang straighter every minute, and at last half falls, half plunges into the car as the conductor, with the delay, pulls the bell rope sharply, and we trundle on again, while the careless woman drops one bundle, lets fall two more trying to secure the first, and nearly drops the baby picking up all three.

It is safe to wager that she is as kind as she is careless, that her house looks as if two cyclones have held a courtship in it, but that you'll have the nicest home dinner if you drop in unexpectedly that hungry man ever devoured. Not the fancy toss and frills, but the cream gravies and thick pies and white bread that your mother used to make, and a welcome warmer than the August noon. The dear, motherly, careless woman, a little too stout, a little too noisy, but with room in her big, warm heart for all sufferers, even humanity. There are days when you'd rather be held to her capacious bosom, even at the risk of being smeared with the molasses one of the twins has just wiped off on her as she caught him up, because he bumped his precious head with the hammer, than be admitted to the presence of a queen.—New York Sun.

An Old Writer.

Probably the oldest living authoress in this country is Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith, who was very prominent before the war, not only as a writer but as a lecturer. Although she is still a contributor to one of the literary weeklies, both in prose and verse, her name is rarely seen elsewhere, and the general impression doubtless is that she has passed away. The standards of criticism are so different now from what they were thirty years since that her work—poems, novels, tragedies and miscellanies—would not be ranked nearly so high as formerly.

Born at what is now Cumberland, Me.—her maiden name was Prince—she was married at 16 to Seba Smith, author of the once famous Jack Downing letters. She became a widow some twenty years ago and has been living most of the time since at the small town of Rollywood, N. C., where she now is, at 94 she is in excellent, vigorous health. She was one of early advocates of woman's rights, speaking on the subject in all the larger cities and contributing various articles to the magazines of the day. "Woman and Her Needs," published forty years ago, attracted much attention and elicited warm commendation. Mrs. Smith has witnessed extraordinary changes in the republic and has survived nearly all of her contemporaries, many of whom occupied exalted positions in her youth and have now passed into oblivion.—Exchange.

The Natural Beauty of the Nail.

The nails of the fashionable woman are often—to put it strongly—a positive abomination. They are vulgar, just as anything that is overdone and perverted usually is. And they are altogether "ugin natur," is quite as much so as if they were stained with henna like those of the East Indian ladies. To conform to nature the nail should be trimmed round, to follow the line of the finger tip, instead of being slanted up in a long sharp point, which is supposed to add a tapering look to the finger, but which really suggests the claws of a bird.

And then they are pointed too highly. To a truthfulness and the sovereignty of beauty of the nail is as offensive—because it is as unnatural—as the painted cheek or the bleached eye. Artifice is the finger tips is no less vulgar than artifice in the face. And it is not beautiful. Nature is an artist who does not make mistakes. If she intended the nail to be pointed she would have known how to do so.—New York Evening Sun.

A Good Work in Scotland.

The Girls' Brigade in Scotland is fast becoming as popular and beneficial an institution as the whispering of fairy tales. The Brigade. The girls belonging to these brigades are usually from 12 to 18 years of age, and are wage earners in printing offices, factories, shops, etc. They wear red aprons with red and white borders and red and white shoulder sashes over their dark dresses, and the girl officers have scarlet and silver stripes denoting the rank of the corporals and sergeants. Their drill consists of calisthenics to music, without apparatus, but with precision and grace, exercises in which rings, flags and ropes are used, and marches including several intricate figures—wheeling, turning and a maze. There is also singing, and sometimes a May pole dance, with a fairy queen. The superior officers, who are usually ladies of leisure with philanthropical purposes. The work was inaugurated by two or three young ladies in Edinburgh, who formed the first brigade, and there are companies now in all parts of Scotland. In addition to the drill there are classes for singing, sewing and Bible teaching, and kindly talks on temperance, thrift and purity, somewhat of the same nature as our working girls' clubs in America.—London Letter.

It Was a Woman's Idea.

A bit of Vassar history not generally known to the public is the fact that this woman's college, founded by a man, was the thought of a "weaker vessel."

Matthew Vassar, who had a kinswoman who was principal of a young ladies' seminary in Poughkeepsie, Miss Lydia Booth by name, an estimable and accomplished woman. When Mr. Vassar was considering the question of the final disposition of his fortune he was strongly inclined toward the establishment of a hospital, which should be upon the lines of Guy's hospital in London. While considering this scheme Miss Booth suggested that a wise plan would be the foundation of a college for women, to be to them what Yale and Harvard were to men.

Mr. Vassar was what is called in the popular phrase "a self made" man. This was true of him intellectually as well as financially. The deficiencies of his early education he sought to supply by culture in the latter years of his life, and to a great extent was successful. Mrs. Vassar, the wife of his youth, did not keep pace with her husband in this direction, and therefore the importance of a thorough training for young women which would send them into the world with a thorough mental equipment appealed to him with peculiar force. Miss Booth's suggestion was adopted, and a charter for the incorporation of Vassar female college was granted by the New York legislature in 1861.—New York World.

Some Things Never in Fashion.

There are some things that are never in fashion, although the enterprising shopman may fill his windows with them. One is green gloves. If one green glove can be worse than another it is that kind with V shaped sections of white kid set in them. These never were and never will be fashionable, and do not let anybody induce you to spend your money upon a pair.

Then while scarlet crepe bonnets and scarlet trimmings are in good taste leave all red hats, especially the large ones, to the people in the nursery. Arrange your red coloring in some other way and do not have it all in a hat. La Mode never approved of the hat.

Then do not believe that blacks, grays and browns are to be forgotten for some odd shade of green, pink or blue; the first are always in good taste. Colors which are never to be desired unless one has a wardrobe in which gowns are very numerous.

Do not be persuaded into buying anything. Think out before you start what you want, and endeavor to get it. The pressure of wares unbecoming and the trifles and frills, but the cream gravies and thick pies and white bread that your mother used to make, and a welcome warmer than the August noon. The dear, motherly, careless woman, a little too stout, a little too noisy, but with room in her big, warm heart for all sufferers, even humanity. There are days when you'd rather be held to her capacious bosom, even at the risk of being smeared with the molasses one of the twins has just wiped off on her as she caught him up, because he bumped his precious head with the hammer, than be admitted to the presence of a queen.—New York Sun.

"The Cheapest Unlaundered Shirt."

You see this sign in the windows of all gentlemen's large furnishing stores.

You go in and examine the bargains presented, and you buy a half dozen of these cheap shirts and congratulate yourself on the low price you have paid, and you tell your neighbor about it, and you and she together decide that you will have to make another shirt as long as you both shall live.

You can buy them at the cost of the material and you get the work for nothing.

It is a very satisfactory thing to think of getting something for nothing, and we all enjoy it. It means just so much saved. It means just so much the more of this world's good things.

But did you ever consider what cheap shirts mean to the wretched slave who makes them at fifty or seventy-five cents a dozen?

Did you ever think of the long, long hours of toil, of the loss of needed rest and sleep, of the aching muscles and the weary, pricked fingers and the throbbing brain of the seamstress who makes the shirts which are sold at fifty cents each?

Did you ever put yourself in her place and try to think how you would like to work ten or fifteen hours for money enough to keep soul and body together?—Kate Thorn in New York Weekly.

Fifth Avenue Belles.

Among the various "walks of life" from which men choose their wives fashionable promenades are by no means the most eligible.

"I really think my daughter would spend her whole time in Fifth avenue if I would let her," said a mother in our hearing the other day.

"Madam," said we, "don't let her."

Fifth avenue is a poor school for girls who expect to become wives. What sensible man would desire to marry a mere golden calf and shopper? And surely no young lady is ambitious of marrying a fool.

That a belle and a beauty should desire to be seen and admired is natural enough, but the prettiest thing in the world if continually on exhibition becomes an object too familiar to be much valued. A fair creature who divides her time between studying the fashions at the millinery and dry goods stores and sailing up and down the sidewalk to display the same is not likely to shine in domestic life as the head of the home department.—New York Ledger.

Postal Card Case.

Cut a piece of birch bark a little over twice the width and length of a postal card. Give one half of the bark a coat of deep painted red, which when turned down serves as a cover, and on the other half of the same side cut out a piece not quite as large as the painted cover.

Next fold the birch bark across through the center, which will bring the painted cover over the opening. Overhand the edges of the two together with bright colored silk.

Cut a little slit in the back and a corresponding one in the under side of the case. Pass a narrow bright ribbon through the two slits, fastening it on one side with a few fancy stitches, and having the other end longer end loose.

When the package of postal cards is put into the case it will carry down the ribbon with it to the end of the case, and when the ribbon is drawn up, the cards will be drawn into view with it. Leave the ribbon long enough to tie with a bow and ends when the case is closed.

The case was be made of rough water color paper and decorated with some sketchy designs, if birch bark is not to be had; or it may be made of silk, covered with any fancy silk, satin or velvet, and ornamented to suit the fancy of the maker.—Youth's Companion.

The Ingenious Woman.

The ingenious woman is the happiest woman in the world. She gets more real comfort out of life than all the women geniuses rolled into one ever could. The ingenious woman is the kind of woman who can pack more clothes in a Saratoga trunk than the average man could get into a furniture van. After an afternoon walk the ingenious woman will come home with her mind fully made up about the way she is going to make her dress and trim her bonnet. She gets some ideas from what she sees, but she improves on them.

The ingenious woman is full of resources. By her knowledge of dyeing, pressing and turning she has solved the problem on how to dress well on comparatively nothing a year. Her ingenuity in "fixing over" makes it possible for her to antedate the fashion rather than follow that fickle dame. One of the very best things that can be said of this clever woman is that she never dresses conspicuously. Her well balanced judgment causes her to look with aversion on that eccentricity of dress which a certain class of women affect. Taste, elegance and adaptability are aimed at, but asceticism and eccentricity never.—New York Press.

Perfumed Linen.

Everything is perfumed save the handkerchief. Custom stamps a scented handkerchief as vulgar. If you wish your linen to have a peculiarly fresh, wholesome, old fashioned odor, buy one of those lavender bags now in the market. They are filled with the crushed leaves of flowers, and the pungent odor will last much longer than poudre sachet. One cannot imagine the task it is to prepare these bags for the market. I was talking with a girl who does this work, and she told me that when at work she is forced to cover her hair completely, wear gloves, cover her neck carefully and wear linen aprons, as even then the fine dust of the flowers will fly up, lodge in the eyebrows, ears and nostrils, causing unlimited discomfort. But one-half the world must have the luxurious appointments of the toilet. The other half must prepare them.—Cor. Chicago Herald.

Pretty Wicker Chairs.

There is nothing prettier in a country parlor than a few pieces of rattan furniture, either in natural color with cushions of India silk or enameled in white and gold and lined with silk, satin, cretonne or any artistic material the owner fancies. There are two kinds of furniture classified under the head of rattan—the genuine rattan and the reed or wicker. The wicker chair is less expensive than the rattan, but it is not to be despised for this reason. It certainly possesses one advantage over rattan—it cannot be twisted into such preposterously ugly shapes as rattan has been by some manufacturers. The nature of the material prevents it being woven with backs in the shape of Japanese fans and various other styles which are parodies of oriental art.—New York Tribune.

Bracelets.

A woman's bracelet should be dainty and delicate. There is nothing pleasant in the suggestion of golden shackles. The fancy for bangles first brought slender bracelets into use, but now these separate bands are so elaborate and costly that a single one is considered sufficient. Some of the most beautiful forms of gold are ornamented entirely around with diamonds, or narrow bands are set with a close row of larger diamonds half way around. Still other bands are set with pearls, or with diamonds and turquoise alternating, or diamonds and sapphires. Bracelets are no longer worn in pairs to match, but it is a fashionable fancy to contrast them as different as possible.—Exchange.

Velvet Instead of Braid.

A great many women are annoyed by the rapidity with which braid wears off their dress skirts. The best qualities of white braid are finer, and often do not wear as long as the cheaper, coarser ones. The very best material for binding a dress skirt is a bias band of good velvet put on as a fold. It will not wear off any more than braid, and, moreover, will save more than its cost in saving fine walking shoes from the wear on the instep caused by the friction of braid; this often causes shoes to be shabby here before any other part of it is perceptibly worn.—Exchange.

Wigs for Hebrew Women.

Among the central European Hebrews the married women all wear wigs, no matter whether they be bald-headed or not. Indeed, the more beautiful the woman's hair the more necessary the wig, for it is worn upon the theory that a married woman should make herself unattractive to every man except her husband. Wigs are ugly, brown and cheap.—San Francisco Argonaut.

There is little promise of an honorable career to boys and girls who spend their best years in risky surfeits of over highly spiced novels, and only take their sole studies as compulsory medicine. To a mind spoiled by over excitement useful knowledge comes too tardily, and very likely too late to do any good. Spurred as diet, knowledge resents being taken in doses and refuses to remain.

Cold tea is well known as an aid in curling the hair, and a simple decoction may be prepared by steeping an ounce of quince seeds in a quart of water for twenty minutes, straining and bottling for use. The liquid being mixed with any favorite aroma if preferred. The white of an egg is also sometimes used, or a thin solution of isinglass. All of these are harmless in every respect.

There are many ways of judging eggs. One is to drop the egg in a pan of cold water. The fresher the egg the sooner it will drop to the bottom. If bad it will float. This is the prompt. The best way to keep eggs fi to turn them in a box or meal and turn them frequently, box and all. Salt will preserve them in any climate if properly packed.

Perfumed ink is a new fad. Not satisfied with scenting her fans, her gowns, her hair, her furniture, her fancy work, the lady goes further and perfumes her writing fluid so that her notes go broadcast like a waft from Araby the blest.

WHAT SHALL WE WEAR?

CORRECT STYLES IN DRESS DESIGNED FOR SUMMER WEAR.

Wedding Toilets That Present New and Attractive Features—Bridesmaids' Dresses, with Novel Arrangement of Trimming.

An attractive bridal dress seen recently was made with a court train three and a half yards long of white brocaded poplin. The petticoat was of plain silk poplin. The train was bordered inside with muslin plaiting and lined with satin, which formed a facing over to the back of the bodice. The sleeves and Medici collar were of the brocaded poplin, and the front of the bodice was of crepe de Chine, laid in horizontal horseshoe folds around the waist. The sleeves were high and puffed.

BRIDE'S DRESS OF SATIN AND CREPE DE CHINE.

The bridesmaids' dresses for the same happy occasion were a combination of yellow crepe de Chine and white silk. The novelty in their arrangement was a yellow silk cord which went round the neck, and the ends were formed into a series of close little circles, finishing off the points of the bodice fronts. The gowns had Medici collars, and white veils and wreaths of yellow jasmine completed the costume. The backs of the bodices were composed of white satin, the fronts veiled with the yellow crepe de Chine. The sleeves were prettily puffed to the elbow.

The bride's dress depicted in the cut is of white satin, crepe de Chine and silver embroidery. The train and tablier are of satin; the panels are of embroidery and crepe de Chine. The corslet is silver, and the front portion of the high sleeves is embroidered in silver.

Chatelaines to Suit the Wearer.

Elsie Bee, of The Jewelers' Circular, has discovered that the jewelers have provided chatelaines to suit the temperament of the wearer. For example: A person of religious mind has her needlecase in the form of a missal, her thimble case looks like a swinging censer, her whistle is an angelic trump. If she is more frivolously minded her pincushion is an open fan, she has a button hook array in a case, a small needle or repeater accepted for pins, and a dainty box for cachous. If she is literary she has a telescopic pencil, a small knife, a stamp box marked "U. S. Mail" and pendant tablets. Among chatelaine clasps the latest is a flight of swallows.

Tennis and Boating Hats.

Numbered with English models are hats somewhat in the sailor form, but there is scarcely any brim at the back, though it widens and inclines upward toward the front; the crown is higher at the back, and has for trimming a large bow. These hats are intended to be worn rather backward, and are in black, cream and colored fancy lace straw.

Dainty Hosiery.

The new stockings have corded stripes in quaint mixtures of color, and are made in the finest silk. Another novelty is simulating black lacing on the front of the foot. For the drawing room real white lace is let into the insteps of white silk stockings, and openwork and embroidery are often blended.

Chloral Hydrate for Quinsy.

Chloral hydrate is said to be almost a specific for quinsy, in its early stages. Popular Science News says it is to be dissolved in glycerine—three or four grains to the ounce—and used as a gargle. It acts as an antiseptic, astringent and sedative.

Tailor Made Novelties.

The skirts to some of the new tailor gowns are having perfectly plain in front, with the fullness all concentrated at the back. There is a stylish little jacket buttoned over the bust and showing above and below a silk skirt. Very neat and very stylish are the plain traveling gowns of small check tweed with round basque jacket bottoms. These are made on tailor lines, which is light in weight and has some what of the softness of silk. Two box plaits at the back of the skirt collect the necessary fullness.

FANCY GRAY BENGALINE CLOTH COSTUME.

Among novelties in jackets are those braided in black tubular and tracing braids on colored cloth. Others have a long rail skirted outline braided on both sides. They stands up high around the throat and gradually becomes narrower as it approaches the edge of the jacket fronts.

In the accompanying illustration is shown a stylish costume in gray Bengaline cloth trimmed with braid and black velvet. The skirt is trimmed to correspond.

A writer on southern woods says that a rod of black locust is almost half as strong as a rod of iron the same size.

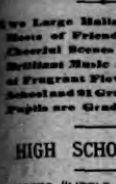
HIGH SCHOOL, '90.

MOTTO—"LITTLE BY LITTLE."



COMMENCEment, the great event of the year in Plainfield among the scholars of our public schools, is over.

The programme of the exercises in Stillman Music Hall last evening, told that it was the twentieth annual event of the kind for the Plainfield public schools.

As usual on such occasions the hall was crowded; regardless of the opportunely hot weather without, the temperature within was surprisingly agreeable.

Promptly at 7:45 the exercises began.

At that time there sat upon the stage behind the eighteen graduates:

Rev. Jacob Kirkner, President of the Board of Education, Mr. John W. Murray, secretary; Dr. J. B. Probasco and his predecessor on the Board, Judge L. P. Wadsworth; also the acting principal, Mr. L. B. Goodrich; and Rev. Chas. H. Mitchell pastor of the Methodist church, Rev. Dr. Van Meter, a graduate in the Woman's College, Baltimore, Rev. Dr. Yerkes, pastor of the First Baptist church, and Mr. Franklin B. Wiley of the class of '73. These gentlemen occupied seats at the left of the young lady graduates, the young men being at the right.

The new scenery was used for the first time to set off the memorable picture, and the scene chosen was a woodland park ornamented with stationery. Along the front of the stage were floral tributes from friends of the graduates in endless profusion. These chemprise were made while Cappa's Seventh Regiment band, with its customary skill, played as an opening overture Balfe's "Bohemian Girl," and thence the exercises proceeded in the following order.

The Iron Chancellor" was the subject of Miss EL CLARA WOLFMAN'S essay. She sketched Prince Bismarck, the man of blood and iron, from his boyhood up to the present period of his life; told of his successful conflicts with other nations, and concluded by eulogizing him as the greatest living statesman.

"Emancipators" MR. WALTER S. DARBY, attributed to men as slaves sometimes to their fellow-beings and sometimes to their Creator. He told of how Martin Luther emancipated the Papacy in Germany by his indomitable will power, and stated that it was mostly through Luther's efforts that free speech was now established so thoroughly. He advised all to help one another by kindly actions.

"The Pleasures of Science" afforded Miss EMMA V. CASE an opportunity for delightful word pictures. She claimed that science was the most interesting and profitable of all occupations, and that some of the greatest philosophers the world had produced had found pleasure and profit in its study, and concluded by telling how it benefited the scholars of the Plainfield High school.

"Before the Revolution" was the subject treated by MISS PIERRE R. MILLS. She described the uncomfortable manner in which the colonists lived and the various pleasures indulged in by them in Summer and Winter.

"Tannhaus D'Ouverture," was the subject which MR. ALFRED PERSTON WHITE handled in an able manner, "Every nation," he said, has its hero", and the supreme hero of Rohs is D'Ouverture. His delivery was clear and at the conclusion of his essay he was loudly applauded.

"The Sky," by MISS CAROLINE FITZ-RANDOLPH, was a subject well treated. She described how in olden times the farmers obeyed the Father Sky, as they called it; how superstious it was to all men; and concluded by telling of its countless beauties and curiosities.

MR. EDWARD J. PATTERSON ably discussed "Property and Poverty." He treated the subject at length, and in conclusion he thought that the question which is now agitating the minds of many labor leaders could be eminently adjusted by the co-operation of capital and labor.

"Once at Home" was a commendable sketch chosen by MISS MARGARET R. CASH; and she delivered it in a manner which perfect more of an oration. She argued that it was at home true character is revealed, and thus revealed Cicero's.

"Pictors in American Character," with valedictory was the subject chosen by MR. EDWARD CHARLES PETRIE. He explained the difference between American and English characters; he said that an American subjects to call himself an American; that some of the many great men of this lives had established illustrious characters in our nation those who had lived in the last half century are probably the best; take for instance Lincoln, Garfield, Sheridan, Sherman and Dupee. Who would think of calling Lincoln English, Garfield Scotch, or Sheridan Irish or to they are Americans; the longer men linger in America the more closely they will become allied to the nation. In delivery of the valedictory, Mr. Petrie showed much spirit. He thanked the Board of Education for the superior educational advantages which had been afforded the scholars; and the people for the interest they manifested in public entertainments given by the school. Continuing he said, At last we have reached the goal of our youthful ambitions; it is not a night of sorrow for us, but one of deep responsibility; we may be powerful factors in forming our national character." In conclusion he referred feelingly to the American flag which floats from the top of all the schools in the city.

The other graduates are as follows:

Miss BESSIE K. BLAIN.
" MARIAN M. BUXTON.
" ELEANOR R. DAVIS.
" MINNIE JACKSON FRENCH.
" SERVETTE CURTIS SMITH.
" MAY SPELLE.
MR. WILLIAM WALLACE CORNELL.
" EDMUND PHILIP NISCHWITZ.
" ASA F. RANDOLPH.

Mr. Franklyn R. Wiley, in behalf of the class of '79, arose and in an able address presented the High School with a handsome chronometer.

President Kirkner of the Board, in accepting the gift, stated that it was a beautiful one, and that although some people accuse the Board of being unwisely extravagant, they have never yet thought the money rich enough to purchase such a chronometer so valuable.

"Fantasie, the Darkies Dream," was then beautifully rendered by the orchestra, which was compelled to respond to an encore.

The prizes were awarded as follows:

For Penmanship, offered by Mr. Kirkner.

First prize—Handsomely bound set of Longfellow's poems, won by Hattie L. King

Second prize—Set of Whittier's poems, is cloth. Won by Wesley Ulrich.

THE JUDGES.

English composition—D. J. Yerkes, D. D., J. Evarts Tracy and Mason W. Tyler.

Penmanship; as taught—H. P. Reynolds, R. O. Sweeney and D. H. Titsworth.

Mathematics—Wm. M. Stillman.

The prizes for United States History, spelling and languages were decided in the school.

After the band had rendered Keiser's "Pearl of Pekin" Dr. Van Meter began a powerfully set oration, an elaborately prepared address which he read from manuscript and occupied nearly three-quarters of an hour in its delivery. It was classical, philosophical and generally faultless. The interest of the hour, however, was in its impossible for the eye to resolve the attention which might otherwise have been accorded, and which the address undoubtedly deserved. He began by pointing out as a serious crime faulty education, given by incompetent teachers, contrasting the mindless of the past with the present, especially Philadelphia, placing it in the front rank in America, and consequently in the world. He elaborated on this point, and then gave such advice to the graduates as he deemed would be of service to them.

The band here rendered Waldteufel's waltz, "Liege D'Amour."

President Kirkner then presented each of the graduates with a diploma, and as the band in conclusion played a farewell march the audience dispersed.

Thereafter the graduates adjourned to Association Hall, where the usual annual reception was held. The room was thronged to its utmost capacity, with past graduates and their friends, until early hours this morning. Refreshments, dancing, and general feasting of the refreshments so generously provided, Cappa's band furnishing the music.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL, '90.

MOTTO—"HIGHER YET, AND HIGHER."

IN WARREN Mission Chapel on Chatham street, last evening was held the North Plainfield Public School commencement exercises.

At eight o'clock the building was well filled with the relatives and friends of the scholars, and plenty of vestibules and the fluttering of many fans made the atmosphere enjoyable.

The chapel has been greatly enlarged and improved during the past year, and on the stage behind large sliding doors were seated the scholars who had earned promotion. They were not visible to the audience until the doors were rolled back, suddenly disclosing the many white dresses and bright smiling faces of the younger scholars who were to help the programme with their songs.

While the people in the audience were looking to see and encourage their dear ones with smiles, Miss Carrie Randolph, who presided at the piano, played a march, to which the graduating class marched slowly, in single file and with martial tread, to their seats on the front of the platform, followed by Mr. Chas. E. Bice, Principal of the school, and the President of the Board of Education, Dr. H. K. Carroll.

The exercises were opened by the school singing, "Praise the Father," followed by a declamation entitled, "The Duty of Christian Citizenship," by Mr. John A. Steiner, showing the beauties of model citizenship, from the time of Paul to the present day, and as easy rendered in graceful, well rounded sentences, showing farm it is and scenery in poetical sweetness, by Miss Josie E. Van Arsdale, entitled, "The Old Lease." James F. Ingram in his declamation about "Bay Bully," told of a fierce charge at the Battle of Fredericksburg which was led by the horse, without a rider, and won.

"The Song of the Sea," sung by the school in parts, was bright and well rendered. Miss Emily M. Cathcart told a sad story entitled "The Legend of the Organ Builder," in which a young genius came to grief by making an idol of his profession. "How Guvin Go Fishing" was the name of a funny recitation by Harry H. Coddington, who told of the mishaps of the girls as though he had been there himself. "The Nursery Rhymes" were rendered in medley song by the school and was an improvement on the old way, giving the ditties additional charm.

Part second on the programme was opened with a declamation by Robert M. Clark entitled "Daniel Periton's Ride," the hero being the bookkeeper who rode from Commenagh to Johnstown warning people of the flood and giving a very vivid description of the country en route. The song of Miss Grace J. Carroll was entitled "An Unruly Member," referring at length to the tongue, mentioning that it was a bad master but a good servant. "The Children's Cherry Feast," was a bright story by Miss Mina L. Amerman of some brave children who by their playful innocence and strategy raised the siege of Nuremburg, which was held by Cossack warriors. The school sang "Airs from Kreutzer Sonata and violin accompaniment by Miss Randolph and Irving A. Whitting, which also well applauded. Miss Lizzie M. Whitford told a story following that of "The Jackdaw of Rheims," who stole a ring at a feast of the Cardinal and his bishops, and died with dire calamity, causing him to repent and become pious. "Kossuth's Charge," which was sung at the battle of Fredericksburg, was told of in a realistic manner by Charles E. Hamilton, after which President Carroll of the Board of Education addressed the graduates and presented each with the diplomas of honor. Flowers in abundance were presented to the graduates and after the entertainment had ended. The following is a list of the graduates:

MISS LEWIS AMERMAN.
JOSIE ELLIOTT VAN ARSDALE
GRACE JOHNSON CARROLL.
EMILY MAE CATHCART.
ROBERT MARTIN CLARK.
LILLIE GRACE CLARK.
GEORGE ERNEST CATHCART.
HARRY H. CODDINGTON.
SAMUEL G. CURRIE
KATIE M. DUFFY.
CHARLES EDWARD HAMILTONE.
JAMES F. INGRAM.
LIZZIE WILLARD STAFFORD
JOHN A. STEINER
IDA L. WHITFORD.
IRVING S. WHITING.
LESLIE M. WHITLOCK.
SUE DAVIES WOODLAND.

The alumni will give a reception in the school building this evening, only graduates to be present.

THE SWEET GIRL GRADUATE.

She has wrestled with the sages of the time long ago,
She has mastered Cicero's declamation from Demosthenes to Burke;
She has scaled Science's highest mount and been making
Euclid's theorems, and can giggle in all languages from English down to Turk.

She can argue in the issue, knows the history of nations,
And will go way back to Adam to find out their origin;
She can bring up illustrations she's obtained from divers nations on the somewhat strained relationship of the Chinese and Japs.

From old Socrates to Spencer she has read and rated each and honor her intellectual adornments are a wonder to be seen;
In the higher walks of learning, and in art she makes no error, and she knows the mental value of the hackneyed Boston bean.

SHE HAS CONQUERED ALL KNOWLEDGE.

She can show that old man Time up was in some degree a stump; she has mastered all Aristotle and brought Socrates to task;
She's versed in all the rules of Solon, in the value of a colon and can calculate the contents of the Dutchman's famous cask.

She has studied up on diction, has explored the realms
Of Greek from Homer's Iliad down to Xenophon and Bacon and of Policy and their enemy,
She can quote from Pegay's story and from Shakespeare and read and weep and feel softened by Shakespeare and read Burton on the blues.

There is not a branch of knowledge that this girl
Has not taken in her stride, and learned it well;
She can tell you, dearie, Venus is not made by herself
But it isn't for her learning that she fills so many
She is a woman,
and that's just the reason why.

—Yale Record.

In the Clutches of Law.

Yesterday afternoon a man from the rural districts came to Plainfield to sell some garden truck. After he had disposed of his produce he visited the various saloons of the city and commenced to fill up with "Jersey lightning." After he had satisfied his appetite he stationed himself at the corner of Front and Liberty streets and commenced abusing some laborers who were employed in the vicinity. Policeman Laing happened along and ordered the fellow to move on. This he refused to do, and the officer thereupon placed him under arrest. The fellow resisted, but nevertheless Mr. Laing succeeded in locking him up.

When he was arraigned before City Judge Codington this morning, he gave his name as James Bauly. He was very repentent, and pleaded with the Judge to let him go home, saying that he had a large family depending upon him for support: that it was the first time he had ever been arrested, etc. Judge Codington took that into consideration, and let the unfortunate off with a three dollar fine.

Bowling on Green.

The Dunellen Bowling Green Club played at Schepflin's Court, Dunellen, yesterday. The result is as follows:

First game—C. Schepflin and William Elliott, vs. J. H. Smyth and H. Douglass. Decided in favor of the former by a score 21 to 8.

Second game—C. Schepflin William Elliot, F. P. Haffner and G. D. Haines vs. Thos. Stone, J. E. Haines, D. B. Cockburn and Andrew Lowe, was decided in favor of the former by a score 21 to 17.

Third game—C. Schepflin, William Elliott, F. P. Haffner, and J. D. Haines vs. Thos. Stone, H. Douglass, D. B. Cockburn, and Andrew Lowe was won by the latter. Score 14 to 21.

Messrs. Schepflin and Haffner, also belonging to the Middlesex County Bowling Green Club, which will play July 12th.

Bicycle Records.

"We are informed" that the time of 35 minutes, from the Crescent avenue church, this city, to Westfield and return was shortened by Marion S. Ackerman last night, who made the distance in a trifle over 30 minutes. Messrs. James Murray and L. Waring met Mr. Ackerman at Westfield, and not the pace home, arriving at the finish about 30 seconds ahead of Mr. Ackerman.

We are also informed that "The record from Westfield to Plainfield, was broken last evening by Louis R. Waring. His time was 15 minutes and 38 seconds. J. E. Murray was second, Marion Ackerman, third, and E. Moore, fourth. The old record was 15 minutes and 30 seconds, held by Mr. Ackerman. Mr. Waring rode a safety."

The Last Two Nights.

Prof. O. R. Gleason, the king of horse tamers, has arranged for a large programme to-night. The performing horses will not appear this evening, or to-morrow evening, as eleven horses, all possessing some bad habits, have been booked for to-night. Among the number, a fighting and biting stallion, famous for his viciousness, will be handled, and a lively fight is expected between man and horse. Two horses will be handled at the same time, one by the professor and the other by Mr. Norton B. Smith. So a treat is looked for. To-morrow afternoon a grand exhibition for families and children, and to-morrow night a grand double programme.

The youngest child of Street Commissioner Mosher also had a fall from the baby's high chair striking on its head and causing concussion of the brain. It is reported as much improved to-day.

A Barn Burned.

At about two o'clock this afternoon a two story frame barn belonging to Princess Randolph situated along Greenbrook near Plainfield avenue was discovered to be afire. An alarm was sounded, but the flames had gained such headway that the building was burned to the ground. The loss is estimated at about $200. The fire is supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

The Roses of Santa Cruz.

Every year in the month of May the women's united benevolent organizations of Santa Cruz, Cal., hold a rose fair in aid of the various charities represented by each. Nest in the whole world unless perhaps in Persia and regions where the attar of roses is made, can be seen so great variety and profusion of the queen of flowers. We are millionaires and don't know it!" exclaims the editor of the Santa Cruz Surf.

Certain it is that the rarest and costliest rose shows either of Europe or America can offer nothing to equal the display that nature herself, almost unaided by man, showers before his scarcely heeding eyes at Santa Cruz.

May in California is what the Almighty meant it to be, the month of flowers, especially of roses. The blossoms that in most other parts of the Union do not unfold till June, here are at their best in May. Every flower, in greater or less profusion, the flowers bloom here in the year around. One of the features of the rose fair this year was a row of booths representing the "twelve months of blossom," each booth conspicuously displaying the flower that most abounded in that month.

Some of the gardens at Santa Cruz furnished to the fair no less than a hundred varieties of roses. Kinds the most delicate, these fostered with hothouse care in other states, here burst their fullness and trail luxuriously over earth, fences and trees with no care at all. The Santa Cruz Surf mentions a Marechal Neil bush that has a stem eighteen inches in circumference. A La Marque covers all the front of a two story house and climbs upon the roof. A pink climbing rose has so appropriated to itself an old apple tree that the whole tree has become one mass of pink. In Scott's Valley are two ten rose trees 20 years old, with trunks as thick as a man's arm. What sights these would be to greet the eye of a citizen of the cold north, where the small rose bushes must be carefully protected in winter, and ten roses will scarcely grow out doors at all!

Other flowers grow in this favored spot with as much profusion as the roses. The gigantic scarlet geraniums of southern California have long been known. At the rose fair the children of a public school exhibited a collection of sixty-four varieties of wild flowers. But to one who has seen them, a thing to linger in the memory, a joy forever are the roses of Santa Cruz.

A Pension for Teachers.

The teachers of Philadelphia are engaged in a movement which is worth imitation in all the cities and towns of the Union. Its object is to provide a fund which will pension aged or disabled teachers. Teachers in several of the large cities have some such scheme on hand, but the Philadelphia plan is simple and sensible.

The teachers unite in an organization to establish a pension fund. Members agree each to give 1 per cent. annually from their salaries for the fund. Entertainments are given to swell the amount. The teachers and citizens of each ward take the matter in hand, see what their ward will do for the good work, and a generous rivalry has arisen among them. Children are appealed to, school children become interested, and in many ways the fund swells. As fast as amounts are large enough they are invested in safe securities and an income derived from them.

This income will be what will take care of aged and infirm teachers when they can no longer preside over a schoolroom. There is not to be a home or anything having the appearance of a charity. The money itself is to be given to the old teacher, to spend as he or she wishes, living at home among friends. It is to be given quietly and delicately, without any fuss or publicity, and without making the recipient feel that he is living on charity, which indeed he will not be doing.

The grimmest humorist of his time was that aged school teacher, William W. Merriam, who died of 80 years old and left $100,000 to the United States on the ground that the government was rich and could afford to fight his relatives when they attempted to break his will. Merriam was a brother of the publishers of Webster's Dictionary. He evidently knew his family, for his three sisters have already brought suit to break the will, declaring that the testator was of unsound mind. If the government defends its case we shall witness the interesting spectacle of a fight between the United States and three Connecticut women.

Something is the matter with Chicago in connection with the census. Something is always the matter with Chicago in connection with the census. Its cold facts and figures do not suit her poetic, prairie wind imagination. This time, as usual, "hundreds of families were left out of the count." Has the United States government a spite at Chicago?

CRAMP'S FAST CRUISER.

The Philadelphia Makes Nearly Twenty Knots an Hour.

HER TRIAL TRIP WAS A SUCCESS.

She Will Undoubtedly Be Accepted by Uncle Sam and Will Not Her Builders a Handsome Bounty—Her Trial Trip Described by an Officer on Board.

PHILADELPHIA, June 27.—It was 3 o'clock on the morning of Tuesday when the cruiser Philadelphia slipped her dock lines at the shipyard of her builders, the Messrs. William Cramp & Sons, of Philadelphia, and began to move down the Delaware river on her way to test her speed on the measured course off Long Island. On board were Messrs. William Cramp, Edwin S. Cramp, Andrew D. Cramp, Walter S. Cramp, Dr. Kneedler, Dr. Lincoln and the officers of the Navy detailed for duty connected with the trial.

THE STEAMER PHILADELPHIA.

Description of the Cruiser.

The Philadelphia is a twin screw steel cruiser of 4,324 tons displacement. The contract for her was let to the William Cramp & Sons Shipbuilding company, of Philadelphia, in October, 1887, and her contract time was two years; contract price, $1,330,000; contract speed, nineteen knots. Her main battery consists of twelve six inch breechloading rifles and she carries a number of machine guns and revolving cannon.

Ready for the Trip.

The trial run occurred Wednesday off Long Island, and although the conditions were unfavorable, the new cruiser made nearly twenty knots an hour. An officer on board thus describes the trip: Bustle reigns at once on shipboard. The trained crew of the Cramps disappear in the hold. Chief Engineer Patterson goes into the fire room and closes the doors air tight. Six men are shut into the pit with him. Chief Engineer Johnson disappears in the engine rooms with sixteen engineers and twenty-four others. There are also eight coal passers, four water tenders and eight men at the blowers, which suck down air from the scene of gaping funnels. Twenty government engineers also go below with measuring machines to measure horse power and other data not required on the trip, but useful to the department.

Away She Goes!

The gleaming Philadelphia is sighted apparently in position eight miles away. A shriek from the Philadelphia's whistle tells the imprisoned crew that the race will begin and the vessel jumps at once. Capt. Steel takes his place on the bridge. William Cramp, pencil and paper in hand, sits on the bridge. The trial may mean a premium of $300,000 or a loss of $200,000. He seems as cool as any other interested spectator. The vibrations of the vessel seem to cease, but the subdued roar of the machinery keeps up. Down into the fire room runs a tube from a barrel containing iced lemonade and ginger ale. No man must leave that room. Its temperature is about 102 degs., and the men must have a cooling drink. Quantities of ice are being carried to the engine room for the men down there. Long lines of hose run down there so as to keep the machinery cool with water. Not an inch must be lost.

Like a Giant of the Sea.

The race is on. Like a giant of the sea and clouds the lead colored Philadelphia has rushed across the line. The Dolphin, a little off the range, is passed half a minute later. The next marking vessel, eight miles away, cannot be discovered, and the course leads by compass only. The light wind is from the southwest and the sea is lumpy. The revolutions of the screws are 120 to the minute and the full 160 pounds of steam is on in the four boilers. Steady as a ray of light the ship moves on. From her two smoke stacks the black smoke pours, and, mingling, streams away behind the cruiser like a stiff pennant in a stalwart breeze.

The next marking vessel, the Nina, is passed 29 min. and 32 sec. after the start.

A Little Over Nineteen Knots.

The vessel rushes on and anxious eyes look for the next vessel, the coast survey vessel Blake. She is seen so soon that there is a suspicion that the compasses have gone astray. Astern, however, the Nina is in a straight line with the two. The Blake is passed 50 min. and 32 sec. away from the starting point. According to these figures the Philadelphia is going at twenty-one and a half knots, but the Blake is out of position.

Twenty more minutes pass, and then the Petrel is sighted about two miles off the straight line to the eastward. She too is out of position, and is among the fog. She was more than 30 min. from the Blake. On, on speeds the cruiser, and at last the Essex, which marks one end of the course, is passed. Scraps the chronometers. It is 2 h. 6 min. and 27 sec. from the starting point, and the speedy pencils show this to be only a little over nineteen knots speed.

William Cramp comes down to the bridge deck; he suggests that perhaps the ranges have not been found. Capt. Sten rushes down and will not listen. He shouts:

"Turn her around! We get it! We got it! Turn her around! We got it!"

He gesticulates like a stock broker and repeats his excited words a score of times. Capt. Cramp gives him a searching glance, and then calmly looks to Capt. Steel on the bridge and says: "Make the turn." Perhaps scores of thousands of dollars are slipping from him, but he never loses his equanimity.

The Finish.

The return trip is made at increased speed. At last the finish is in sight and there are the black and fatty spars of a stop-of-war near the Dolphin. It is the Kearsarge—a masterpiece of the old navy lying at the finish to cheer the flower of the new. Quick figuring shows an average run of almost exactly nineteen and a half knots. The Cramps say they are satisfied. The board of engineers say the course was 30.282 knots long, and they announce the speed as 19.312 knots.

CORNELL WON THE RACE.

University of Pennsylvania Defeated by Six Lengths.

COLUMBIA'S CREW DID NOT ROW.

The Official Time Was: Cornell, 14:33; Pennsylvania, 15:09—The Latter Crew Went to Pieces in the First Mile—A Lively Spurt at the Finish.

NEW LONDON, Conn., June 27.—The Cornell university crew won their race with the University of Pennsylvania last evening by six lengths over the three mile course in the fast time of 14:33. Pennsylvania's time was 15:09. The race was very quiet and uninteresting after the first half mile, as the Pennsylvania boys gradually dropped behind while the Cornells kept increasing their lead.

Nearly a Length Stolen.

Pennsylvania caught the water first and stole nearly a length on Cornell, the latter's boat not being headed straight. Pennsylvania started off with 38 strokes and Cornell pulling 40. Cornell moved up on even terms after the first quarter, and then both crews spurted. Pennsylvania ran up to 42 and Cornell to 43. This was all. Decisive and only interesting part of the race. Pennsylvania held her place until exactly opposite the first half mile flag, when they dropped to 36 strokes, while Cornell was rowing 40.

Pennsylvania Went to Pieces.

The Pennsylvania crew then went to pieces, each man appeared to be pulling on his own account, the oars striking the water in one, two, three, four order. Opposite the navy yard, Cornell having a lead of two lengths, dropped their stroke to 36, while Pennsylvania had dropped to 32. After passing the mile flag Pennsylvania improved somewhat, and between the one and two mile flags the crews pulled nearly stroke for stroke, Cornell gradually increasing their lead to three and a half lengths.

Both Crews Spurted.

Entering the last half both crews spurted, and in doing so Cornell caught two crabs in quick succession, thereby losing nearly a boat length. Recovering, they put in a strong spurt and increased their lead, crossing the line six lengths in advance of the Pennsylvania crew. Pennsylvania made a fairly good spurt at the finish, but to no effect.

The official time was: Cornell, 14:33; Pennsylvania, 15:09.

A Highwayman Stoned.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., June 27.—At noon Paymaster Atkinson, of the Wyman coke works, was seated alone in the company's office counting the money to pay the company's employes. Atkinson had just placed the money ($7,200) in envelopes, when suddenly a masked man covered him with a revolver and ordered him to throw up his hands. Atkinson ran out of the office and gave an alarm. The robber seized the money and fled. A party gave chase. The robber turned and fired several shots at his pursuers. The last one hit the thief with a stone, causing him to drop his hat and part of the money. He was recognized as Perry Donaldson, a former employe of the company. What Was What the World's Fair Banquet Cost the Guests.

CHICAGO, June 27.—The national movement in connection with the World's Columbian exposition was inaugurated Thursday. The Grand Pacific hotel was the principal center of the World's fair delegates, and its spacious rotunda was almost impassable. Each one of the states and territories sent two delegates, and the ten delegates at large appointed by President Harrison were all here. A. T. Ewing, one of the commissioners from Illinois, called the convention to order on behalf of the secretary of state, and Judge John T. Harris, of Virginia, was made temporary chairman.

The committee on rules, as a whole, will first be called upon to decide two matters—first, the question of site, and, second, the sufficiency of the fund. Although the local board of directors have already practically decided upon the lake front and have opened negotiations with the Illinois Central railway looking to joint action, it is not at all certain that the national commission will indorse that action. As to the question of the sufficiency of the fund there will be no difference of opinion. If in the judgment of the national commission the amount subscribed, or to be subscribed, is not enough for all purposes the board of directors will guarantee to secure without delay as many millions more as may be necessary or desirable. The problem of raising the money for prizes, etc., came in for a good deal of canvassing this morning.

Ex-Secretary Palmer, of Michigan, seems to be everybody's candidate for president. The New York delegates have publicly announced their intention of placing Mr. Depew in nomination, but in view of the great interests which require his undivided attention, it is not thought probable for a moment that he would consent to occupy the position. For secretary energetic efforts have been put forth of behalf of the Hon. Benjamin Butterworth and John T. Dixon, of Texas, and it is thought that the latter is in the lead.

A banquet was given to the 104 commissioners at the Palmer house last night. The affair was an elaborate one and very select, the number of the guests being limited.

Outside of those who were permitted to pay $15 per plate for their participation the only guests present besides the commissioners were Chief Justice Fuller, Justice Harlan, Governor Fifer and Mayor Cregier. The toasts were as follows: "The Relation of the World's Columbian Exposition to Commerce," "Its Relation to National Unity," "Its Relation to Interstate Unity," "Its Relation to Arts and Sciences," "Its Relation to National Resources," "Its Relation to Labor," "Its Relation to Our National Growth," "Its Relation to the Press," "Its Relation to Literature and Education."

The speakers included ex-Minister Palmer, Henry Exall, of Texas; Thomas A. McKenzie, Mark McDonald, of California; Charles H. Jones, of The St. Louis Republic, and Col. A. G. Bullock, of Massachusetts.

The following letter from President Harrison, dated June 23, was read:

"I am in receipt of your invitation on behalf of the citizens of Chicago to attend a reception and banquet to be given on the evening of the 25th inst. to the United States commissioners of the World's Columbian exposition.

"It will be impossible for me to be present, but I avail myself of the opportunity to express my deep interest in the success of the exposition, and my sincere hope that the commissioners on the part of the United States will not fail to co-operate diligently and in the most liberal spirit with the local management in everything calculated to make this in fact as well as in name a World's exposition. Very respectfully yours,

"BENJAMIN HARRISON."

LUCIEN W. SPERRY'S SUICIDE.

New Haven's Ex-Mayor Ends His Troubles with a Pistol.

NEW HAVEN, June 27.—Lucien W. Sperry, one of New Haven's most prominent citizens a few years since, shot and killed himself Thursday. He was 70 years old, and had served the city as mayor and representative in the legislature. He was a descendant of one of the earliest families of New Haven. He was a brother of Postmaster N. D. Sperry. The suicide was caused by financial troubles. Mr. Sperry was some years ago appointed trustee of an estate valued at $60,000. Within the past few weeks relatives have been trying to get control of the estate, and Mr. Sperry was ordered by the court to render his account.

He could account for but $7,000, and was practically adjudged an embezzler, and would probably have been arrested had he not shot himself. Besides this it is said that he was under bond for $50,000 criminal indebtedness without a dollar with which to clear himself.

Mr. Sperry always lived in fine style, and he passed much of his life in Europe. The suicide has caused a sensation, as Sperry shot himself in his home, which is in one of the most fashionable portions of Orange street.

He Wants Him Removed.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—Representative Wilson, of Washington, called on Indian Commissioner Morgan in regard to Superintendent Abbott, of the Indian school at the Yakima agency. Mr. Abbott is from Rhode Island and was appointed by Mr. Morgan, and the latter evinced no surprise when Mr. Wilson told him that Abbott was a Democrat and ought to give place to some good man who was a Republican. In order that the commissioner might not be at a loss to get some one to fill Mr. Abbott's place, Mr. Wilson suggested a name and urged the appointment. Gen. Morgan, however, did not want to abandon his friend, and so he stood out in his defense. A debate ensued in which neither party became convinced, and Mr. Wilson grew very angry. The interview terminated rather abruptly, and Mr. Wilson withdrew, announcing his intention to carry the matter to Secretary Noble.

CONTROL OF ELECTIONS.

Interesting Speeches on the National Measure.

NORTH AND SOUTH REPRESENTED

Legislatives Lodge, of the Bay State, and Hemphill, of South Carolina, Present Their Respective Views—The Negro and the Ballot in the South.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—In the house debate was resumed on the national election bill.

Mr. Lodge on the Election Bill.

Mr. Lodge said the subject was grave and demanded serious and deliberative treatment. He desired to treat this question dispassionately. The proposed bill existed the laws regarding the election of members so that they would be effective throughout the United States whenever the people wanted them so extended. He did not like to see machinery used to be overhauled and that ballots were to be cast as at present and no secret system was to be interfered with where it now prevailed. Under the terms of the bill concealment was impossible without a resort to violence and violence itself was publicity. The power of congress to enact such legislation was conclusive.

The acts which it was proposed to extend had been called into existence by the gigantic frauds in the city of New York prior to 1870 and 1871. Mr. Lodge gave a description of the state of affairs at that time in New York city, citing among other things the Tenth district of the Sixth ward, where he said the Democratic vote, after allowing cast all of the other votes, was 5, or 1 % more than the total number of every man, woman and child resident in the district. There were other cities and districts where like frauds were done.

In the Southern States.

As to the southern states it was apparent that many people believed that great frauds were committed there. The United States should not be to the veil if it had to examine every power the constitution put into its hands. Mr. Lodge presented a number of statements to show the insufficiency of representation in the south. He said that in forty election districts in the south the members were elected by an average of less than 15,000 votes. He compared Mississippi and New Jersey, where the population in 1880 were equal in number. The total vote in Mississippi was 197,000, in New Jersey 385,000. In the congressional vote in Mississippi had dwindled to 73,000, while in New Jersey it had swollen to 360,000. No intelligent man would deny that these frauds in the south. He stated he had the proof was the efforts made by both parties there to throw open the elections to publicity.

The Negro Problem.

As to the south it was largely a question of race. The negro problem was one of the greatest before the American people. It was one in which all were concerned and all responsible, whether living in the north or south. The wrong of slavery was to be expiated by the north, which condoned it, as well as by the south, which upheld it. The negro was not forced on us like the Chinese. It was idle to say he was better off than if he had not been brought to the nation. Better an ethical state of savage liberty than a civilization which came to them with the auctioneer's hammer in one hand and the slave driver's whip in the other. Such fidelity as the negro had shown to government and to master deserved a better reward from the country north and south than it had yet received. The negro wanted no brutality to one side and sentimentality on the other. The government which made the negro a citizen was in a cowardly position against it if it did not protected him in his right. The first step toward a solution of the race problem was to take it out of national politics.

"Unconstitutional," Says Mr. Hemphill.

Mr. Hemphill (S. C.) made an argument to prove the bill unconstitutional, reading from legislative decisions by New York, Ohio and West Jersey against congressional usurpation of the right to conduct elections. The bill, he said, was sectional because it provided that supervisors of the United States should be under the supervision of two to five supervisors, according to the respective size of congressional and judicial districts. Again, he thought the provision for putting the law into effect by petition was sectional. Suppose a United States inspector should be corrupted and should return a Democrat when a Republican had been elected. There was no more iniquitous provision in the bill than that which provided for an unnumbered force of men at the discretion of the direction of the supervisor. He referred to the charges of partisanship against the federal judge and marshal in Florida as an illustration of his statement that it was with the elections that troubled the people of the south, but the white holders sent to trouble them.

A New South Needed.

He said it was the confession that there was a general belief that the corruption existed was most humiliating. What the country needed was a new north that would take the view suggested by the facts and not by their preconceived prejudices. He ridiculed the Republican cry of "a free ballot and a fair count," and said that if he was going to talk about a free ballot in Kansas when the state had been so gerrymandered that the 147,000 Democrats there had never been represented in the house. He referred to the peculiarities of districting which made it take more votes in California, Illinois and other states to send a Democrat to congress than to send a Republican. He charged that New York and Connecticut were both misrepresented on the floor of the senate because both of them were really Democratic.

The Colored Man's Rights.

In conclusion Mr. Hemphill said: "We know we must either rule that country (the south) or leave it. I say myself before the people of the United States and before God in all reverence, I swear we will not leave it.

"I do not hesitate to say that the colored man has as many rights as I have, but he can't have his rights and mine too, and this law is intended to put him again in control of the southern states. Intended to awaken that mea prejudice which is fast dying out; intended to bring about again that constant irritation and clash between the two races in the south which will retard its growth and which will be destructive of the very principles of human government."

Opposed by Mr. Lehlbach.

Mr. Lehlbach (N. J.) opposed the bill on the ground that while frauds occurred in many districts it would be wiser to let the people of several states regulate their own elections than to attempt the law if enacted would be uniformly applicable and not dependent upon the petition of any number of citizens.

MR. BLAINE'S RECIPROCITY SCHEME.

The House Seems to Strongly Favor the Legislation Proposed.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—The strongest sentiment in favor of Mr. Blaine's reciprocity proposition seems to dwell with the members of the house of representatives from the middle and western states. Mr. Payson said that all the western representatives were largely in favor of the proposition as embodied in the amendment offered by Mr. Hale in the senate. Mr. Payson addressed a republican meeting of western members a few days ago, and he said there was a surprising unanimity of opinion expressed there in favor of Mr. Blaine's amendment. "I am heartily in myself," he said. "I am heartily in favor of some reciprocity measure." He thought that the matter would be pressed this session or taken up as a separate measure before the end of the Fifty-first congress.

Mr. Boswell, of Illinois, said that he did not see how the recommendations could be adopted at this time. He had always been in favor of going a great way with South American nations in the matter of reciprocity, but at the present time there were too many conflicting relations between American nations to make the culmination of Mr. Blaine's ideas speedily possible. Mr. Dorsey, of Nebraska, was surprised that the matter of reciprocity had not been considered before the tariff bill was disposed of by the house. He thought it too late to take it up this session, but he believed that it would be considered before the end of the congress. Mr. Delano, of New York, thought that even those who had not been in favor of reciprocity would admit that there was a great deal of force in Mr. Blaine's argument, but he was not certain whether the practical application of the plan would work for all sections.

Mr. Cutcheon, of Michigan, thought the recommendations wise. Their success in the house, he believed, would largely depend on the action of the senate on the Hale amendment.

Mr. Hitt, of Illinois, chairman of the committee on foreign affairs, said that the members of his committee seemed to be in favor of reciprocity. Already two reciprocity resolutions had been reported favorably from the committee. The great party measures now before congress, he thought, might interfere with the consideration of the recommendations this congress.

Had Work with a Flatiron.

MANCHESTER, Vt., June 27.—Charles Seymour, of Manchester Center, in a fit of frenzy struck Frank Herding, a Hungarian, with a flatiron on the head, back of the ear, knocking him down, and struck him three times more with the weapon. He was drunk. Seymour's wife started to alarm the neighbors, when he struck her with the flatiron, knocking her down. He then struck his brother-in-law, Austin Ira, who interposed and cut his throat with a pocketknife, severing the windpipe, and also stabbed himself in the abdomen. Seymour and Herding are the two most seriously injured. The others are in a critical state. Seymour has been in poor health for some time and had shown signs of insanity. There was also some evidence that he was jealous of his wife, though there does not seem to have been any cause for jealousy.

Retired by Foreign Competition.

PHILADELPHIA, June 27.—Executions to the amount of $91,000 have been issued against the firm of John J. Glazier, Brotherton & Co., manufacturers of hosiery. Among the creditors are Catlin & Co., of New York ($30,000), and the First National bank of Cumberland, Md. ($10,000). The firm had an office at No. 33 Bank street and a mill at No. 1,817 East York street, where a large number of people were employed. Foreign competition, it is said, ruined their business.

GEN. MARCIAL SHOT DEAD.

Tragic Incidents of the Revolution in Salvador.

LA LIBERTAD, SALVADOR, via GALVESTON, June 27.—During a ball given at the president's residence in the capital on the 23d inst. Gens. Melendez and Marcial quarreled in the ball room and announced on behalf of his chief, Gen. Ezeta, who had arrived with 600 men from Santa Ana, a revolt against the existing government, demanding at the same time the deposition of President Menendez.

At this juncture Gen. Martinez, commander of the government forces in the capital, appeared and announced that President Menendez requested an audience with Gen. Marcial. An altercation ensued between Martinez and Marcial, resulting in the latter being shot and instantly killed. Ezeta's soldiers thereupon took Martinez prisoner and captured the barracks. Twenty-three persons were killed.

It is asserted that the president died on the following day from heart disease, which was brought on by the excitement. Gen. Ezetas was proclaimed provisional president and a new cabinet was formed, which has since been dissolved and Gen. Guirola is for the present directing the different branches of governamental administration. General order prevails.

The Hill Farm Mine Tapped.

DUNBAR, Pa., June 27.—The tension here is absolutely painful, although the people are without hope of finding their friends and comrades alive. For two days twenty men have been cutting a tunnel from the Ferguson mine to the Hill Farm mine from another direction. They have kept very quiet about it, as it was very dangerous. At 10 o'clock last night they had reached within two feet of the Hill Farm mine, they were discovered and stopped by the authorities. Testing machines were sent into the tunnel, a drill was forced through into the mine, a bag of air from the Hill Farm mine was taken out for testing. The hole was then plugged, and, it is said, no further efforts at rescue *will be made from that direction. No dan*gerous substances were in the air tested.

Another Big Strike Threatened.

CHICAGO, June 27.—The fight is now on between the Illinois Central and its men. General Superintendent Sullivan having declined to meet the Division Superintendent E. G. Russell. FeTTERMAN'S FIGHT.

THE MASSACRE BY THE SIOUX AT FORT PHIL KEARNY, DAKOTA.

Col. Fetterman Volunteers to Head a Relief Party—Stirring Scene in the Threshand Fort—The Relief Party Ambushed by the Sioux and Slaughtered to a Man.

[Copyright by American Press Association.]

RAIN grows on the field of the Fort Phil Kearny massacre, and the remains of seventy-odes a gallant men who fell there have but lately been rescued from the trampling hoofs of cattle and the ruthless plowshare of a scrupulous farmer who values the soil for its products rather than its associations. The present occupant is a stranger, and knows nothing of the battle that took place Dec. 21, 1866, and the removal of the bodies of the massacred soldiers by a distant national cemetery (after Battlefield), has destroyed the last mark of the conflict. Such is warfare on the plains, and the fate of the heroes of Indian fights seems to be a plunge into oblivion.

The massacre, which was one of the most heartrending in all border annals, was perpetrated by the bloody Sioux under Red Leaf, a subordinate chief to Red Cloud. The troops were commanded by Lieut. Col. W. J. Fetterman, Eighteenth United States infantry. Not a white man escaped, and the story of the fight could only be gleaned from the signs found on the spot after the fray was over.

Like the Little Bit Horn massacre, where Custer fell, the Fort Phil Kearny massacre took place in a valley, out of sight of any chance spectators. The same kind of collision was the old story of the white man's encroachments and savage vengeance. The massacre occurred just at the close of the Sioux war, when the native war strength had been taxed to the utmost and the Indians had been left pretty much to themselves, to become insolent and powerful. Civilization was pushing on across Montana and Wyoming, making highways through the haunts of the black bear, the antelope and the buffalo, while Red Cloud's bands claimed as their hunting grounds. The government held that the territory belonged to the friendly Crows, and when Red Cloud ordered the settlers and the troops to leave or take the consequences several forts were built to protect the country through central Dakota and southern Montana. Fort Phil Kearny, at the crossing of Piney creek, in Dakota, was one of these. The posts were far apart, and the relations of each were made for the purpose of defense in case of a heavy attack. The garrison of Fort Phil Kearny was about 400 strong, and consisted of five companies of the Eighteenth infantry and one of the Second cavalry.

Col. Henry B. Carrington, of the Eighteenth, commanded the district and had his headquarters at Fort Phil Kearny, where Col. Fetterman was second in command. Skirmishing and fighting had been going on for months in the whole region and the posts were virtually in a state of seige. It was with difficulty that supply trains could be piloted through to the forts. The only dependence of the troops upon the surrounding country was for wood for fuel and for building purposes, and at Fort Phil Kearny this had to be hauled about four miles. On the morning of December 21 the wood train, while on the way to the timber lot, was fired upon by a band of savages and went into position for defense. The pickets, who occupied elevated places around the fort, soon signaled danger and the garrison was called out by the bugle alarm. Col. Carrington and others had families at the fort, and some little ones who were playing outside of the stockade read the terrible news told by the signal flag and ran in to their mothers crying out, "Indians! Indians!" Every soldier's heart thrilled anew with the resolution to stand between the helpless ones looking to them for protection and the cruel red men whose hearts knew no mercy for age or sex.

The garrison was soon hotly besieged by skirmishing parties that were outside and by a guard which was with the wood train. Col. Carrington ordered another detachment to prepare to move out and rescue the train, and at the same time gave instructions for the remaining troops of the garrison to defend the fort in case of a general attack. The detachment consisted of one company of the Eighteenth infantry, formerly commanded by Fetterman, Capt. F. H. Brown's company of the Second cavalry, and some small details of other available troops. The soldiers, officers and men numbered seventy-odes. While the preparations were going on groups of Indians began to show themselves in the openings of the forest within sight. As soon as the command was drawn up on the parade ready for the start Col. Carrington addressed the whole assembled garrison, and then mounted the duty of watching the fort and cookees. Every employe, servant, woman and boy was provided with weapons. Before giving the word of command, "Forward," to the little detachment upon whom all eyes rested, Col. Carrington, not having yet designated a leader for the party, coolly handed his revolver to his wife, who stood beside her mounted horse, and said, "If the worst comes to worst do not allow yourself to be taken prisoner, but kill yourself rather than be captured."

This gave notice that the commandant intended to lead the forlorn supporting party himself. Fetterman, whose name was a by-word for high courage, was standing passive in his place near his superior, awaiting orders, and when this startling speech was finished he saluted the speaker coolly and glancing from the gentle, clinging wife thus addressed, to her gallant husband and the little band gathered to follow him on this errand of almost certain disaster, spoke with soldierly courtesy and energy this very logical protest:

"Col. Carrington, the garrison of which you are commander is not going out entire, but only a detachment, and I, as second in command to you and as senior officer after you, respectfully claim my right to lead at this time."

The appeal was irresistible, and it removed all excuse for the colonel's separation from his family. Should he refuse Fetterman's request to lead the party it would be the duty of that officer's wall known bravery, and should he permit Fetterman to lead and yet himself accompany the troops it would throw a doubt upon the ability of his subordinate. The order was given and the party marched out of the stockade under Fetterman. Inspired by the bloody field of Chickamauga, of the Eighteenth regiment, and two or three civilians volunteered to go along.

Once outside of the fort Fetterman dashed on toward the scene where the wood train guard were now fighting with savages. On the bare knolls all around and in the openings in the forest Indians could be seen swarming and watching the actions of the garrison. In a very short time the command had passed over a ridge, hiding it from view from the fort.

It was discovered at this time that there was no medical officer with Fetterman's land, and a surgeon went out promptly in the direction of the others. He passed out of sight of the fort, and after a time returned and reported that the troops were drawn up on a ridge beyond a valley with Indians in full war paint all about them, a force being between the detachment and the fort that he, the surgeon, could not get through alive. That was the last report from Fetterman and his men, except the sound of the battle that reached Fort Phil Kearny.

In a few minutes after the surgeon's return firing began, very sharp at first and growing heavier, but receding gradually, as though the Indian were giving way. Soon the firing died away almost entirely, then it was renewed with extra fury, ending in several regular and determined volleys. Then followed an odd shot or two and silence fell over the whole field.

Meanwhile a second detachment had left the fort to re-enforce Fetterman. It reached the ridge that hid the battlefield from the view of the fort and found the valley had youd filled with Sioux warriors who challenged the troops to advance. It was from this point on the ridge that Capt. Brown had come, and yet Fetterman's band was not in sight. The relief party advanced and the Indian skirmishers receded, and in the low and open portion of the valley found the massacred, man and horse all dead. As soon as the spectacle had told its horrible story to the counsels of the brave men, self-control and weltering in their blood, the Sioux moved forward over the field again with overwhelming numbers, and the relief detachment returned to the fort bearing the terrible news. Some of the skirmishers had gone near enough to the slaughtered band to discover Fetterman's body lying across his mare. His had led and had fallen at his post.

The next morning Col. Carrington marched toward the battlefield with a detachment of eighty men. The Indians had gone and he found the field just as it had appeared the day before to the troops when the Indians were forced to retire from a distance. The fighting had taken place along a trail which descended a ridge into the valley from the way of the fort and ascended on the opposite side. Bodies of soldiers and of horses were found in the valley above and below the roadway, and it was plain that the fighting had commenced on the farthest hillside where the troops had seen the command on the eve of battle. Here Fetterman had been met by a strong party of Sioux warriors, and immediately other bands had moved in along the valley from both directions to the road in his rear, and had so hemmed him in completely. Having he had attempted to cut his way back along the road to the fort, losing men at every step, and making a death stand with a few followers far up the side of the valley toward the ridge. Here among four huge rocks, were heaped many bodies of soldiers, and Fetterman lay upon them, a revolver in each hand. Lieut. Grummond, Capt. Brown, commanding the cavalry, lay near him, shot in the same manner, and it was surmised at the time that they had been the last who had killed each other to save themselves from Indian torture. The bodies of the brave victims had been stripped by the fiendish Sioux in a manner that defies description. Eyes, teeth and hands had been torn from their sockets and carefully placed around upon some slightly elevated spots to give them ghastly prominence. One body contained 300 arrows. These atrocities, far from injuring the dead, were an unwitting tribute to their prowess, for they showed that the destructiveness of the soldier's fire had been such as to arouse the savage vindictiveness to the highest pitch.

There were no Indian bodies on the battlefield, but pools of dark blood all along the valley and on the hillsides showed where the murderous Sioux warriors had bled under the bullets of their brave but unfortunate foemen. It was the saddest ever again that had done the fatal work, but the valley savage had paid heavily for his triumph.

It was the saddest ever again that had done the fatal work, but the valley savage had paid heavily for his triumph.

The slaughtered soldiers were buried where they fell, only so much of the bodies being exposed as would enable the dogs of wanderers and cookees. Every employe, servant, woman and boy was provided with weapons. Before giving the word of command, "Forward," to the little detachment upon whom all eyes rested, Col. Carrington, not having yet designated a leader for the party, coolly handed his revolver to his wife, who stood beside her mounted horse, and said, "If the worst comes to worst do not allow yourself to be taken prisoner, but kill yourself rather than be captured."

This gave notice that the commandant intended to lead the forlorn supporting party himself. Fetterman, whose name was a by-word for high courage, was standing passive in his place near his superior, awaiting orders, and when this startling speech was finished he saluted the speaker coolly and glancing from the gentle, clinging wife thus addressed, to her gallant husband and the little band gathered to follow him on this errand of almost certain disaster, spoke with soldierly courtesy and energy this very logical protest:

THE CARPE DIEM PHILOSOPHY A GOOD ONE FOR STUDENTS.

Commencement Day Ends the Comradeship of Student Life and Ushers the Gate to the World's Highway—Funny Graduating Exercises.

If all the commencement day essays which will be read in American schools and colleges this year were gathered in a book from that would be a series of volumes as numerous and closely printed as those comprised in the Encyclopedia Britannica. And, however much you may scoff at the statement, there would be much in those volumes worth the reading—much original, sensible thought, many examples of splendid composition and perfect English.

"LEAVE THE PLATFORM, SIR."

How truly, by the way, is the day on which these essays will be read called "commencement day." For it marks the end of school life, and of course the beginning of the struggles with the outside world, if those struggles are ever to begin.

But commencement day is not the time to think of the coming struggles; there will be time and to spare for that after the delights of the day are over. The friendships formed in school or college are often the best of all. Later on the battle for existence will occupy too much time for such delightful companionships to form or for the old ones to be kept up. School life is a mine which contains other nuggets than those of knowledge, and as commencement day is the time when its workings will be closed to you forever, dig digt with a will, and get as much fun out of it as you can.

Speaking of commencement day fun recalls an incident which occurred as one of the New York state colleges a few years ago.

Among the graduates was a young man—I think his name was Dussolt—who was one of those combinations of bashfulness and wit which are known so seldom; and the faculty had consented that instead of preparing a conventional essay he should write a semi-humorous record of the work of his class during their four years of college life. A peculiarity of Dussolt's shyness was that it only appeared when he encountered strangers. He was always the best entertainer at class dinners; he "knew no fear" when talking to people with whom he had even a slight acquaintance, so matter how large the gathering, and among his many friends his witty little speeches were often heard. But let one wholly unknown face appear among his listeners and Dussolt's tongue thickened, his cheeks flushed and his wit fled.

"DEAREST MATTIE, I LOVE YOU."

Of course he knew that there would be many people whom he had never seen among the commencement day spectators, and he trembled accordingly. Weeks in advance he began schooling himself for the event, but he could not overcome his bashfulness. When the great morning dawned he was terribly frightened. His agitation was really distressing, and if he had begged off, giving sickness as his excuse, his appearance would have justified the claim.

But he had made up his mind to do or die, and of the two he considered dying preferable. His name was among the first on the programme, and as he waited for the signal to go on the platform he fairly quivered with painful excitement. At last it came, and, wonder of wonderful with it came instant and absolute freedom from embarrassment. Calm, self possessed, his agitation wholly gone, he stepped forward, inclined his head toward the faculty and then toward the audience, and began. He said afterward that he never felt more certain that his manner was easy, his smile natural, his gestures graceful, than at that moment. When he reached one of his good points he threw back his head and his eyes twinkled merrily as the audience showed its appreciation by deafening applause. He had gone on for perhaps five minutes, and the audience was convulsed with laughter when the president of the college stepped up and put his hand on Dussolt's shoulder. His face was black with rage as he said in tones which must have been distinctly audible in all parts of the hall: "Mr. Dussolt, leave the stage at once!"

Dussolt was dumfounded. The president had read a approved his oration only the night before, and that he should command him to retire before he had half finished delivering it was outrageous. Boiling with anger, he did as he was told. Within two minutes he learned what had been the trouble. He had not made an audible pervoke and quite a flannel, and in plain and fancy white fabrics there is everything.

PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS.

ESTABLISHED 1884. PLAINFIELD, N. J., "THE COLORADO OF THE EAST," SATURDAY, JUNE 28, 1890. SIX PAGES. PRICE TWO CENTS.

ALUMNI RECEPTION.

North Plainfield Graduates Enjoy Themselves.

The sixth annual reception and re-union of the alumni of the North Plainfield Public School, was held last evening in the school building, on Somerset street.

Members of the classes of '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89 and the newly graduated class of '90, were present.

The front class rooms on the second floor were divested of all the desks and school paraphernalia and gayly bedecked by the willing hands of former graduates, by whom the class of '90 was entertained.

In 1884 the first commencement was held in the school building and six pupils received diplomas. The following year there were nine, and in 1886 the number was increased to nineteen, failing to fifteen in 1887 and rising to eighteen in 1888. The year of 1889 boasted forth twenty-five, and 1890 followed closely with twenty-one.

Officers of the alumni were elected for the ensuing year as follows: President, William Wolverell; Vice President, Miss Minnie J. Smith; Treasurer, John Petrie; Secretary, Harry Williams.

An impromptu entertainment was given consisting of an instrumental solo by Miss Lillian Force, a short speech by Dr. H. K. Carroll, followed by the funny man of class '89, William Y. Westervelt. Irving S. Whitehead rendered a violin solo, accompanied on the piano by Miss Lizzie Whitbeck, and Mr. Charles E. Dorn, Principal of the School, regaled many pleasing incidents and gave mention of interest, mentioning the class motives, the one of '88 being the first to have such distinction, the motto being "He conquers who overcomes himself" with "Never say die" for '89, and "Higher yet, and Higher" for '90.

The recitation of Daniel Lokeaux told of the bravery of a daring horseback rider who rode from Cassenaugh to Johnstown warning people enroute to save themselves from the flood, after which Mr. James McGee, one of the school trustees, gave the classes present some very good advice, taking as his subject the beautiful sign prepared by some of the graduates of former classes with the inscription "Welcome '90" in large gold letters on a purple background. Geo. P. Taggart of '89 read a pleasing bit of bright poetry, and Miss Carrie Rolee rendered an instrumental piano solo. Favors were passed around, and jokes played on some, followed by refreshments, a grand march, and an informal social time generally.

Monument Committee Meeting.

The Soldiers and Sailors' Memorial Monument Committee held a meeting in the Republican Association rooms at eight o'clock last evening. Mr. Rowland Cox was added to the Committee to choose a design. The other members present were Hon. Garret Dalley, chairman; Mason W. Tyler, J. E. Stewart and E. J. Obelen. Action on the acceptance of the design presented was deferred for two weeks. Several members of the committee openly expressed their intentions to submit a paper or for publishing a cut of the proposed design before it had been accepted by the Committee, thus causing a delay in the adoption of any design for at least one month.

To Go to Milwaukee.

On Saturday evening next delegates from all the Knight of Pythias lodges in this city will leave New York via the Penna. Railroad for Milwaukee to attend the biennial session of the Supreme Lodge of the United States and Canada and the encamp of the uniformed Rank, which is to take place in that city next week. Those who have signified their intention of going are: the Hon. John Ulrich, and Messrs. Eugene V. Lorton, Joseph and Jacob Bliem, John VanDyke, George Fathemus, Morgan Turton, J. E. Hoagland, Horace J. Martin, J. H. Higgins, Wallace V. Miller, and John Sheppard. The delegates expect to be absent about ten days.

Scotch Plains Notes.

The property west of the Episcopal church and upon which the Scotch Plains Gun Club has done its shooting recently passed into the hands of Mr. Warren Ackerson.

Roadmaster Clark is improving the roads throughout his district as they have never been improved before and his roads are now in good condition to receive the township's supply of crushed stone.

A petition is in circulation for the prohibition of bicycle riding upon the side walks. The Town's Committee will probably pass an ordinance complying with this petition.

A Mean Thief.

Thursday afternoon a young man visited the Presbyterian cemetery in North Plainfield, and cut a large number of flowers from bushes and plants growing on graves. When he secured a rose or any other kind of a flower to put them in his pocket, and after he reached the street he made a handsome bouquet. Several persons saw and recognized him, and if the offense is repeated a complaint will be lodged against him. This practice of robbing graves of flowers should be broken up immediately. It not only occurs in North Plainfield cemetery, but in many other graveyards in the city.

Shakes off the Jersey Dust.

State Senator Miller, of Union county, has shaken the dust of New Jersey from his shoes and gone to New York to live. Yesterday's record of real estate transactions in Union county shows that he has exchanges of his beautiful property in Westfield, including the old Miller homestead, for property located on Fifth avenue, New York, where the affable legislator will make his future home. His friends from this city will regret to learn the secret of Senator Miller's not seeking a renomination, which there is no doubt he could have secured had he desired it.

—Prof. Gleason had a large audiences last evening to see him subdue and correct a rather wild mustang and a biting and kicking stallion besides two shying horses. He did the work apparently to entire satisfaction.

JOTTINGS.

—Read special notice of City National Bank Safe Deposit Vaults.

—The frame buildings on the west side of Somerset street over Greenbrook are to be moved to a level with the Somerset street bridge.

—The Governor has signed Senate bill No. 211, allowing boroughs to issue bonds to the amount of $50,000 for the improvement of the streets.

—The Star Athletics, of Newark, who will face "our boys" this week, have won thirteen out of fourteen games this season, the Crescents of Plainfield being among their victims.

—Warren Engine Company, No. 1, took their apparatus out for a "wash" last evening. The steamer was located on the Grove street bridge and was found to be in good working order.

—The total amount of income to Somerset county from licenses granted at the last term of court will be $11,000. It is sum Somerville receives $1,830, Raritan $1,450 and Bound Brook $925.

—A prominent horticultural authority says it is better to water plants and flowers in the morning than in the evening. This is reasonable, because the dew will dampen the grounds at night while the sun dries it by day.

—"The Albany," at North Asbury, is kept this year by Mr. H. Bavis, who elsewhere advertises for Plainfield patronage, and says he will make every effort to popularize among Plainfield people his commodious, well-kept house.

—State Entomologist J. B. Smyth, who was at Vineland last week, experimenting on the rose bug, has discovered that ammonia, while it does not prevent the bugs from gathering on vines and shrubs, will kill them if applied while they are on.

—The circumference of the neck and the calf of the leg are equal. The circumference of the neck equals twice the circumference of the wrist. Three times the circumference of the head equals the length of the body. But some heads are bigger than this.

—The "grip" which has puzzled so many doctors elsewhere, is no mystery at all to a doctor, whose power is finite and who is an authority for the assertion that it is "is caused by the concentrated efforts of minute bacilus of the animalcules tribe of unforseen microscopical animal life."

—No peaches this year, or a few only. This is the report from the whole peach growing section of the country. Buds started too early, especially by the mild winter, and March was the death of them. This will be a severe blow to many people, including growers and consumers.

—During the past week a thorough house cleaning has been going on at the Church of the Holy Cross. All the carpets of the church will be taken up, thoroughly shook out and Sunday school building were sent to the steam cleaning establishment and have been relaid again, all ready for Sunday services.

—We begin to-day by authority the publication of the laws of New Jersey passed by the Legislature of 1890, and in order that it shall not diminish the quantity of other reading matter, we issue six instead of four pages. The laws will be worth preserving as specimens of Democratic "statesmanship."

—At the Somerset county teachers' examination held in Somerville June 6th and 7th there were 56 applicants. Seven for first grade, six of whom received certificates; 28 for second grade, all of whom were granted; and 27 for third grade, 10 of which were granted. Nearly 33 per cent. of the whole number failed.

—Mr. Tubbs, of the Elmira creamery, who has a wagon on the Elizabeth Ice Company's houses yesterday met with a fall, and was cut on the head. His injury did not prevent his continuance at his business engagements for the day. Mr. Tubbs formerly owned the dairy on West Front street, this city.

—At the Somerset co. Surrogate's office there is a Bible which has been used 40 years, and Col. Hoff estimates that it has been kissed on an average two and one-half times a day, which would make the number of times it has been received 36,500—more than the ardent lover could give his best girl in a whole Winter's courting.

—This evening at about eight o'clock Winfield Scott Post, No. 114, of Philadelphia, will pay a fraternal visit to Winfield Scott Post of this city. The visitors will be met at the depot and escorted to the rooms of the home Post where an open camp fire will be indulged in, after which the veterans will parade over a short line of march. A banquet at Amphion Hall will follow.

Board of Education Meeting.

A special meeting of the Board of Education was held last evening in Franklin School building on West Fourth street. There present were President Jacob Kirkner, Dr. J. B. Probasco and Mr. J. W. Murray. Mr. E. S. Hunt, a graduate of Amherst College, was also in attendance. The spicial meeting of the Board was called to examine Mr. Hunt as to his efficiency for the position of Assistant Principal in place of Mr. Edwin Lewis, who resigned to accept a professorship at Alfred Centre. On account of the illness of Clerk Clark, Mr. Murray acted as secretary of the meeting.

The ordinary routine business was attended to, and then after a pleasant conversation, Mr. Hunt was appointed assistant principal.

Miss Owen, one of the teachers, was transferred from Irving to Byrant school.

A communication was received from Miss Stahl, a teacher in the Byrant school, asking that her resignation, before the Board be accepted, as she had a very advantageous office from the High school of the State of Washington.

Her resignation was duly accepted.

The Board then adjourned.

The Stolen Rig Recovered.

A horse and carriage valued at $250 belonging to James N. Guttridge of Netherwood was stolen from in front of the hotel in Bound Brook Monday evening. Mr. Guttridge left the rig in charge of a boarder who fell asleep on the steps of the hotel. Thursday evening Mr. Gutteridge was going to Bound Brook to find out if any clue to his missing property had been obtained and accidentally met a friend on the train. He mentioned his loss, and the friend informed him that a farmer living near Dunellen had found a rig, but as yet no one had claimed it.

Upon examination it was found that the horse was badly cut around the legs and that the wagon had been turned upside down. The top and sides of the latter were badly scratched, but the vehicle was not broken.

The theory set forth is that some roughes who were under the influence of liquor stole the rig from in front of the hotel and went out on a lark and, after they had become sober what sobered up, recognized the enormity of their offense and abandoned the horse and carriage.

Base Ball Notes.

Two interesting games of ball are booked for the Fourth of July.

The morning game is between the Flushings of Long Island and the Crescents of this city. This is the team which played such a close game with the Crescents on Decoration Day.

In the afternoon the celebrated Greenpoints also of Long Island will contest honors with the Plainfielders.

On the afternoon of July 5th, the Hackett-Carbarts will again cross bats with the Crescents. This game will undoubtedly be one of the most interesting that will be played in Plainfield this Summer.

The management of the Crescent team are doing all in their power to book good clubs, and make the game as interesting to their patrons.

Suit Against the Plummers.

The New England company has begun an attachment suit in the Union County Court against John F. Plummer, Albert F. Plummer and Elijah Hill to recover $5,698.22, which it is claimed the bankrupt Plummer firm owes the Company. The case will come up at the October term. The defendants are former residents of Nether wood.

A Warning.

Several young children have been going the rounds of the city begging money saying it was for the Children's Home. Mrs. Kimball, the president of the Home requests us to say that they are doing so without authority, and that it is a fraud on the public, as the Home never seeks money in that way.

Simpson of Liberty street successfully performed the operation, and displayed great skill in doing so. Mrs. Campbell has been wasting away for several years. The realization of this fact made her ready to submit to the operation, from the effects of which she is already pronounced out of danger an likely to fully recover her health.

The Central Railroad.

In view of the rumor that that the Central Railroad of New Jersey proposes to convey its passengers from Westfield, Fanwood, Netherwood, Plainfield, Evona, Dunellen, Bound Brook and Somerville over a new line, to be built from Westfield, N. J., through Newark to New York, a prominent business man, delegated by others, wrote to President J. R. Maxwell as follows:

It has been stated that passenger trains would after a while leave your main line at Westfield and reach Jersey City by way of a new line through Newark. I trust that this is a mere gossip without any foundation in fact, for your patrons justly claim and loudly proclaim that one of the charms of living on the line of the Central is the delightful ride along the shore of New York bay and across Newark bay. We urge that advantage against any attraction which any other line running out of New York can present, and speaking for many commuters, beg of you not to deprive us of that delight. If there is any possibility of such an unfortunate change being made, and, if a respectful remonstrance will avert it, we will need you a petition big enough to cover your whole.

President Maxwell replied as follows:

Noting yours in regard to the rumored intention of this company to run its passenger traffic over a new line to Jersey City through Newark, I have to say that the report is entirely without foundation, and I do not think attention is required at this time on that subject from our patrons.

The language of Mr. Maxwell fills the commuters with doubt. They take the use of the word "premature" as an implication that the change is likely to come.—Unionist-Gazette.

The Secret of Long Life.

When a boy Dr. Mark Trafton was frail and flat chested, and from the age of 14 spent four years bent over a shoemaker's bench. He joined a brass band and played the clarionet and here himself to a fine chest, which he preserves to this day. He is now 80 years old, and says in The American Agriculturist: "I am as straight in my spinal column as a pine of my native state. My eye is not dim nor my natural force (much) abated."

He confidently expects to live to be a hundred, which he declares is the natural term of man's life. He achieved his present age and health by finding out the laws of nature and obeying them. Thus he will not work his brain evenings, and for fifty years he has been preaching to mankind that they eat twice as much as is good for them. He mentions having seen a splendid looking priest whose principal diet appears to be what the boys call wind pudding. He says:

I saw last summer, when coming from the mountain, a splendid looking priest of perfect health. Some one said to him: "I wish I could have health like yours." "You may," he replied. "I live on a crust." I ask what he ate in twenty-four hours. After my full breakfast I eat nothing until the next morning."

Still one may venture to remark that a man would hardly have much appetite on a turnpike or plow all day on such a diet as that. Of his own eating Dr. Trafton writes:

For eight or nine years past I have eaten no flesh of dead animals. For many years I have eaten whole wheat or Graham bread. My breakfast is the principal meal for the day—two well boiled eggs, a saucer of oatmeal mush, bread, and a cup of coffee. My dinner is bread, a slice or two; a cup of weak tea; at night, a half pint of milk and a slice of bread. I hardly know from day to day whether I have eaten or not. I have gained in weight, and suppose, unless some accident befalls me, I will slip into some behavior, I shall be at least a centenarian.

How long should a man live naturally? In answer to this the doctor writes:

The law of animal organizations seems to be that the duration of life in the human is one should live five times the period of their growth. A dog grows until two years of age; his life period is ten years. A horse grows until five; his period is twenty-five. An elephant grows until 20 years, and his average life is one hundred years. A man grows until twenty, and ought to develops until twenty, and ought to live to the age of one hundred. But, alas, a contention is waged with a stronger adversary, and the death of half the human family before the age of seven excites no surprise. Should one-half the progeny of the lower animals die before six or seven after birth it would send consternation and dismay through the community; but these figures are accepted as a matter of course, and are expected to be consoled by the reflection that it is a "mysterious Providence," or that the "will of God is best," or "He only knows for purposes known." The mystery about it is that while the lessons are left to the laws of God in nature, man—the wisest creature of all those here from the first moment of being.

Heat is life, says the doctor, and he keeps in his vital heat by swaddling himself in heavy flannels winter and summer, which some persons could not and would not do even if thereby they could live forever. The animals he bids us imitate do not wear flannel between their shoulders, and "heavy, hand knit woolen socks" the year round. There are two ways of keeping the animal heat in and avoiding taking cold; one way by swaddling in flannels as the doctor does, the other by judiciously exposing one's self to drafts and to weather, and letting the vital heat nature has given us run to itself up and take care of us, as it does with the birds and wild animals. Bears and sparrows do not take cold. Their way is much less trouble than passing one's existence swathed like a mummy in flannels. Nature has put as much vital heat in man as she has into a bear or sparrow, and it will go far toward keeping him warm if he allows it a chance to assert itself.

But following is a thought to be commended to all men and women in our reckless, hurrying age:

Physical law is just as holy and sacred as moral law, and he who tritles with one of nature's laws is in the sight of the Lawgiver just as guilty as one who disregards moral law. Strange it is that men will shudder at the thought of a breach of the ten commandments, and yet the daily disregard of the laws of physical life. It is true we sinned all die, but it is not true that the period of our death is fixed by divine decree. We stand die under the laws of organization, like all organized beings. The fruit comes bud and blossom, grows ripens and decays. So was animal organization. But, as other animals, develops from the embryo to the perfection of maturity, and then decays. There is a limit to the one as to the other, yet the startling fact stares us in the face that a large proportion of the genus homo, as with fruits, pre-maturely fails.

Lady Senators for Wyoming.

The edict has gone from the lips of Mr. Ward McAllister that to be one of the 400 you must not recognize even your own grandmother in public unless she is stylishly and fashionably dressed. The one absolute essential of the 400 therefore is clothes. Tis well. This is the only mark of distinction attainable by them all. If Mr. McAllister set the standard by manners, morals or good looks he could not fill the ranks of his 400. So he is right to fix it on the lowest possible requisite—dress.

In Europe cocoaine pencils for the skin have been introduced. An addition of 2 per cent. cocoaine to ordinary cocoa butter pencils will make them valuable to use wherever the skin is irritated or chafed. The anæsthetic properties of the cocoaine allay quickly the irritation. These pencils are also excellent in case of stings, insect bites, etc.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS

The Wyoming Admission Bill Passes the Senate.

LADY SENATORS A POSSIBILITY.

The Proposed New State May Be Represented by Women—A Spirited Debate in the House Over the National Election Bill—Mr. Vest Heard From.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—A spirited debate occurred in the house over the national election bill. Mr. Covert (N. Y.) vigorously attacked the measure and claimed that the Republicans had adopted it in an emergency. He said the Republican party was used to meeting emergencies. They had met them in Indiana when they sent in Dorsey with his money and Dudley with his floaters in "blocks of five," and Quay, archangel of the party. He claimed that the bill would revive race prejudice and retard the republic's progress. Mr. Flower (N. Y.) denounced the bill in similar vigorous terms.

A Harmful Bill, Says Mr. Flower.

He attributed the agitation for a reformed ballot to the fat frylngs, blocks of five, etc., of the last election. He said that in view of these the Republican party had chosen a most inappropriate time to enact this law. He spoke of the prospective expenses under new local election laws and said that a single election in New York city would cost $1,000,000 for the ballots alone.

He thought the people who would subject themselves to this burden could be as safely relied upon to conduct fair elections as could irresponsible federal officials. In conclusion, Mr. Flower said that the immediate effect of the law would be most harmful to the whole country, but that ultimately the people would drive from power the party that sought to profit by it.

A Republican Opinion.

Mr. Smyser (O.) said the measure was conservative and not radical. The cost of executing it had been exaggerated, but fair elections were well worth any cost. The south had been misruled for fifteen years to work out its own destiny. He did not know whether it was any nearer the kingdom of heaven, but the country is seeking to work out the salvation of the north on the same line.

Mr. Vest Speaks.

Mr. Vest (Pa.) said that the bill virtually overturned the constitution and destroyed our form of government. The constitutional meaning of the phrase "time, place and manner" was that the power of congress was limited to prescribing the form of choosing representatives, and that when the election itself began its authority ceased. The "manner of holding" and the "holding" of the election were entirely distinct and separate, and the power of congress could not be exercised. These supervisors, responsible to nobody, might carry their authority to the election of senators, going to the legislative assembly of a state and declaring its members disqualified.

Another Revolution, Perhaps.

Mr. Vest said that this bill would drag the circuit court judges into the dirt and filth of partisan politics. He assured the Republicans that the Democrats of the north would see that Maine was one of the first places where the law should be carried into effect, and that it would prevail as expected to be consoled by the reflection that it is a "mysterious Providence," or that the "will of God is best," or "He only knows for purposes known." The mystery about it is that while the lessons are left to the laws of God in nature, man—the wisest creature of all those here from the first moment of being.

The Election of Cleveland.

Mr. Kennedy (O.) said that it was idle to say that the majority had ruled in this country. All precedent that Grover Cleveland was elected president by a majority was subject to the further statement that large numbers of qualified voters were not permitted to cast their votes against him.

Mr. Kennedy charged that at least thirty of the southern members were here because the blacks were counted in the census of 1880. What had the apportionment been made under the new census, that provision of the constitution which required a reduction of representation in the case of states which permitted the rights of citizens to vote to be unlawfully abridged, should be put into execution in the southern states.

The speaker announced the appointment of Messrs. Conger (Ia.), Walker (Mass.), and Bland (Mo.) as conferrees on the silver bill.

The Blair Bill Again.

The house committee on education has ordered a favorable report on the bill introduced in the house by Mr. Cheatham (N. C.) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools. The bill is the same as the bill commonly known as the Blair educational bill.

The bill passed the committee by a strictly party vote, not a Democratic member of the committee being present.

In the Senate.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—In the senate Mr. Morgan spoke in opposition to the bill to admit Wyoming as a state. He referred to the institution which had marked the discussion of the bill yesterday, and said that either a majority of the senate had come understanding that the bill was to pass, notwithstanding objections or arguments, or else the matter of admitting new states had become so commonplace that it scarcely attracted the attention of senators. He said the conversation did not disturb him, as he was talking to the reporters and to the country.

Lady Senators for Wyoming.

He favored the substitute providing an enabling act for Wyoming, Idaho, New Mexico and Arizona. To pass this general bill was the only way to eliminate from the question the element of political considerations. Mr. Morgan denounced the implied bargain under which Wyoming was to vote for a Republican candidate in the next presidential election in return for the action of congress in admitting the territory. Speaking of the Wyoming constitution Mr. Morgan said that in ratifying it congress would confirm woman suffrage. If a woman, then, could vote and hold office in Wyoming she could be elected to the senate or the house.

The Important Instance of the Ballot.

Mr. Payne suggested that the presence of women senators might have a good effect on the senate, particularly during executive sessions.

Mr. Morgan said that this brought up a more serious view of the matter. His objection to woman suffrage was the immoral influence of the ballot upon women. Mr. Spooner called attention to the fact that in the state of New Jersey women had the right to vote until 1867. Mr. Morgan said that there was a property qualification in the New Jersey bill of rights of 1805, but it made no reference to sex.

In answer to a question Mr. Payne Mr Platt said that he would not vote to incorporate woman suffrage in the constitution of Connecticut, but he would not leave the state if it were done.

The Wyoming Bill Passed.

Mr. Platt spoke briefly in defense of the bill, and the question was then taken on the passage of the bill, which was agreed to and it was rejected by a party vote—18 to 39. Mr. Jones (Ark.) moved an enabling act for Wyoming alone. Rejected—18 to 39. The bill was then passed by a party vote—29 to 18, as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Allen, Blair, Casey, Colloms, Dawes, Dolph, Dixon, Edmunds, Evarts, Farwell, Frye, Hawley, Hiscock, Ingalls, Jones (Nev.) Manderson, Mitchell, Moody, Morrill, Paddock, Platt, Power, Sherman, Spooner, Stewart, Stockbridge, Teller and Washburn—29.

Nays—Messrs. Bate, Berry, Blackburn, Carlisle, Coke, George, Gorman, Harris, Jones (Ark.) Kenna, McPherson, Morgan, Pasco, Payne, Pugh Reagan, Vance and Walthall—18.

Important Sections of the Bill.

The first section of the bill is as follows: That the state of Wyoming is hereby declared to be a state of the United States of America, is hereby declared admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatever, and that the constitution which the people of said state have framed for themselves be and the same is hereby accepted, ratified and confirmed. The second section gives the boundaries. The third declares the state entitled to two representative in the Fifty-first congress.

The bill for the admission of Idaho was then taken up and went over as "unfinished business" till Monday next.

DIXON IS CHAMPION.

The Plucky Colored Pugilist Easily Defeats Nunc Wallace.

LONDON, June 28.—About 1,000 privileged persons assembled at the Pelican club last night to witness fights between the bantam weights, George Dixon, of America, and Nunc Wallace, of England, for £200 and the world's bantam weight championship. Both men appeared in fine condition and the betting, which was 6 to 4 in favor of Dixon, was spirited. Among those present were Lord Londesdale and Col. North, the nitrate king, both of whom backed Dixon heavily. In the first round Wallace did all the leading, but failed to land with any effect.

GEORGE DIXON.

In the second round Dixon forced the fighting and Wallace, in ducking to avoid a hot right hander, touched Dixon's legs. Cries of foul were raised and Dixon's seconds demanded a decision from the referee. The claim was not allowed, as the infraction of the rules on the part of Wallace was obviously accidental. Wallace fought notionably in the third round, and was forced hard by Dixon in the fourth. Wallace held his own in the fifth, sixth and seventh rounds, and managed to keep Dixon away from him in the eighth and ninth.

Up to this time, although the fighting had been fast, the hitting was not heavy, but in the tenth round Dixon landed on Wallace's cheek and knocked him down. Wallace was helped to his corner by his seconds, who performed the rights of citizens to vote to be unlawfully abridged, should be put into execution in the southern states.

The speaker announced the appointment of Messrs. Conger (Ia.), Walker (Mass.), and Bland (Mo.) as conferrees on the silver bill.

Wallace was helped to his corner by his second, and at the end of every subsequent round was noticeably weaker than at its beginning. In the eighteenth round Dixon got home with a straight left drive, hitting him as he pleased. Wallace finally reached his corner before the round was finished and dropped his hands. Dixon made a feint at him, but Wallace made no attempt to defend himself. For a second or two he leaned heavily against the ropes, completely winded and severely punished, and then gave up the fight.

Dixon appeared to be as fresh as when he entered the ring, and was loudly cheered as the referee announced the victory.

A Steamer Burned.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 28.—The steamship City of Rio Janeiro, from Hong Kong and Yokohama, which arrived here Friday morning, brings the following advices: The steamer Pao Ching, Capt. Place, which left Shanghai for Hankow, was burned near the forked line on the Tarytza river on May 28, and Capt. Place, Second Engineer Wilson and some twenty natives were missing and are supposed to have been drowned. A number of Chinese vessels did good service in picking up the survivors, of whom Wireless Officer Christiansen, the second officer, and sixty-two natives were found. The vessel had a general cargo, including several cases of matches. She was fully insured.

Tascott Caught Again.

NEW ORLEANS, June 28.—A special from Paris, Tex., to The Times-Democrat says that trainmen arriving there on the "Frisco" road report that five Pinkerton men boarded the northbound train at Westfork, Ark., last night and took Scott, the murderer of Banker Snell, of Chicago. The prisoner was said to have been identified by men from Chicago.

Referee Cleveland's Report Set Aside.

NEW YORK, June 28.—The report of Mr. Grover Cleveland as referee in the suit of Phelps vs. Venner has been set aside by Judge Coxe, of the United States circuit court. The court holds that Venner is entitled to commissions upon certain stock transactions. The referee decided against Venner.

ALBANY, June 28.—"Columbia," the elephant so badly injured by falling from a train near Pittsburg, Pa., was killed at West Albany. Dr. C. W. Gregory, of Boston, found that the animal had sustained a severe fracture of the knee pan. The animal was owned by Forepaugh.

HOPE IS DEAD AT DUNBAR

Flames Burst from the Farm Hill Mine.

THE PEOPLE FEEL VERY BITTER

Over the Delay—A Desperate Attempt Will Be Made by a Band of Daring Men to Recover the Bodies of the Thirty-two Victims.

DUNBAR, Pa., June 28.—All hope is lost of finding alive the thirty-two men imprisoned in the Farm Hill mine. At 8:30 o'clock last night the sky was illuminated by flame, which burst from the mouth of the shaft. It was the signal of triumph and victory waved by death to the anxious watchers who have hoped so long against what was almost a certainty. Efforts are still being made to enter the Farm Hill mine from the drift that has been run from the Mahoning mine.

A Bitter Disappointment.

Almost at the moment that the flames burst from the Farm Hill mine Lehman ring, one of the workers in the other mine, pushed his drill through into the entry the miners have been so steadily working toward for the last ten days. The rescuers' lamps began to burn brighter, showing that the air was gaining between the two mines.

The men were at once ordered out of the mine, while the inspectors remained behind to decide what was best to do. They did not deem it wise that any should be exposed to unnecessary danger. "It is hell when we expected heaven," said Secretary Watchorn, who was sent here by the Knights of Labor. Near him when he made this remark sat the four inspectors who were off duty. They were Adams, Evans, Jones, Jr., and Fleeter. They were discussing the gravity of the situation in undertones. To their left stood Mr. Hazzard, vice president of the company, who quietly watched the work that the Farm Hill men was gone perhaps beyond recall.

All Hope Abandoned.

The inspectors said they had never seen such a sight in all their experience. They were badly worried, for the question which stared them in the face was the abandonment of the work of rescue. "Every hope of finding the men alive is gone," said one of them, and the remaining three agreed.

"Are you going to continue the work, gentlemen?" asked Secretary Watchorn, as he rose from his seat.

"That is the question we are discussing," was the answer, and the consultation proceeded.

"I think it is absolutely dangerous to proceed at present," said the secretary. "If we could have made an opening before this occurred, I would not hesitate, "we then could have known the fate of the men." The consultation then broke up, to be renewed at the mouth of the Mahoning pit, where the other inspectors have been hurriedly called from the inside of the mine.

Into the Burning Mine.

Inspectors Keighley, Evans, Adams, Lountit, Jenkins and Hall when they appeared said the men had started the point aimed at within six inches, and had accomplished almost an impossibility. They said it would be some hours before the air could be tested and a decision arrived at as to what is to be done. They said they had gone through over five hundred feet of "gob," and had found that the most compact manner. At 11 o'clock the inspectors said they had decided to go into the Hill Farm mine. They would not ask a man to run any risk. They faced the danger themselves. It will be a consolation to recover the bodies of the men, if nothing else.

Their Lives in Their Hands.

As an illustration of the danger to be encountered Secretary Watchorn said: "I fear that the draught is so great that when the hole is broken through it will pull all of the timbers after it. The tunnel which is driven to the coal is filled with the slightest kind of timbers and a draught of any kind or an explosion would bring down the entire weight of the hill on the men. Each man who enters the mine at this time takes his life in his hand. He may never see daylight again. It is feared the mine is on fire all through or else filled with smoke. In either case the danger is very great. In the dark, with tons of earth above them, a false step or any kind of a move might bring death in an instant."

Spread of the Flames.

In five minutes after the fire had broken out the crowd had descried the mouth of the Mahoning mine and had climbed to the Hill Farm pit. Men at once went to work to keep the flames from the blacksmith shop and the surrounding buildings. Another gang was at work digging a trench to run water from the tanks to the mouth of the pit in the hope of extinguishing the flames, but all this was of no avail. The blacksmith shop soon had to be torn down. How soon the timbers will be burned away and the slope cave in cannot be told. There are 600 feet of timber, saturated with oil, and empty wagons and trucks to feed the flames. It was a terrible sight as the flames leaped forty feet into the air and lighted up the country for miles around.

The People Very Bitter.

The suspension of work just when the unfortunate miners are almost within reach has been a great disappointment here and has still further enraged the people. The false report sent out daily by the mine inspectors had led them to hope against themselves, and when the fire started the feeling was intensely bitter against those who would hold responsible for the delay.

A French Report on the Panama Canal.

PARIS, June 28.—The committee which was sent to Panama to investigate the condition of the canal has made a further report on the prospects of the enterprise. The committee says that the construction of the canal at the calculated level would occupy eight years and would cost 1,787,000,000 francs. In the opinion of the committee the work could only be completed on the basis of an international agreement or syndicate of the states interested.

BLUE VERSUS CRIMSON.

Yale Defeats Harvard by Over Three Lengths.

A CLOSE AND EXCITING CONTEST.

Both Varsity Crews Rowed Evenly for Three Miles and Then Harvard Lost Her Grip—The Time Was: Yale, 21:52; Harvard, 21:56—A Great Crowd Present.

NEW LONDON, Conn., June 28.—The Yale Harvard university annual eight oared boat race was rowed last evening over a four mile straightaway course on the Thames river between Gale's Ferry and Winthrop Point, and was won by Yale by three and one-half lengths in 21 min. 52 sec. This was the fifteenth annual race between these universities, and it was Yale's fifth successive victory. Yale has won nine and Harvard six of the fifteen races.

Close and Exciting.

The race was a remarkably close and exciting one for the first three miles, neither crew being able to gain a decisive lead. Harvard was ahead twice for brief periods, but Yale quickly recovered by spurting. Yale's staying qualities finally prevailed, and during the last mile the blues gained slowly but surely on their competitors.

After passing the third mile flag Harvard's stroke assumed the long sweep of its predecessors. The shell rolled somewhat, and three or four swerves by the coxswain helped to retard the crimson. Yale kept on, the long, steady stroke with almost faultless precision to the finish, and the rest did not show any signs of exhaustion as they rested on their oars after crossing the line.

Harvard Was Badly Winded.

The Harvard boys, on the other hand, showed plainly the effects of their hard but gruelling struggle. They were a mile out of sight. The crowd of spectators over the largest seen here on a similar occasion for many years. All along the course long rows of tug boats with the steam whistles of large sail and steam yachts, large excursion steamers like the Rhode Island, City of Worcester, Elm City and others, with sailing yachts and open boats of every description crowded to their utmost capacity.

On the west bank was the moving observation train of thirty-four cars; at the navy yard opposite the two mile flag the long wharf and the man-of-war—Enfield and sloping bank at the finish were black with people. The conditions were excellent, there being a slight ripple on the water caused by the breeze from the sound.

The Race in Detail.

At 6:30 Yale pushed off from the float and paddled to the starting point, Harvard getting out their boat and following. Yale came in sight.

Both crews were given the word "Go" without delay. Harvard made much the better start, sending the bow of their shell to the front, and by a pretty piece of rowing gained nearly a length, Yale's bow being even with Harvard's coxswain.

Harvard kept this lead to the quarter, where Yale's powerful and machine like stroke changed matters very decidedly. Yale's boat began to move and by a magnificent exhibition of rowing the shells were on even terms, half a length before reaching the half mile flag. Some idea of the desperate struggle may be had from the fact that the bow of Yale's boat gained on Harvard at the rate of one-man for each four strokes. This was kept up until Yale's shell was two lengths to the front. Yale held this advantage to the three-quarters, where Harvard succeeded in reducing it to one-quarter length.

Yale Is Ahead, Then Harvard Leads.

These positions were maintained to the mile flag. Just after passing that flag Harvard increased her stroke and again pushed her shell up even with Yale's in another splendid exhibition of rowing was given by both crews. It was difficult to tell which crew was ahead so evenly were they matched, but as they passed the mile and a half point Harvard apparently led a slight advantage. Nearing the navy yard Yale struck a strip of smoother water under the lee and by another spurt again took the lead, passing the two mile flag with a lead of half a length. Harvard tried hard to respond to Yale's spurt, but its effort resulted in giving a slight roll to their boat, causing the coxswain to swerve a trifle.

Harvard Loses Her Grip.

Harvard had evidently made their greatest effort, and failing to hold her position dropped gradually behind until at the end of the third mile Yale was one length ahead. Here both crews were pulling 36 strokes, and nothing was gained or lost during the next mile. At the end of the last mile Yale began to show clear water and gradually pulled away from her rival. As Yale crossed the finish line the crew cheered lustily, and waved their hands at their frantic classmates. In the Harvard boat Nos. 1, 2 and 5 fell forward, evidently being used their last pound of force. Weber was dazed into their faces and they soon recovered their wind and paddled easily away. During the last two miles of the race was pulled amid a continuous tooting of whistles and booming of cannon.

The crews were made up as follows:

THE ORIGINAL PACKAGE QUESTION.

Report of the House Committee on Its Substitute Bill.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The report of the house committee on the judiciary on its substitute for the senate bill to prohibit the importation of liquors in original packages into a state in violation of state laws has been submitted by Mr. Hall (Ia.) The senate bill was applicable to intoxicants only, while the house substitute covers all articles of commerce. After reviewing the present decisions of the United States supreme court, in which it was held that intoxicants might be shipped to a prohibitory state and offered for sale there in original packages, the report cites instances where states found it expedient to prohibit the sale of liquors and other articles of commerce within their borders, and then goes on to say:

"In the opinion of your committee, all property, which has been imported into a state and kept for sale there, ought to be subject for all purposes to the jurisdiction of the state, and all persons who would engage in traffic within a state ought to be subject to such rules as it may enact for the regulation of that traffic. The states are the proper judges of the needs of their own citizens, and they ought to be free to enact and enforce such laws as they may deem best adapted to their situation, and best calculated to enhance the prosperity and happiness of their people, and your committee would not import into or warn into the state and there engages in traffic. It is but just that he should be subjected to the same restrictions that govern the citizen of the state who would engage in a like traffic. And this would be the effect of the bill if amended as recommended by the committee. And in no manner interfere with the right of a citizen of a state to purchase abroad any article of commerce which he might desire for his own use and have the same transported and delivered to him at his place of residence.

"The states would have no power to prevent the importation of any article of commerce, nor to obstruct the transportation of commerce through their territories, except in the necessary enforcement of their health laws. Its full effect would be to subject such property as may be imported into the state and there held or offered for sale by the laws of the state. The power of congress to enact a law of this character can hardly be doubted. It is empowered to regulate commerce among the several states and with foreign nations. Any enactment which establishes a rule for the government of commerce of that character is a 'regulation' within the meaning of the constitution, and the bill clearly would have that effect.

"In the judgment of your committee it would be much wiser to enact a general law, applicable to all articles of commerce, than to meet the exigency with reference to particular articles as it may desire, as would be the policy if the senate bill should be enacted. For that reason we have recommended the accompanying amendment, and it is the opinion of the committee that the bill as amended ought to be enacted into a law." Mr. Adams (Ills.) dissented from the views of the other members of the committee, and will file a minority report.

PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE.

Interesting Statistics in Regard to Health Among Women Students.

The health of women students has been a subject of recent investigation by Mrs. Mary Sidgwick. Mrs. Sidgwick in her English statistics introduces an element not found hitherto in similar inquiries by including for comparison the health of one sister of each student, that one who was nearest to the student in age in the family and over 21 and who had not been to college; so that facts have been recorded relating to a pair of sisters, of whom it may be said roughly that they lived under the same circumstances, except that one set had been to college and the other had not. The statistics show that a decidedly higher level of health is maintained by the students than by their sisters; for example, 69 per cent. students as compared with 39 per cent. of their sisters report themselves as enjoying excellent or good health at the time the reports were sent in.

It is also shown that on an average the present health of students is almost exactly the same as their health on entering college—a period when would in each case be determined less by their health being then at least up to its normal, and when the average health of all students is) would therefore be especially high. Now, the period being on an average about seven years apart, it would seem that any deleterious effects would have had time to show themselves in the sisters who do so. The percentage of those married who have children is larger among students than among either sister class or the American standard, and the level of health of their children is higher.

The Physiology of Taste.

The tessellation of the different forms of taste sensations is a subject which is usually cursorily passed over in text books, with the statement that the sweet is perceived at the tip and sides of the tongue only are sensitive; that sweet substances are best perceived by the tip, bitter ones at the back and so on. Schenck calls attention to the results of observations by Oehrwall, who, by the aid of a lens, stimulated the individual papillæ by means of a fine brush, found the solutions of sugar, quinine, acetic acid and salt. He found that, as had before been observed, the circumvallate papillæ were particularly sensitive, but that on the sides and tip the fungiform papillæ only were sensitive. He estimated that in the whole tongue there were 320 to 400 of these papillæ, of which he found 128 only to respond to stimuli.

Many of them appeared to be excited by all four of the substances employed, but in other cases papillæ were found to respond to one form of stimulus but not to another. Thus 19 per cent. responded to acetic acid, but not to sugar; 34 per cent. were more sensitive to acid were unaffected by quinine, while 15 per cent. which recognized sugar did not respond at all to the application of quinine. All of the papillæ were sensitive to touch, pain, heat and cold. When stimulated by a mild faradic current an acid taste only was excited. He confirmed the observations of older authors, that most of the anterior two-thirds of the dorsum of the tongue was devoid of gustatory papillæ.

A New Disinfectant.

A new disinfectant has made its appearance, says American Analyst, under the name of thiocamph. It is a combination of camphor with sulphurous acid, containing over sixty times its volume of sulphurous acid gas, which upon its exposure in a warm room is gradually evolved. The property of camphor to absorb sulphurous acid with the formation of a new chemical compound was pointed out some time ago by H. M. Schulze. Thiocamph is a liquid, and may be employed in a pure condition or dissolved in alcohol, in which it is readily soluble. It will keep unchanged, sulphurous acid is an efficient disinfectant, but owing to its gaseous condition its employment has been attended with many objectionable features. It is manufactured on a large scale.

Give the Baby Water to Drink.

It is a mistake to suppose that because milk is a liquid food it is at the same time a drink which is capable of satisfying the thirst of infants. The Pacific Health Journal asserts that although milk appeases hunger it makes thirst more intense after it has remained some time in the stomach and digestion of it has begun. It is thirst which causes healthy breast nourished infants to cry for long periods of time in many instances. When milk is the cause of indigestion due to weakness or insufficiency of the child's gastric juice which would be greatly benefited, or even cured, if the child were allowed at occasional drink of water.

SOCIAL ETIQUETTE.

An Important Question and a Common Sense Answer.

Apropos of dinners, one of the burning questions in society relates to the length of time that hosts should wait for dilatory guests on such occasions. There are a few people, most of them women, who are notoriously unpunctual, and it is embarrassing to decide whether dinner shall be kept waiting for them or whether it shall be served without them. In reply to a query according to The New York Sun, common sense declares that fifteen minutes' grace is enough to allow for difference in timepieces and for accidents, and that after that period has elapsed the banquet should go on with those who have arrived, and the others be allowed to come when they choose. A longer delay destroys the appetites, is detrimental to the cookery, and where the theatre or the opera is to follow the pleasure of the evening may be spoiled by it.

Things Not to Be Done.

There are several things always absent in a lady, which if you will bear in mind girls first that they will do well to remember:

A lady, for example, will never ignore little kindnesses.

Conclude in a crowd that she has a right to push her way through.

Fail in answering letters or returning visits, unless ill or in trouble.

Fret about the heat or the cold, the sun or the rain, the air or lack of it.

Make an engagement and then not be on time.

Complain of her family or discuss personal affairs in a stranger.

Always believe the worst rather than the best side of a story.

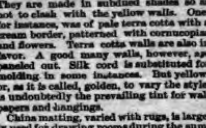
A lady does not do any other than make the best of everything—the world, the weather and herself. She believes in the golden rule and endeavors as far as possible to live up to it; and that's what you and I ought to promise every morning, we will try and do during the day.

SCIENCE AND PROGRESS.

POPULAR SCIENTIFIC RECREATION AND USEFUL KNOWLEDGE.

An Ancient Chinese Magic Square Which Indicates That This Remarkable Arrangement of Numbers Was Known Even Before the Invention of Figures.

In a very ancient Chinese work, said to have been written in the reign of Fo-chi, 3000 B. C., occurred a diagram to which is given the name of Lo-shu. This is the significance of this diagram, which evidently represents a mathematical formula of some kind, has been, according to Popular Science News, the source of much speculation, and many theories, more or less probable, have been advanced to explain its meaning.



LO-SHOU OR CHINESE MAGIC SQUARE.

According to the authority already mentioned and quoted for M. Lucas, a contributor to La Nature, to suggest a simple and reasonable explanation of the figure, which is entirely confirmed by the figure itself. He claims it is simply a magic square represented in the only way that it could be by a person ignorant of figures. It will be seen that in whichever direction one counts the groups of spots and circles, whether horizontally, vertically or diagonally, the total product will always be fifteen. The above figure translated into Arabic numerals would be written as follows:

CHINESE MAGIC SQUARE EXPLAINED.

A slight inspection of the two diagrams will be sufficient to convince any one that the mysterious Lo-chou has no hidden mystic or even mathematical meaning, but is simply the attempt of some ancient student, ignorant of figures, to express that remarkable relation of numbers to each other which, under the name of the magic square, is a familiar source of amusement to every schoolboy of the present day. It is certainly a very curious circumstance that this arrangement should have been known, not only at such early period but even before the invention of figures, to express the numbers themselves.

To Prevent the Rusting of Iron Pipes.

A simple way of tarring sheet iron pipes to keep them from rusting is to coat the pieces as made with hot coal tar, then fill with light wood shavings and set the latter on fire. A correspondent of The Gas Light Journal, who recommends this plan, asserts that the iron will be rendered practically rust proof for an indefinite period. Heating the iron after the tar is laid on the outside is thought to burn it into the metal, thus closing the pores in a much more perfect manner than if hot tar were applied to cold iron after the ordinary custom. Light shavings are recommended as important items of this method in that the iron should not be made too hot or kept hot for too long a time, lest the tar should be burnt off.

A New Cement.

Take two ounces of clear gum arabic, one and one-half ounces of fine starch and half an ounce of white sugar. Pulverize the gum arabic and dissolve it in as much water as the mixture would use for the quantity of starch indicated. Dissolve the starch and sugar in the gum solution. Then cook the mixture in a vessel suspended in boiling water until the starch becomes clear. The cement should be as thick as tar and kept so. It can be kept unchanged by dropping in a lump of gum camphor or a little oil of cloves or assafras. The Horological Review says that this cement is very strong indeed, and will stick perfectly to almost any surface. It is good to repair broken rocks, minerals or fossils.

The Transportation of Acids.

American Analyst tells that there has been patented in Germany a process by means of which sulphuric acid for manufacturing purposes can be safely transported. The inventor takes advantage of a property of certain salts—of which alkaline sulphates are representative—by which they give up their water of crystallization when heated, and take it up again when cool; and he does so by mixing the salts in an anhydrous condition, with a calculated quantity of sulphuric acid. The whole mass becomes granular, or may be formed into cakes, and when heated the whole liquifies, and may be used as if it were sulphuric acid, for the presence of bisulphate of soda does no harm.

Gas from Coal Stick.

A Pittsburg exchange notes the reported successful invention by a gentleman of that city of a device for manufacturing gas for fuel at a cost of two cents per 1,000 feet. It is understood that the machine was tested and proved a success. This invention is to be known as the water gas process. It includes the use of coal slack and water. The slack is pulverized and steamed, and put through another process which produces the gas. It is claimed that each establishment using the gas can be furnished with a plant for manufacturing its own fuel at a nominal cost.

The abolishment of the twin nuisances of railway travel—cinders and smoke—is the point aimed at in an engine which, it is said, is now being constructed at one of the large locomotive works of this country. This engine, it is expected, will reduce the consumption of fuel by at least 20 per cent., and altogether do away with cinders and smoke. The peculiar mechanism which produces the result is a downward draught as opposed to the present upward one.

Watch Jewels.

About 1,500,000 watches with jeweled works are annually manufactured in the United States, requiring about 12,000,000 jewels—7 to 21 for each watch. Of these 5,000,000 are ruby and sapphire and 7,000,000 are garnet jewels, valued at over $500,000. About 15,000 carats of diamond in the form of bort are used annually in splitting and drilling these jewels.

ALL AROUND THE HOUSE.

Mirrors on the Wane—Yellow or Golden the Prevailing Tint for Wall Paper.

Some important alterations in styles of furnishing are noted lately. Mirrors are not so plenteous and there is lamentation among many women thereat. An English authority on decorative matters says yellow walls range everywhere, and this prevalence of yellow has knocked out the Indian carpet and orientalism in rugs. English Axminsters have not been in such demand. They are made in subdued shades so as not to clash with the yellow walls. One, for instance, was of pale terra cotta with a cream border, picked out with green and yellow flowers. Terra cotta walls are also in favor. A good many walls, however, are panelled out. Silk cord is substituted for moulding in some instances. Tint yellow, or, as it is called, golden, to vary the style, is undoubtedly the prevailing tint for wall papers and dangings.

China matting, varied with rugs, is largely used for drawing rooms during the summer. It is very cool and delightfully clean and simple. China matting is generally plain, but there is sometimes patterned with fans, tattoo marks, Japanese umbrellas and figures. It looks rather pretty. Antique Persian rugs, on which peacocks and blooming greys have been said, have fallen heavily in price.

A Quick Way to Get Rid of Moths.

When once moths get into a room it is difficult to extirpate them. Harper's Bazar gives, however, the following process for destroying them, which is large and worthy of trial. Close all the windows and all doors leading from the room about to undergo treatment; open wide each drawer and closet and hang in the centre over clothes or upon a clothes horse brought into the room for the occasion. Take a piece of gum camphor as large as a hazelnut for an ordinary room (as large as a walnut for a room 20 by 16), put it in an iron pot and place the latter within another iron pot or upon an iron stand. Set fire to the camphor. In three or four seconds, so set it at a safe distance from furniture or hangings; the middle of the room is the best place for it, unless it is directly under a chandelier, in which case it can be placed more toward the side, as the heat is apt to injure the gilding or bronze.

The camphor soon gets alight and smoke every nook and corner and suffocates every insect that inhabits it. Canary birds or goldfish are to be carried from the room before the fumigating operations, and as soon as the camphor begins to burn the operator may leave the room, as, provided she has taken the above precautions, there will be no danger of fire spreading. The camphor will burn from a quarter to half an hour, but it can be extinguished at any moment by pinching off the flame with the fingers of the pot. Let the smoke remain in the room about half an hour, then open the windows wide, leaving them so all day. All the rooms can be treated thus in succession or all at once, a care being taken to guard against fire.

A Handy Table for Summer Excursions.

A convenient table for use in summer on the lawn, and which can easily be taken apart and packed in a small bundle for transportation on excursions, is illustrated in Rural New Yorker, from which the cut is a reprint.

A CONVENIENT TABLE.

It can be constructed as follows: Take three inch boards 6 or 8 feet long; these are sets of cleats on the under side from 12 to 16 inches from each ends the cleats to be two inches apart. The legs should be made 1 by 4, 30 inches long, and to them should be fastened two four inch strips, 42 inches long, to cross each other. The bed of the table is to be set on the legs at the cross strips. The whole may be put together with bolts, and taken apart and packed in a small bundle for transportation on excursions.

Queen Cakes.

Work a quarter of a pound of butter to a cream, dredge in half a pound of flour, add a quarter of a pound of sifted sugar and a quarter of a pound of currants; whisk two eggs and mix with half a teaspoonful of thick cream and a few drops of lemon essence; stir this to the flour and then add a teaspoonful of baking powder. Beat the paste well for ten minutes, then bake in small, buttered tins for from a quarter to half an hour. The mixture should be stiff and doughy. This amount is enough to make a dozen cakes.

Softening Hard Water.

For softening hard water, where wood ashes can be obtained, a lye is made by boiling some in water, and straining off the liquor when the ashes have settled and left it clear, is perhaps the best way. Common lime is occasionally resorted to for the purpose, preferring the purest attainable, and diluting it yourself. Borax dissolved in boiling water, and added to the suspected water, will soften it, and is particularly good when linen articles are to be cleansed.

A Hint from Mme. Modjeska.

Mme. Modjeska is credited with saying: "Red worn below the face deadens the complexion; worn above the face, heightens the complexion. If, therefore, a woman wishes to subdue the color in the cheek she should wear a red gown or plenty of red ribbons about the throat; on the other hand, if she wishes to give her face a certain touch of color, let her wear a red hat or red flowers in her hair."

Delicious Corn Muffins.

Two eggs and two tablespoonfuls of sugar beaten together. Add one and a half teacupfuls of sweet milk (water may be substituted), a half teaspoonful of salt, one teacupful of Indian meal (white preferred), two teacupfuls of flour sifted with two heaping teaspoonfuls of best baking powder, and last, one tablespoonful of melted butter. These are delicious.

Boston Brown Bread.

Scald a pint of corn meal with a pint of boiling water. When sufficiently cool add a pint and a half of rye meal, a gill of yeast, a gill of molasses and a teaspoonful of salt. Mix well, and when perfectly risen steam five hours. Then put in the oven half an hour to dry and harden the crust.

THE CURIOSITY SHOP.

Entertaining Facts About Precious Stones Found in the United States.

Nearly all the known varieties of precious stones are found in the United States, but there is very little systematic exploration for them, as the indications seldom justify the large expenditure which such a search requires. Systematic search for gems and precious stones has been carried on in only two states—Maine and North Carolina. Otherwise the gems were found accidentally in connection with other substances that are being mined. The occurrence of diamonds in the United States is chiefly confined to two regions, Colorado and North Carolina, similar. The first is a belt of country lying along the eastern base of the southern Alleghanies, from Virginia to Georgia, while the other extends along the western base of the Sierra Nevada and Cascade ranges in northern California and southern Oregon.

Corundum (to the transparent red, blue, purple, green and yellow varieties of which are given the names ruby, sapphire, amethyst, emerald and topaz) exists as regards variety of color in North Carolina, where exists the great corundum region of the United States. The chief locality for gem sapphires is near Helena, Mont., where they occur as loose crystals. Sapphires are found to a limited extent in Colorado. The turquoise is found in New Mexico, Nevada, Colorado and South California. The gem topaz has been found in Connecticut, Maine, Utah, Colorado and Nevada. A famous tourmaline locality is situated on Mount Mica, near Paris, Maine. Another important locality in Maine is in Auburn. St. Lawrence county, New York, has also afforded some fine examples of tourmaline.

The finest pyrope garnets in the United States are found in New Mexico, Arizona and southern Colorado, where they are often called rubies. Opal, either of the noble or the fire opal variety, has been observed only near John Davis' river, Cook county, Oregon. Other gems are also found, however, in several of the states. The opals usually sold to tourists are of Mexican origin. The most important marine pearl fishery on the American continent is that of Lower California. Pearls have been sent to the New York market from nearly every state. Some of the earliest American pearls came from Ohio. Large and valuable Unio pearls have been obtained in New Jersey. Finely colored pearls have been found in Wisconsin. Both Kentucky, Tennessee and Texas are the principal pearl producing states. The foregoing interesting facts are from Mr. George F. Kunz's recent and exhaustive work on "Gems and Precious Stones of North America."

Largest Sum Ever Paid for a Book.

The report that a syndicate of J. P. Morgan has offered $40,000, or about $200,000, for the Vatican copy of the Hebrew bible renders interesting the history of previous negotiations for the purchase of this very book.

In 1512, when Pope Julius II was desperately in need of funds to keep up the "Holy League" against Louis XII of France, he was approached by the Jews as his successor in the chair of St. Peter is now. They offered a comparatively small sum at first, but subsequently increased the amount, tendering at the same time a blank order on one of their number in Venice to be filled up in ducats according to the weight of the bible as against an equal weight of pure gold.

The pope got so far as to weigh the precious volume, and found that it scaled 302 pounds avoirdupois, or 623 pounds old troy, which at $4 the ounce, then about the value of gold, represented the enormous sum of $39,776 and a fraction. This amount in its equivalent the Jews pressed on the pope, who, however, either because he found himself unable to part with property in which he would not seem to have more than a life interest, or on account of the pressure brought to bear on him, declined after much hesitation to part with the volume. The subsequent negotiations be more successful the amount now offered will be the largest sum ever paid for a book, whether in manuscript or in print, according to Mr. Kunz, the highest authority for the foregoing statistics. The nearest approach was the £10,000 (or nearly $50,000) paid by the German government in 1884 for the Mainz Psalter, printed by Leo X to Henry VIII, along with a parchment conferring on that sovereign the title of "Defender of the Faith." The Mainz was given by Charles II to the then Duke of Hamilton, in whose family it remained for more than 200 years.

A Famous Old Clock.

One of the best known clocks in the United States is probably that which surmounts the old State House in Independence square, Philadelphia. It is said to have been made by Seneca Lukens, a Quaker watchmaker who lived in the country, and whose services it was the go to the city once a year to wind up and oil the clock, a custom which he continued till his death, aged 80 years. The clock was in the possession of the "Liberty Bell," which was rung on the occasion of the Declaration of Independence, July 4, 1776, in the room in the State House on the front on Chestnut street or the left of the main hall.

Should and Would.

Mr. Richard Grant White says: "I do not know in English literature another passage in which the distinction between shall and will, and would and should is at once so elegantly, so simply, so precisely and so compactly illustrated as in the following lines from a song in Sir George Etherege's 'She Would If She Could' (1706):

"How long I shall love him I cannot tell,
But so long I will love him, no more nor less!
Then, had I a fewer, when I should be well,
My passion I will to another bestow;
And yet I would give all the world had it never by But, oh! how I sigh when I think should he woo me
no
I cannot refuse what I know would undo me!"

Thackeray's and Charlotte Bronte.

Thackeray after his meeting with Miss Bronte in London wrote: "I remember the trembling little frame, the little hand, the great honest eyes. An unflinching honesty seemed to me the characteristic feature. She gave me the impression of being a very pure and high minded person. A quiet and holy reverence of right and truth seemed to be with her always."

Jane and Joan.

Joanna, the feminine form of John (the gracious gift of God), has given to the world Jessie, Jessica and Johanna of the German peasantry and the Jane which was introduced during the Tudor period, when Jane Seymour at once rendered it so fashionable that it became the courtly title, and Joan descended to the cottage and the kitchen.

Newspaper Advertisements.

Advertisements were first circulated in newspapers during Charles II's reign. One printed in 1679 read in this wise: "At the sign of the Golden Ball and Coffin these are ready made to be sold very fashionable laced and plain dressings for the dead, of all sizes, with very fashionable coffins."

VETERANS VISIT PLAINFIELD.

Winfield Scott Post of Philadelphia Entertained by the Local Post.

Saturday night was an eventful night for the Grand Army of the Republic in this city. Winfield Scott Post No. 75, had extended an invitation to Post No. 114 of Philadelphia, and Skidmore Post No. 200 of Brooklyn to come to this city and spend the evening.

At about eight o'clock a special train from Philadelphia rolled into the main depot carrying the old veterans.

They were informally received by the Plainfield Post and then marched to the corner on East Front street, where Commander Pangborn in behalf of Winfield Scott Post of Philadelphia presented to the Plainfield Post a handsome portrait of the man from whom the Posts took their names. Rev. Major L. V. F. Randolph accepted the portrait and in a few appropriate remarks thanked the visitors for their kind donation.

After the presentation a short line of march was indulged in during which the streets were ablaze with red fire. The veterans presented a fine appearance, and the marching of Middleton Post was exceptionally good. They are a fine body of men and by their marching showed that they were quarter years to come.

At the conclusion of the parade the veterans assembled at Arnpion Hall, where the members of the Woman's Relief Corps had prepared an excellent supper to which all and justice. After all present had satisfied the appetite of the inner man, addresses were made by Gen. Negley, Col. Mason W. Tyler, Hon. John Ulrich, I. H. Sawyer, Dr. Livermore. The programme also included singing and recitations, and was very enjoyable. Other posts, than those above mentioned were represented, among them Post No. 1, and 31.

In fact the affair was the most enjoyable the Winfield Scott Post has given for some time past, and the visitors departed overjoyed with the reception they had received.

ALL REVOLUTIONARY HEROES.

Surrogate Parrott's List of Illustrious Ancestors.

Surrogate George M. Townley Parrott, of Union county, and a member of the Society of Sons of the Revolution, can boast of what probably few men in New Jersey, or in fact any State of the Union, can lay claim to, namely, the honor of having three great grandfathers and one great-great-grandfather, all of whom fought on the American side in the Revolutionary war.

Surrogate Parrott's great-great grandfather George Townley Parrott, after whom he is named, was one of Gen. Washington's aide-de-camps, and served under him during the whole of the great struggle for independence. A great-grandfather on his mother's side, Capt. Daniel S. Wood, was an officer in the 25th Regiment of Essex.

Another great-grandfather, Wahnes Burnett, fought in the closing years of the war. Still another William Parrott served all through the conflict and participated in the battle of Springfield, in Union county, and was crippled for life in the service. So was George Townley Parrott.

The bodies of the four heroes repose in the old churchyard of New Providence Township.

Surrogate Parrott has, therefore, good reason to be proud of his Revolutionary ancestry. He finally is among the oldest in Union county, having settled in New Providence in 1720. The county at that period went under the name of Turkey, being years later changed to its present name.

POLICE NOTES.

Two Victims of the Cup Arrested Saturday Night.

Two persons occupied the station house Saturday night and yesterday. They were Richard Kilpatrick and William Sallings. The charge against each was drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

This morning the first one arraigned before City Judge Codington was Kilpatrick. He pleaded guilty to the charge and the Judge imposed a five-dollar fine.

Sallings, when arraigned also pleaded guilty. The Judge severely reprimanded him and sentenced him to jail.

At about ten o'clock last evening Policemen Conroy and Flanagan were called upon to quell a small riot on College place. When they arrived at the "battle field" the parties had fled and consequently no arrests were made.

THE CRESCENTS DEFEATED.

The Trentons at Trenton Came Out Victorious.

Through the closing weeks of April—through May—through half of June, the Crescents went from victory to victory. Would the month close in triumph? But a single game remained. Would its banner fly aloft or droop in the dust? The Trentons are said not to be an individual club, but a composite one, formed from skilled players belonging in the various organizations of the city of Trenton, and right worthy it is to sustain the credit of the capital.

The Crescents lost the game in the first inning. The Trentons went to the bat. The first ball hit by Hammil went near the first base. In course was wobbling and slow. Wiegand left his base to secure it. Lafferty sprang to cover the base, Wiegand sent the ball to him, it struck the runner, gave him his base and the Trentons scored one in the "chapter of accidents. McGuire then made a base hit. Riddle was hit with the ball and took his base. Harnitf then struck a vicious grounder to first base. Wiegand slipped and fell, and while down made a miserable throw to Hayes, which sent them to the fence. An overthrow to first followed. Sanford struck out. Riddle was touched by Gregg running home from third and Stephenson closed the inning being put out at first by a throw from Lafferty. Three runs for Trenton and its Mate. Morris was struck down and way back shot up like a rocket.

Three men of the Crescents faced the pitcher, and immediately retired.

The second inning added one to Trenton, as record runs. The Crescents made two, one earned by the fine hit of Lee.

The close of the seventh inning saw the clubs tie at four to four, in which two errors gave Lee a run, being the only ones up to that time made by the Trentons.

The eighth and ninth innings were unproductive.

The tenth inning commenced under intense excitement, as every one seemed to feel that this would be the deciding inning.

The Trenton gave the finest exhibition of batting ever seen on the grounds. Hannah went out at first by a throw from Lee. McGuire made a clean base hit, his fourth in the game. Riddle followed with a base hit. Harnitf kept up the pace with another, and Stephenson closed the procession by a magnificent single between centre and right, earning three leads for himself and three runs for Trenton.

The Crescents began their last, Gregg went to first on balls. Lee followed suit. Walter flew out to Sanford. Martin made his first. Lafferty flew out to Canby. Wiegand has hit his last game by Mcfaden. Jones went out at first by McGuire to Hornell and the lasting closed with two runs for the Crescents, and the contest ended with seven runs for the Trentons and six for the Crescents.

But few errors were made, but in every case those errors gave the pecuriar runs which never should have been made.

The fielding was excellent as a whole, each club being entitled to great credit. If a fault was committed by the Crescent outfielders, it was in playing too far out.

In batting the Trentons greatly excelled. The Crescents failed to hit the straight, swift shoots of Sandford, who did excellent work in the box. It is said that the talent wagered heavily on the Crescents, and were eagerly looking for home, but this time the wolves were sheep, and the hands of all sporting gentlemen on Saturday night.

"Mickey" Gregg, the pitcher for the Crescents, "put up" an excellent game as did also Jones and Martin.

NETHERWOOD'S LEAFY CHARMS.

Tempered Breezes, Shady Paths, Sweet Music and Solid Comforts.

The abundant rain, bright sun and balmy breezes of the month of roses have added such a wealth of beauty to the hills and valleys of western Union County that the whole section now wears the appearance of a vast pleasure ground. From every view point above the billowy foliage the picturesque outlines of the big Watchung mountains and the skyline like a chateau among the vine-clad hills of sunny France. Those who have been fortunate enough to escape from the city during June have enjoyed walks and drives in Nature's woods by paths and lovely roads which will make this month memorable as the happy month at Netherwood. It is now at its prettiest. Nature's lavish luxuriance can bestow no further charm. The contrast roads all lead to the hotel, and their good condition tempts so many of the guests then carriages combining familiar faces appear to the city man at every turn. This is more notable in luminous twilight, when business men return from their city treadmills to enjoy life in the woods. The sense of restfulness which pervades the atmosphere seems to fairly melt into the inner consciousness of the dwellers here and solid comfort is shown in cheerful faces, which beam as if there were no cares in this world.

Frank S. Miller, the Netherwood host, has a fourth of July entertainment in his mind which is to be something unique and a kind of a surprise. He is a boss at entertaining and the guests are likely to have a glorious Fourth.

The orchestra, directed by Prof. Greenop's baton, fills the evening air with harmony and affords opportunities for the votaries of Terpsichore after the retreta.

The programme for July will contain many pleasing affairs to accentuate the current comfort without interfering with the freedom required for a thorough enjoyment of vacation.

Much satisfaction is expressed by the city people here with the arrangements for their benefit on the Central road. Forty six opportunities are afforded to come and go each day, and the trip takes but little more time than a ride to High Bridge or Morris, and it is never necessary to "hang on the straps." There are seats for all.

Among the arrivals of the past week the following are the most prominent: Mr. and Mrs. Titus B. Meigs, New York; Mrs. F. P. Read, Mr. H. S. Dennison, Mr. and Mrs. D. F. THE POST-OFFICE AND SALOON.

Mr. C. B. Mitchell Voices a General Complaint.

A large congregation filled the Methodist Episcopal church last evening to hear the postponed sermon on "Temperance," announced by the pastor, the Rev. Charles B. Mitchell.

Mr. Mitchell briefly reviewed the late congress of ministers held in the early part of June in the Broadway Tabernacle, N. Y., in which both sides of the liquor question were discussed, and then drifted into a review of Plainfield's history during Prohibition and High License. He said, in speaking of the Council. Are we to allow a few white aproned bartenders to run our municipal government? That is about what we are doing, and the great mass of our citizens simply say, "we can't do anything" and allow liquor men to get control in our Council by not using their power as citizens, and voting against them. Never in the history has Plainfield had so disgraced as this year when we have the highest license tax ever received, and become men in preponderance in the Council-chamber. During no business time we needed few or no policemen. As soon as we had high license it was found necessary to increase the force. There are more arrests, not because the officers are any better, for the greatest increase on our city, through certain committees was not caused by officers not arresting, but from arresting. It is happening however, that the law-breakers were also our lawmakers, for arresting whom the officer was removed.

The general murmur that arose spontaneously, showed how strong was the feeling against the saloon, to whom his disgrace was due. It would have given certain occupants of the Council-chamber, an insight into the way the public in general view their recent actions.

Continuing Mr. Mitchell said: "If our young men knew would only arouse and use the power given them by their franchise we, the citizens of Plainfield and our children, would not also be compelled to be almost made drunk by liquor fumes when getting our mail. We would not have a saloon in the same building as our post-office."

At that point a gentle hum, that but for the pastor's reproving gesture would have amounted to open approval, showed how strongly the large body of people present agreed with the pastor, on that subject also. Mr. Mitchell further discussed the apathy of the voters, who aroused to action always too late, and exhorted them to be men, and as Christians do their duty. His remarks were pointed and he handled the liquor question, as one man put it "as he usually did all matters of general interest, without gloves."

One Broke the Record, the Other Almost his Neck.

Messrs. "Lutie" Waring and Marion Acker-man started Saturday evening at seven minutes past eight o'clock from in front of the Crescent avenue church, to race to Westfield and return, the object being to break the record, then unequalled, of 34 minutes. A large number of friends and others had assembled to see them off. Last week THE NEWS published the time, said to have been made by a rider, but it had been taken by several spectators with ordinary watches and was not correct. Saturday evening to make sure of having correct time the trial the starters, Messrs. Howard Beebe, O. S. Waring and "Al" Wright, started and timed them with three "stop" watches. Several Union County Wheelmen were at Westfield to see that the men observed no property there. The distance, to and return, is about nine miles. The pace set by the riders was very fast, and was kept up there and back. When they reached Fanwood bill returning Mr. Acker-man unfortunately took a "header" which almost him for some time, race. Mr. Waring, who was slightly in the lead, instantly stopped and inquired if he could be of service. Mr. Ackerman told him "no, go on ahead." He did so and in spite of the time lost by the stoppage he rode across the mark in just 32.45 after he left it. A still larger crowd than had seen him start were awaiting his return.

As soon as he could be informed his friends of his companion's mishap, and Messrs. Howard Beebe and G. C. Martin, jr., went on their wheels to his assistance.

They found Mr. Ackerman where he had fallen, in a rather dazed condition. After bathing his head he soon became all right and rode home.

Messrs. Howard Beebe and "Jim" Murray will attempt to break the new record Thursday or Friday evening.

Base Ball.

The White Caps of this city defeated the Merits of the Point Tool Works Saturday afternoon on the White Cap's field by the score of 16 to 3, this being the sixth successive game they have won. The game was well played throughout but the White Caps, by bunching their hits in the fourth and fifth innings, scored that the Merits could not overcome. The batting of the White Caps was good. Two two-base hits were made by Carver and Smith. The latter resulting in a home run as the ball was lost. Burt's pitching was excellent and was caught in an able manner by Egan. Below is the score by innings:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Merits	1	2	0	0	0	1	0	0	0—3
White Caps	0	5	5	1	5	0	0	0	*—16

The danger of the crowded street crossings of our large cities is becoming very serious. In New York on an average three persons are knocked down and hurt or killed daily. To remedy this elevated sidewalks, two story affairs, have been proposed over the streets at crowded crossings. Some remedy will have to be applied.

With all due meekness and gentleness The New York Tribune rebukes newspaper writers throughout the Union for their misuse and mixing up of the words "cloudburst" and "waterspout." It reminds the public in general that a cloudburst occurs on land and a waterspout on the water. A cloud passing over a valley where its progress is interfered with by mountain tops or high hill tops sometimes bursts and deluges the valley below. The water in a waterspout, on the contrary, comes from below, not above. It is drawn up from a lake, river or the ocean by a whirling wind. A waterspout seldom appears except at sea.

Investigating Ghosts.

The American Society for Psychic Research is not to die after all, it seems. It has risen from its weakness and taken on new life under the auspices of the International Congress of Experimental Psychology.

Professor William James, of Harvard university, is assisting in the work, and so him communications are to be addressed. He will aid in collecting and classifying the ghost lore. A circular has been sent to persons in all parts of the Union asking them to consider and answer the following query:

"Have you ever, when completely awake, had a vivid impression of seeing or being touched by a living being or inanimate object or of hearing a voice, which impression, so far as you could discover, was not due to any external physical cause?"

A simple yes or no is all that is required; but if the answer is yes then the society sends another circular containing a whole string of questions, one of the most important being whether there was any way of accounting for the impression on the ground of physical causes. In other words, is the impression due to cause apparently quite outside of this physical realm, or might it have been due to mince pie?

A field of research which is really worthy the serious and earnest attention of intelligent persons is here opened up.

We seem at present on the brink of startling psychological discoveries, which nevertheless have so far eluded the most patient efforts of science. Undoubtedly there are facts underneath all in our physical everyday life that are none the less facts. At least that is the judgment of some of the most scientific minds of the present day. So if our readers can help Professor James and the Psychological society by the forwarding of facts within their knowledge we hope they will do so.

The Age of Gigantic Ideas.

Never since history records were there such colossal enterprises in the industrial and economic world as there are now. Manufacturing and mercantile establishments whose capital runs far up into the millions are so common as to excite no remark.

But when one thinks of it he will notice that the machinery itself used in this age of great enterprises represents the gigantic ideas of the time. Engines, driving wheels, manufacturing machinery of all kinds are tremendous. Ocean steamers have grown so large that they even approach the size of the Great Eastern, that wonder of the world twenty-five years ago. Single engines will no longer drive them, so the compound engine has been introduced and the twin screw.

Blast furnaces turn out as much metal in a day as they did in a week twenty years ago. At the Soho iron works, in England, is a Corliss engine forty-eight feet high and of 5,000 horse power. It is the largest engine in the world. At the Homestead steel works of Pittsburg the fly wheel of a Corliss engine now being erected will weigh 800,000 pounds. At the Deptford electric lighting stations near London the Ferranti dynamos are forty-five feet high, weigh 800 tons, and make sixty revolutions a minute.

It is the age of tremendous bridges, tunnels and buildings. When before were there buildings fourteen stories high, sheltering each as many persons as the population of a whole town? It may be that persons now living will see great railway tunnels under the waters of New York bay, connecting for purposes of rapid transit Long Island and Staten Island with New York. Our churches, our locomotive engines, our printing presses are vastly larger than they were when the present generation began its existence.

Under the circumstances, how far behind our age and out of whack with our time are we when we are small minded and intolerant and narrow in our views.

SHOT DOWN AND BEATEN

Fatal Results of a Louisiana Race War.

THE BATTLE IN SEWELL'S GARDEN

One Negro Shot Dead, Two Wounded and Three Others Whipped and Driven from Amite, La., by Several Hundred Masked Men—Social Equality Was Displeasing.

AMITE, La., June 20.—Race troubles of unusual violence have broken out here, and for nearly a week excitement has been at fever heat. Several days ago a committee of white men waited upon several Negroes and requested them to leave the city for living upon terms of social equality with the negroes in this vicinity. During the conference a number of negroes in hiding poured a volley of buckshot into the ranks of the committee. No one was injured, but the members of the committee vowed vengeance upon the negroes who were suspected of participating in the attempted assassination.

The Negroes Were Arming.

A day or two later the objectionable white man who had incurred their neighbors' displeasure by treating the negroes as equals advised the negroes to strike for higher pay. Business came to a standstill, and alarming reports were circulated that the colored people held frequent night meetings and were procuring arms and ammunition from many quarters to use against the white people in a race conflict they contemplated bringing about. Recent events established the fact that these reports were not groundless, and the white people prepared themselves for the expected emergency.

A Desperate Negro Wounded.

Reported threats on the part of the negroes against the whites, the firing upon the committee, and the accepted beating of a white child by a negro man brought about a speedy climax. Several hundred white men armed themselves and went gunning for the negroes who were suspected of conspiring against the peace of the community. On Sunday morning George Howard, one of the most desperate of the negroes, was shot just above town by disguised men and came into town for medical assistance.

The Battle in the Garden.

A short time thereafter the thunder of many hoofs was heard, and in an instant every road leading into the town was filled with masked and mounted men. Each rider was armed with a rifle, and the grim looking band of vigilants rode at headlong speed to the house of Thomas Sewell, a negro. The house was surrounded and the grounds invaded by the masked riders. The wounded negro and several companions were found hiding in the garden, and upon Howard's refusing to surrender a desperate fusillade ensued.

Howard was riddled with bullets from a score of rifles and two of his companions, Jake Simmons and Ned Taylor, negroes were seriously wounded. None of the white men were hurt, but horses were shot from under two of the vigilants.

Whipped and Ordered to Leave.

Dug Tillis and two other negros were taken to the outskirts of the corporation, whipped, and ordered to leave town. Armed squads were then sent out and capture all of the suspected colored people. Eighteen or twenty double barreled guns, two Winchester rifles and a number of pistols were taken. The armed crowd then dispersed.

Negroes Sold Like Slaves.

RALEIGH, N. C., June 20.—William Hill and a party of negro "exodusters," who left New Hanover county for Arkansas, have just returned. The make affidavit as to their treatment there and their story is a horrible one.

There were 600 in their party and all had been promised good wages. They were virtually sold to a labor contractor, who, when he was notified by the poor negroes that they could not work for fifty cents a day, said that was all he would give.

Guarded by Armed Men.

He seized all their personal effects. Some families were put in horse stables and others in old outhouses, while some had to remain on the banks of the river without shelter. All were guarded like criminals and revolvers were drawn on them to force them to work. They were within twenty miles of Louisiana and were unable to get on the steamer without a pass. They got away and went to another point, where they were halted by men armed and mounted, who demanded where they were going and by whose authority. The last sale of these people was made in Louisiana by a man named Williams, who sold 600 of them for $5,000.

A National Guardsman's Tragic End.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., June 30.—The body found in the river below the falls has been identified as that of Charles Oberst, sergeant armorer of the Sixty-fifth regiment, and who resided in Allen street, Buffalo. Mrs. Oberst says her husband left home on the six pounder early on the morning of June 10 for the purpose of buying a horse, if and never returned. On that day a man was seen to jump from Goat Island bridge and a second later pass under the bridge.

Prize Fighters in Trouble.

NEW YORK, June 30.—Tommy Kelly and Benny Murphy, the pugilists who had a glove contest at No. 13 St. Mark's place Thursday night, were arraigned in the Essex Market police court Sunday on a charge of prize fighting, and were held in $200 bail each for examination on July 9 at the Tombs court.

Two Persons Drowned.

BROCKVILLE, Ont., June 30.—A sad drowning accident occured here Sunday afternoon which resulted in the death of two persons, Miss Mary McMann and William Casselman.

THE FEDERAL ELECTION BILL.

The President's Alleged Statement That He Would Sign It.

WASHINGTON, June 30.—The Sunday Herald, commenting on President Harrison's attitude toward the federal election bill, says: "President Harrison has heretofore been given the credit of at least deprecating if not actually opposing the passage of the dangerous federal election bill now under discussion in the house. It has been believed that he was statesman enough to discern the evil tendencies of the scheme and sufficiently patriotic to frown upon the centralizing and un-American clique which has forced most of the Republicans in the house into accepting the bill. But the president has taken occasion to declare himself under the domination of the Reed wing of the party and in favor of the bill. He thinks there is still power for his party in the 'bloody shirt,' and not only wants the bill passed, but wants it done quickly, so that the cry of 'southern outrages' may be used in the coming congressional campaign 'to fire the northern heart' and distract attention from the gross perjury and fraud of which the party is guilty in connection with the force bill and the growing dissensions on the tariff question.

"A gentleman who in the past has held very close and confidential personal relations with the president related the substance of an interview between him and the chief magistrate to a Herald representative. It was characterized with unusual frankness by Gen. Harrison that under no circumstances would he interfere, even by the remotest suggestion, outside of an official message with 'the action of congress. Then the president continued: 'If they pass the federal election bill I will sign it as soon as it is presented to me for my consideration. I want them to pass the bill and I don't care who knows it.'

"Subsequently the president said he had, in a confidential way, advised his friends in both houses of congress to proceed as rapidly as possible with the final enactment of the bill, so that 'it might become a question of discussion in the coming campaign.'"

FATALITIES NEAR ROCHESTER.

One Man Drowned and Two Killed by the Cars.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., June 30.—Fellnic Wunderlich, a German, aged 35 years, was drowned Sunday morning in the Erie canal near the West avenue bridge. The man was seen on West avenue as late as 11 p. m., at which time he started to go to his boarding house on Lyell avenue. While crossing the house, it seems, he decided to go in bathing. Some men saw him sink and ran to his assistance, but were too late. Wunderlich was a cigarmaker. He came from Germany several years ago, leaving his wife and children in that country.

Nelson A. Graves, one of the oldest members of the Monroe county bar, and a resident of this city, was instantly killed on the New York Central and Hudson River railroad a short distance from Penfield station on Saturday. He left his home in the morning and took a train for Fairport, intending to visit his daughter, Mrs. Frank Dougherty, who resided at that place. It is supposed that he left the train at Penfield and started to walk down the track.

Nicholas Karasinski, a young married man, about 21 years of age, who lived at No. 312 North Clinton street, in this city, jumped from a train at Charlotte while it was in motion and rolled under the wheels. He was brought to Rochester, where he died in a few minutes. Karasinski leaves a widow.

A Close Call for Eighteen Men.

MONMOUTH, Ills., June 30.—The buildings of the Monmouth Coal and Coke company have been destroyed by fire. The fire originated at the bottom of the shaft 100 feet deep. The flames instantly flew up the walls and ignited the building covering the shaft. Three dynamite torpedoes then exploded, throwing the fire over a large barn that was filled with hay. The heat was so intense that the firemen could not approach the shaft which led to the mines below, where eighteen men were imprisoned. Nearly two hours transpired before they could be reached. The men were protected when brought up, but a dash of water and fresh air soon revived them. They only saved themselves by lying down and holding their faces to the ground.

"Original Package Houses" Opened.

COLCHESTER, Ills., June 30.—An "original package house" has been opened in Colchester on the lines of the recent decision of the supreme court. All sorts of liquors are retailed in all sizes of bottles, each and every bottle being regarded as an "original package." It is reported that the wholesale liquor houses have offered $100 a month and guaranteed immunity to any man who will open an "original package house" in Macomb. A former saloon keeper of Keokuk, kept by a St. Louis liquor house, is preparing to open "original package houses" in interior towns of Illinois.

He Swallowed Strychnine.

BALTIMORE, June 30.—A suicide, attended by most distressing circumstances, occurred last night at 829 North Fulton avenue. Henry Meade, a bookkeeper, ended his life by swallowing twenty grains of strychnine. No cause for the suicide is apparent. Meade leaves a wife and child. The coroner declined to hold an inquest, being satisfied that death was caused by poison taken with suicidal intent.

The Burglars Killed Him.

MORRIS, Ills., June 30.—Charles Decker, whose skull was fractured by burglars early Thursday morning, died Sunday afternoon after lying in an unconscious condition for 160 hours. When Mrs. Stevens, his aged mother, who was also injured by the robbers, heard the news of his death, it affected her deeply, and all hope of her recovery has been abandoned.

Millions of Gold in Sight.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 30.—Col. Pacific Almarez, of the American army, has reached San Diego, from Juarez, Mexico, California, and tells of a remarkable strike in the mountains near Juarez. He found gold ore so rich that with a hand mortar he got pounds of gold. He declares that it is not a pocket, but there are millions in sight.

Col. Joseph W. Corning Dead.

PALMYRA, N. Y., June 30.—Col. Joseph W. Corning, postmaster and one of Palmyra's most prominent men, died Sunday night aged 77 years. He served with great distinction in the war of the rebellion and has since been prominent in Grand Army circles. His son, Col. John W. Corning, Jr., is deputy surveyor of the port of New York.

The Lake Front Site Favored.

CHICAGO, June 30.—After a three hours' session the board of directors of the World's Columbian exposition, by a vote of 23 to 10, decided to recommend to the national commission the lake front and such additional land as may be necessary as a site for the fair.

PATTISON OR WALLACE?

The Democratic Leaders Gathering at Scranton, Pa.

PREPARING FOR THE CONFLICT.

The Friends of Both Ex-Governor Pattison and Ex-Senator Wallace Are Confident Victory Will Perch on Their Favorite's Banners.

SCRANTON, Pa., June 30.—The advance guards of the various Democratic candidates who will contest for the gubernatorial nomination in next Wednesday's state convention are arriving in Scranton. Chairman Kinsey, of the state central committee, has established headquarters at the Wyoming house. He does not say who is likely to be nominated, but he regards the prospects of Democratic victory in Pennsylvania this year as unusually bright owing to the dissatisfaction among the Republicans that has been expressed from Philadelphia to Allegheny City over Delamater's nomination as an alleged Standard Oil candidate.

Ex-Senator Wallace Confident.

William E. Wallace, son of ex-Senator Wallace, predicts his father's success. Large delegations in the Wallace interest came in today from Clearfield, Harrisburg and other points. The ex-senator himself is on hand to get his own private business attention. D. J. Campbell, a prominent leader of the Knights of Labor, heads the Pattison delegation for the Lackawanna district, and says Pattison will be nominated on the second ballot.

The First Ballot.

The convention will consist of 398 delegates, with 185 necessary to a choice. Mr. Campbell says Pattison will have 164 on the first ballot, and that his nomination will be assured on the second. The large labor interest of this section, he says, is favorable to Pattison and opposed to Wallace on account of the corporation affiliations of the latter. This will be an important factor in shaping the result.

The Lieutenant Governorship.

Every effort will be made to induce Chauncey F. Black, of York, to accept the nomination for lieutenant governor on the ticket with Pattison and Black has failed to reform a clear and distinct issue. A declaration will be made in favor of a constitutional convention for the purpose of eliminating the ballot marking provision from the present state constitution, and on such a platform Mr. Campbell thinks Pattison and Black would make an invincible ticket.

He Says Wallace Will Win.

Attorney F. J. Fitzsimmons, who has charge of the Wallace headquarters and who is prominent in the Democratic politics of the state, says the Pattison men are claiming too much and that Wallace will be nominated. There will be forty-six contests before the convention on delegates irregularly elected for Pattison, and many of these, Mr. Fitzsimmons claims, will be decided in favor of Wallace.

J. Marshall Wright, of Allentown, one of the nine district chairmen of the state, is here in the interest of his brother, Hiram Wright, who is a candidate for governor. The local committee of arrangements has provided for a big time, and Democratic banners have been flung to the breeze. There will be a large attendance at the convention, and the proceedings promise to be of a decidedly interesting character.

He Is Against Delamater.

NEWCASTLE, Pa., June 30.—Since last Wednesday Thomas W. Phillips, of this city, has been importuned from all parts of the state for an expression of his opinion on the nomination of Delamater for governor by the Republicans.

Mr. Phillips is a millionaire oil producer and was prominently mentioned for the nomination until he put a stop to the talk by announcing that he would not accept if nominated. He is one of the most influential Republicans in western Pennsylvania.

Mr. Phillips says he objects to Delamater's nomination because he believes Delamater is backed by the Pennsylvania railroad and the Standard Oil company. The accusations made against him in connection with the Billingsly bill, Mr. Phillips says, have never been answered or refuted, and will weaken his support through the oil districts. Mr. Phillips says he will support an independent oand idate.

Philadelphia and Pattison.

PHILADELPHIA, June 30.—Philadelphia Democrats are looking forward eagerly to the Democratic state convention at Scranton on Wednesday. Ex-Governor Pattison is as strong in this city from a Democratic as Gen. Hastings was from a Republican standpoint, and in every part of the city Pattison is the favorite, and bets are freely made that if the Democrats nominate him the Delamater ticket will be defeated. One of the leading Democratic editors of the state informed a correspondent today that Pattison could carry Philadelphia county by from 10,000 to 15,000. Wallace's friends are also confident that their man will win the nomination.

Dead on the Track.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., June 30.—The body of Edmund J. Banker, aged 38, an employe of the Bluff Point quarries at Sarahville, was found on the Delaware and Hudson track near here Sunday morning by Track Walker O'Shea. Banker was here Saturday, and indulged in liquor. O'Shea supposes that the liquor required the body to be left where it was found, let it remain on the track while he came here to notify the coroner. Before the coroner reached the spot several trains had passed over it, mangling it horribly.

A Newark Woman Killed.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo., June 30.—Mrs. Cosgrove, of Chicago, and Mrs. Wolf, of Newark, N. J., were killed; Mrs. Gill, of Chicago, had both legs broken, and Mrs. Wilson, of Chicago, was severely bruised Sunday, the carriage in which they were riding being struck by a Midland railroad train at Ivywild. The driver of a young man accompanying the ladies escaped injury. The ladies were members of a traveler's protective association party who are touring the state.

WRITTEN IN HER BLOOD.

How a Kidnaped Girl Summoned Her Father.

SHE RESCUED AT LAST.

The Sad Story of One of the Four Connecticut Girls Who Were Lured to New York by a Fiend in Female Form.

NEW YORK, June 29.—Superintendent Adam H. Fuller, of Fuller's detective bureau, was successful in rescuing one of the poor girls who were enticed to this city from their Connecticut homes for unlawful purposes. A few days ago the following letter, written in blood, was received by the father of the young girl who was rescued from Meriden by a woman answering a strong resemblance to the once beautiful Blanche Douglas:

Written in Blood.

DEAR FATHER—I am locked in a room at a large house surrounded by trees in the country. The door is on the road from West Hoboken or the high Palisades of New Jersey. Oh, is there some or send for me, or I shall kill myself before starting any longer the terrible business I have been forced to do by the people who are all in a plot of crime against me. You can reach me by the Hoboken ferry, as I have been taken across it in a carriage. I am looking for you from a window at the top of the house on the top floor where no one can see me. I am held a prisoner, and only by the kindness of a sympathizing servant woman am this letter got to you for me. Come quick, or you may find me dying or dead.

Locked In an Upper Room.

The envelope bore the postmark of Guttenberg, N. J., and Superintendent Fuller, after a long search, succeeded in finding the young girl in a secluded house about half way between Guttenburg and West Hoboken. When Superintendent Fuller and one of his detectives entered the house they found that the unfortunate girl was locked in an upper room. The girl was prostrated by the mental ordeal she had been through, but before leaving here she told Mr. Fuller her remarkable experience.

Drugged and Ruined.

She became acquainted with a rather prepossessing woman in Meriden some time ago, she said, who induced her to come to this city. She accompanied the woman to the vicinity of Central Park, where she was introduced to a good looking young man wearing a black mustache.

After partaking of some wine she knew nothing more until she found herself alone the following morning in the room in the house near Guttenburg. Then she discovered that she had been drugged, and that the woman whom she had trusted was responsible for her condition.

With Blood and a Pointed Stick.

She found the door of her room but found them locked. Here she was confined for several days, and subjected to various cruelties. Finally she discovered an old nail in a window sash which was under a pile of rubbish. She had no writing materials, but, cutting her gums until the blood flowed, she succeeded with the end of a pointed stick in laboriously writing in letters of crimson the letter to her father disclosing her place of confinement. After much difficulty she succeeded in bribing the servant girl to intrust it to a servant at the house, to mail the letter. The girl said that she never slept after the old woman told her that the letter had been safely deposited at the postoffice until she was safely rescued.

To Punish the Guilty Woman.

The father of the girl called for his daughter after her at once to his home, but not until he had made arrangements with Mr. Fuller to follow up the vile woman who had decoyed her away. Superintendent Fuller will take his clews which will lead to the recovery of Amelia Elsaver, of Southington, Conn., and hopes to be able to return her to her parents in a few days. He believes that all of the girls were decoyed from their homes by the same person.

"If the parents of these girls keep their promises," said he, "I hope soon to bring this woman to trial. I will take her to Connecticut to face the fathers and mothers of these girls, and she will be put out of the way of trafficking in innocent children for at least twenty years.

The Week in Congress.

WASHINGTON, June 30.—Appropriation bills will occupy most if not the entire attention of the senate during the week. The Indian, District of Columbia and legislative appropriation bills will come up. The senate will probably adjourn on Thursday next to meet again at 12 o'clock Monday. In the house the first three days of this week will be devoted to the consideration of the election bill, which will be placed on the calendar on Wednesday, and Thursday will be set aside for the consideration of the national bankruptcy bill or possibly the compound lard bill. An adjournment will probably be taken on Thursday until Monday.

Bulfour and Temperance Reform.

LONDON, June 30.—At a banquet of the ministers at the Crystal palace last night in honor of the fifty-second anniversary of the coronation of Queen Victoria Mr. Balfour in a speech prophesied that the obstruction of the Gladstonians to the compensation bill would result in the shelving of temperance reform for twenty years. The government had, he asserted, redeemed all its promises, and it looked forward with confidence to a new lease of power.

New Yorkers Who Won Prizes.

BERLIN, June 30.—In the rifle shooting in honor of the visiting Americans, which took place at Hanover, the following New Yorkers were successful in winning prizes: Field target (Germany), Zimmermann, second prize. Rifle target (Hanover), Waltzer, first prize; Zimmermann, second. Hunting target, Stein, first prize. Zimmermann and Stein stood next, and Krauss, Busse, Waltzer, Zimmermann, Simon, Siebung, Stein and Schroeder won cups.

He Was Fatally Injured.

LANCASTER, Pa., June 30.—At North Bend, Saturday night, a westbound freight train on the Pennsylvania railroad was derailed and eight cars were wrecked. The Pacific express ran into the wreck and its engine was smashed. Traffic was delayed several hours. Millard Hilton, a section hand, was struck under a freight train while going to the wreck and sustained fatal injuries.

Connecticut's Population.

HARTFORD, Conn., June 30.—Returns received from the census enumeration show that towns having in 1880 about one-fifth of the population of Connecticut give an increase of nearly 175,000. The state will therefore retain its full representation in Congress, and not lose one representative as was reported recently.

A Negro Church Roof Caves in and Many Are Horribly Mutilated.

GALLATIN, Tenn., June 30.—A terrible tornado passed over the northern part of this city last evening, lasting about five minutes, uprooting trees, lifting roofs and tearing awnings and signs from their fastenings. The African Methodist church was blown to pieces and the roof caved in on the congregation. Their screams and cries could be heard a great distance.

Ten were taken from the debris, and two were so horribly crushed by the roof and falling timbers that they are dying. Grandville Bryers, the minister, was badly crushed in his pulpit.

Among the wounded and crippled are: Ann North and Mrs. Mary Hoffman; both are dying. Gilbert Woodford and child, Mary Horton, Mary Lowry, a child of Nannie Sawyers, Granville Beech, G. Brown and others.

All the doctors of the town were soon upon the scene and administered to the dying and wounded. The church was filled, and how any escaped is a miracle.

Gallatin's public school was damaged by part of the front blowing in, but the loss is not serious. Fencing and trees were swept away by the storm, and in many private residences carpets were blown from floors and furniture smashed into kindling wood.

No other loss of life is reported. The tornado took a southwesterly course, and very heavy rain fell during the time.

A Cyclone in Michigan.

HILLSDALE, Mich., June 30.—A cyclone struck Reading Sunday afternoon and several buildings were blown down, one man killed and several severely hurt.

SHE KEPT A BURGLAR AT BAY.

Thrilling Experience of a Young Woman at a Lonely Telegraph Station.

ERIE, Pa., June 30.—Miss Ida Wakely, night telegraph operator at Swanville Station, on the Nickel Plate road, was the heroine of a thrilling encounter on Saturday night. Shortly after midnight she heard some one at the door, and a second later a villainous face appeared at the window.

The fellow demanded admittance, which was refused. He left, but came back with a large lump of coal, which he threw against the window, crushing the lights. The man then made a dash for the opening. Miss Wakely flashed her revolver in his face and ordered him to retreat. He stopped to parley, saying: "You wouldn't shoot." But the young woman took deliberate aim and the would be burglar withdrew his head from the opening in the window, but he did not leave.

While the woman held the deperado, who had drawn a knife, at bay, she used the other hand to call the next station where a train was ddetracked, and to her joy she caught the operator, whom she informed of her dilemma. The engine was detached and with the crew aboard ran to the young woman's rescue. While the crew were coming the burglar tried to induce her to hand out the contents of the safe and made blood curdling threats. When the engine with the crew arrived a short curve the burglar ran away in time to escape lynching. The exciting episode was too much for Miss Wakely, and when relieved she fell in a faint.

To Prohibit Public Meetings.

LONDON, June 30.—It has been reported several times recently that Home Secretary Matthews had decided to take steps to prohibit public meetings in the parks and particularly in Hyde park, and the rumor is again in circulation with some appearance of foundation. In order to create a popular sentiment against Mr. Matthews' alleged intention, which the home secretary will deny, the leaders of the Irish party and the workingmen's unions propose to organize parades in various sections of London every Sunday and march by different routes to Hyde park, where they will hold meetings to agitate the question of the right of public meetings.

A SAILOR-SOLDIER.

THE ENERGY AND DARING OF VOLUNTEER GEN. WILLIAM NELSON.

A Naval Officer, He Volunteers on Land and Helps Hold Kentucky—His Work at Shiloh and in Bragg's Invasion—A Martyr to Discipline.

[Copyright by American Press Association.]

HERE was no episode of the civil war more startling or more tragic than the killing of Gen. William Nelson, of the United States army, by his fellow soldier, Gen. Jeff C. Davis, at Louisville, Sept. 29, 1862. Gen. Nelson was a soldier of whom the country and the army had great expectations, based upon what he had already achieved. He had made a record in the navy before the war. He was a hero in build and in mental caliber. His six feet four inches of frame carried gracefully 300 pounds, well distributed, and his broad and his chest gave out what was needed to complete a man of giant mold. Added to these were resolution and courage and an overmastering contempt for petty obstacles such as ordinary men stand and gaze at at a critical moment until they rise like mountains in the pathway. This quality characterized every act of his in his career in Buell's Army of the Ohio, and it was this, carried to the extreme in a crisis which certainly called for extreme measures, which led to the fatal affair with his brother soldier.

When Buell's army was on the way from Nashville, to unite with the remainder of Halleck's forces, which was moving up the river before the battle of Shiloh, the bridge over Duck river was in flames and the enemy in force on the other side. Time was lost in constructing bridges, and, although two were nearly completed when the waters began to fall, Nelson put his division over by forcing just as soon as his men could gain a footing. In this way he gained the advance of Buell's column, and the same impetuosity carried his division to the field of Shiloh on the afternoon of the first day of the battle, April 6, in response to Grant's appeal to come and "save the day" to us.

Nelson, while marching to the rendezvous at Savannah, nine miles from Grant's camp, some days before, received word from Grant that he was not hasten his march, because there were no vessels at hand to put him across the Tennessee. Nevertheless, he had pressed on to the Savannah bluffs by morning; Halleck had a right to expect him there at that time if he needed him, and he took no advantage of the leeway given. On that day, Sunday, a heavy march of ninety miles in less than six days, reaching Savannah on Saturday evening, the 5th. Gen. Grant visited the camp and told Nelson that he would send boats to Savannah early the following week and bring the division to his own position at Pittsburg Landing. Grant was acting as second in command to Halleck, who had not yet arrived. But on Sunday morning the sound of firing reached Nelson at Savannah, and it came from Grant's camp on the river, nine miles above. The distance by land was more than nine miles; the roads were execrable, as mentioned, and besides the floods had washed away the guide marks and wiped out the paths in many places. To move artillery on these routes would be impossible, but Nelson and his infantry in motion, got the best guides the region afforded and hastened on the scene of action. A fierce march brought him to the river opposite the battle field and his advance brigade was in time to aid in repelling the last desperate assault, of the Confederates on that disastrous Sunday. For his services in this campaign, which included some most brilliant fighting on the 6th, Nelson was made a major general.

Several months after Shiloh the Union army of the west was compelled to retrace the steps made to the defense of Louisville. This was Nelson's native state, and it was owing not a little to his eloquence, influence and energy that the sentiment of secession had been suppressed there in 1861 and Kentucky retained in the Union. Nelson received orders to repair to Kentucky, take command of troops assembling at Morgan, Forrest, Bragg, Kirby Smith and Humphrey Marshall, who with separate Confederate commands were pressing in from different directions. The chief interest was in Louisville. Early in September Frankfort, Lexington and the whole "Blue Grass" region were in the possession of the Confederates and Morgan's daring riders were picketing on the outskirts of Cincinnati.

A new department of the Union army had been created, with Gen. H. G. Wright in command as Nelson's superior. Wright remained at Cincinnati, leaving Nelson to look to Louisville, the point toward which the heaviest columns of the enemy were pressing under Bragg and Kirby Smith. Buell's army had not yet arrived. In such an hour the fiery energy of Nelson burned his brightest, and he set to work to organize for local defense. There was not a moment to lose and no time to be stayed on ceremony, and Nelson was just the man to do all and to dare all in an hour so full of startling developments. One of the officers sent down from Wright's headquarters to observe under Nelson was the Indiana soldier, Gen. Jeff C. Davis, who had some time before left the field on sick leave. His volunteered for the emergency, reported to Nelson and was intrusted with the organization of volunteer soldiers to defend Louisville. It was a critical time, Buell's army being still further away than the Cumberland, and Louisville at the mercy of invading hordes. Some days after Davis had been installed in his work Nelson said to him:

"Well, Davis, how are you getting on with your command?"

"I don't know?" answered Davis.

"How many regiments have you organized?" continued Nelson, not noticing the flippant manner of his subordinate.

"I don't know," repeated Davis.

"How many companies have you?" asked Nelson, to which Davis replied in the same heedless tone, "I don't know."

"Did you ever know?" said Nelson rising from his seat. "I am disappointed in you, Gen. Davis; I selected you for the work because you are an officer of the regular army, but I see I have made a mistake."

Davis now arose excitedly and said: "Gen. Nelson, I am a regular soldier and I demand the treatment due to me as a general officer."

After summoning a witness from an adjoining room, Nelson began: "Dismissed from you the courtesy due my rank."

"I will treat you as you deserve," replied Nelson. "You have disappointed me; you have been unfaithful to the trust which I imposed in you and I shall relieve you at once." In a few seconds he added: "You are relieved from duty here and will proceed to Cincinnati and report to Gen. Wright."

"You have no authority to order me," said Davis. Pushed beyond endurance Nelson turned to his adjutant general and said: "Captain, if Gen. Davis does not leave the city by 9 o'clock to-night give instructions to the provost marshal to see that he is put across the Ohio."

This was taking the bull by the horns with a vengeance. Nelson's training had been on the deck of a man-of-war, where discipline is the first law and insubordination a crime to be met with instant snuffing out by the most heroic methods. Here this discipline of the sea and prerogatives of patriot had seen a time when the formalities of the service and the considerations due to rank should wait on the exigencies of the war one. The value of an hour was simply incalculable, and many times twenty-four hours had passed since Davis entered upon his duties and he had nothing to report in the way of progress. There was something, too, behind his conduct which doubtless Nelson hesitated, for it is now evident that Davis had stood all along on the ground that not Nelson but Wright was his superior officer.

Gen. Wright gave a new assignment to Davis and he left Louisville again. In a few days Gen. Buell arrived in the city in person, thus superseding Nelson, and Gen. Wright ordered Nelson to report to Louisville and report to the new chief. But for this circumstance, very unfortunate, and it would seem uncalled for, the venturesome sailor-soldier might have lived to round out his career by brilliant leadership during the country's perils.

The headquarters at Louisville were in the Galt house, and there Davis and Nelson would be certain to come into collision. On the morning of Sept. 29 Nelson passed from the breakfast room to the main hall of the house, stopped to the clerk's desk and asked a question and turned about and leaned upon the railing of the counter to await the arrival of Gen. Buell. In turning he faced an assembly of people, military and civilians, among them Governor O. P. Morton, of Indiana, and Gen. Davis, was in Morton's company. Davis went toward Nelson and charged him with having insulted him at their last meeting. Nelson told him to go away, but instead of doing so, Davis, relying on the support of his friend Morton, he pressed up and renewed the demand for satisfaction. Nelson, using an epithet of contempt, again ordered Davis away, and said: "I don't want anything to do with you." During this excitement Davis had been nervously fingering the pockets of the hotel cards in his hand, and drawing near to Nelson he shot it into his face with a sharp snap of the thumb. This was met by a backhanded slap on the face by Nelson with the disengaged hand, and he addressed to Morton, "Did you come here, sir, to see me insulted?"

"No, sir," replied Morton, and Nelson walked away toward his room on the office floor.

Davis turned to one of his companions and said: "I have killed him," and to others: "I have no quarrel with Nelson, but I have to explain his motive, but it is probable that he had determined not to fight with Davis and was on his way to report the circumstance to his chief. He reached the staircase, approaching it from the opposite direction, and was about to turn and ascend when Davis came reading into the corridor from the main hall, pistol in hand, and stood face to face with Nelson at the foot of the stairs. The latter made no hostile movement, but Davis fired a shot and Nelson kept on upstairs. He reached the second floor, and about half way between the landing and Buell's room he fell. Several spectators who saw the shooting followed Nelson up stairs, and when he fell they lifted him to the nearest room. Among those on the spot was Lewis Kenteckian, Gen. Thomas L. Crittenden, who knelt over the stricken soldier and said: "Nelson, are you badly hurt?"

"Yes, I am killed," was the answer. Subsequently he asked to be baptised, and within an hour after the shooting the lion hearted soldier was dead. The ball had pierced the heart, or very near it, and though small had done a fatal work.

So passed away in his prime—he was 37—an American who might have fairly rivaled his great English namesake in winning the highest martial glory.

A HOUSE ON A HILL TOP.

STEPHEN B. ELKINS' MAGNIFICENT HOME IN WEST VIRGINIA.

When Completed It Will Be One of the Handsomest Country Residences in the Land—Neighbors on the Heights Nearby—Superb Scenery.

[Copyright by American Press Association.]

On the southern slopes of the Alleghanies overlooking the historic Tygart valley, and right in the midst of a wealth of superb mountain scenery, Hon. Stephen B. Elkins is erecting for himself one of the finest country residences in the entire south. It is located at the terminus of the West Virginia Central road in a small town named after himself in Randolph county, W. Va. It stands on the summit of a steep hill rising some five hundred feet above the valley of the Tygart, wherein the town of Elkins lies. On the right are three similar hills, the first of which is to be occupied by a magnificent house to be built by ex-Senator Davis, father-in-law of Mr. Elkins; the next will be built upon by Hon. J. C. Campbell, the present governor of Ohio, an intimate friend of the Davis and Elkins families; and the one on the extreme right is being prepared for the erection upon it of a fine summer residence for Hon. R. C. Kerens, of St. Louis, who has also been interested in the many enterprises of Messrs. Elkins and Davis. These four hills form the northern boundary of the Tygart valley.

WEST VIEW OF THE SOUTH FRONT.
[From a photograph taken especially for this publication.]

Through the southern end of this flows the Tygart river, a broad, handsome and navigable stream. Tall mountains, clothed to their summits with a luxuriant growth of forest trees, hem in the valley on all sides. At present the nearest railroad point connects of some five or six hundred people and the houses are of the primitive frontier style, built of rough boards and the interiors decorated by large sheets of coarse brown wrapping paper tacked on the walls.

Mr. Elkins' house is reached by a long carriage drive from the station along the principal avenue of the town and through an ornamental park which is being laid out on the slope of the hill upon which the mansion stands. The building itself looks at a distance not unlike an old baronial castle, with ramparts and towers and gables. A closer inspection, however, reveals a house of the most modern order. The ramparts resolve themselves into a wide gallery or porch floor and the towers into ornamental additions to large and spacious rooms. It is an extensive three storied structure, occupying a space 100 feet wide by 150 feet long, exclusive of the kitchen extension on the left. The whole house, inside and out, with the exception of the Vermont slate on the roofs, is built of material obtained in the immediate neighborhood.

The basement is of stone procured from the Chest river quarries; the first story is of clapboards and the second and third of round and square shingles dipped in creosote and arranged in alternating rows. The south front, which faces the valley, has a large round bay window on the left corner with a cone shaped roof relieved by small dormer windows. In the corner is a round tower with a flat palisaded roof reached by a spiral staircase whose doorway is in a little extinguisher shaped turret. A fine view of the valley and surrounding mountains can be obtained from this point. The back entrance to the building is at the base of this tower. On the extreme right is the kitchen extension, a two story building, the first floor containing the kitchen proper, pantries and laundry, and the second and the floor above their sleeping and bath rooms.

The north side, which is really the front of the house, contains the main entrance. A huge porte cochere extends across the carriage drive to the doorway, with a series of dormer windows, gables, turrets and galleries gives a very picturesque effect to the sky line.

The interior is not nearly completed. Everything is, however, to be finished within a couple of months. When done the house will have cost about $100,000. It contains eighty-eight rooms. In the basement are the boiler, pump and laundry rooms, with five immense storage cellars. There are twenty-four rooms on the first floor, thirty-two on the second and twenty-four on the third. The house, from top to bottom, will be finished in natural hard woods.

EAST VIEW OF THE SOUTH FRONT.
[From a photograph taken especially for this publication.]

Entering under the porte cochere the porch floor is reached by a short flight of steps. This is an immense gallery running around the house, 260 feet long and from 12 to 24 feet wide, surrounded by a stone balustrade. The main entrance is through a handsomely tiled vestibule, opening into a hall. The two inner doors have mirrors on their inside panels. On either side is a small room to be used for the accommodation of riding wraps, rugs and whips. The hall extends the entire depth of the house and is 21 feet wide by 64 feet long. At the further end it is lighted by an enormous bay window with five openings. It is to be finished in quartered white oak wainscoting, paneled and molded and reaching to the lofty ceiling, which is itself to be divided into panels by fifteen hanging beams carved and finted. These ceiling panels will be of embossed leather in green and gold, finished at the edges with delicately tinted water colors. In the middle on the right side is an open fireplace of marble 15 feet long by 9 feet high—a small room in itself. An ornamental oak frame surrounds the marble facing, carved in a design of fleur de lis, while above the mantel are three ornamental panels of antique carvings. Six handsome torch lamps will light the hall at night.

Just at the entrance on the left, and separated from the hall by sliding doors, is the dining room. This is of considerable size, and sixty or seventy persons can easily find place at the table. It is finished like the hall in quartered white oak, and has a beamed ceiling. Entrance to marble set in a frame of wrought iron, with mica and gold panels and gilt fleur-de-lis ornaments. Directly opposite across the hall is the parlor, finished in bird's eye maple and lighted by French doors down opening on to the porch. The walls will be covered with embossed paper of two shades of cream. Connected with this room by sliding doors is the library. It is a large chamber 42 by 23 feet, and the owner will be covered with book shelves. At the east end is a huge fireplace, the same size as that in the hall. It is fitted with a hood, supported by six carved and fluted columns. The mantel, which is of marble, is artistically carved with shields and scrolls bearing inscriptions from the Latin poets. Two flying cherubs are perched on each corner of the hood. The walls are to be covered with embossed leather in gold and green.

On the left of the hall, underneath the stairway, is the children's room. This is finished, ceiling and walls, with polished red oak. The marble fireplace has a carved frieze representing cupids at play. The stairway is very wide and will be of quartered white oak with heavy turned banisters. At the head of the stairs on the second floor is an immense guest bedchamber directly over the hall and similarly lighted by five windows. The open fireplace is recessed and decorated with tiles. On the west side is another large bedroom of an octagon shape, with connecting dressing and bath rooms.

It is finished in cream colors and the ceiling is frescoed in lines and with corner decorations. The big fireplace has marble facings and has a wrought iron frame with mica panels similar to the one in the dining room. This is to be Mrs. Elkins' chamber. The dressing room is painted entirely in pink tones, ornamented on ceiling and walls by gar-lands of delicate wild rose. Mrs. Elkins has also reserved for her use another suite of rooms on the opposite side of the house finished in blue and gold. Mr. Elkins' room is done in a French gray, picked out with gold. All the rooms on this floor have open fireplaces, with mantels nine feet high in the Elizabethan style, with fluted columns and large mirrors.

On the third floor is a large room, 26 by 28 feet, with an octagon ceiling. This is to be used as a gymnasium for the boys or, if occasion requires, as a ballroom. Walls and ceiling are covered with polished red oak in panels, with heavy cornices and mouldings. At one end, occupying the entire width of the room, is an immense open fireplace of marble, with a comfortable seat on either side and a rising tier of three shelves above the mantel. On the right of this room is a square recess to be used as a billiard room. Seven bedchambers open on to this ballroom, the ceilings of which are all tinted in different water colors, with wall papers to match.

On one side is a small room leading up to the tower. Half way up is the tank room, containing a water tank with a capacity of 3,600 gallons. The water to supply the house is pumped from the river, three-quarters of a mile away, to a high point in the woods into a 60,000 gallon reservoir, and from there conducted in pipes to the tank in the tower. A spiral staircase lined with beech leads up to the roof of the tower.

The furniture will be made of natural woods to match the finish of the rooms. No carpets will be used.

The kitchen extension is finished throughout in red oak paneling, with the exception of the butler's pantry, which is done in cherry.

HENRY E. ELAND

The Princess of Wales' Gown.

The Princess of Wales, on a recent visit to the Royal Academy at London, was arrayed in a costume that elicited much comment. Here is the description:

"She wore a dress of golden brown summer cloth; her skirt, which was long and arrayed with no fullness in front or at the sides and perfectly straight folded at the back, was bordered all round by a band of black velvet surmounted by a narrow line of similar material edged with gold braid. The bodice was outlined in a corresponding way, and the sleeves were almost flat on the shoulder and finished with cuffs of black velvet and gold braid. She wore a bonnet of velvet with satin surfaced foliage and varied harmonious tones of brown. The short velvet strings were fastened with a diamond pin. A long, black, curled ostrich feather boa completed the princess' costume."
